On the subject of Newlove, who has won all five WISC races, Tonelli said, "Our girls are definitely after Tracy, when they finish they ask for their own time and then for hers. I know they'd love to beat her, but what counts is the team. That's what our league is all about. Our girls have been taught team skiing, and it's paying off."

Once again it was a team effort that was the key to success, and as the Minutewomen packed for home one could hardly blame them if they had visions of a second consecutive WISC championship.

JV hoopwomen look for fourth win today

The UMass junior varsity women's basketball team will be out to improve its 3-2 record when it faces the New Hampshire JV's at 4 p.m. today at NOPE. The Minutewomen are coming off an impressive 74-32 victory over Fitchburg State Saturday.

The junior Minutewomen have been inconsistent in their last three games. Two were losses, one coming against Springfield College, and the other against Bridgewater State.

"We played very well against Springfield", said UMass coach Pam Rietschel. "They had a terrific height advantage over us, but the girls played good offense and good defense to keep the game close". The final score was a respectable 77-68.

But the Bridgewater game was a different story. The JV's lost by a 63-46 score. "I was disappointed in the game they played against Bridgewater," Rietschel said. "We just didn't play well".

The game against Fitchburg was a turnaround. The Minutewomen executed well at both ends of the court. Toby Mead came off the bench to lead the women with 19 points.

"We played well at both ends of the court," Rietschel said. "We shut off all their baseline drives, and played very good defense". Rietschel singled out Lynsie Wickman for her strong defensive play in the game.

Beth O'Connell scored 36 points in the three games, despite the fact that she played very little in the romp over Bridgewater. O'Connell leads the team in scoring with an average of a little under 15 points per game. She also leads the squad in rebounds.

Puckmen poised for Yellowjackets

The American International College hockey team brings a perfect road record into Orr Rink this afternoon when it faces UMass in a 4:00 game.

The Yellow Jackets, who have an overall record of 15-4 and an 11-4 mark in Division II, are 7-0 away from home this season. They play their home games at Smead Arena in Springfield, a state rink located less than a mile from the school's campus. Like the Minutemen, AIC was a spectator during post-season play last year but is hoping to be active in it this time around.

"We're looking forward to tonight's game," said Minuteman coach Jack Canniff. "AIC is a natural rival being so close to us and is trying to grab down a playoff spot just like we are."

Canniff isn't setting any goals for his club, which faces all Division II opponents as it heads down the home stretch.

"You can't do that because you don't know how the other teams are going to do," he said. "You just have to take the games one at a time and see what happens."

The Minutemen are 7-9-1 overall and 7-7-1 in Division II. They are coming off a trip from Maine, which saw them lose to Bowdoin, 7-3, and come back the next night to down Colby, 3-1.

The puckmen have some injury problems as Bob McCormack and Paul Hurley are still hurting. Bobby White, who sustained a charley horse in the Colby game, may be ready to go this afternoon.

"I wish we were a little healthier going into this game," said Canniff.

Top player for the Yellow Jackets is forward Tom Mullen, who was All-ECAC last season. Ray Belise has been guarding the cage.

BLUELINE BANTER: The Frank Snow-Mike Merchant-Carl Burns line has been the most consistent of any for UMass this year. The trio leads the team in scoring with Merchant on top with 21 points followed by Burns with 19 and Snow with 14.... AIC bombed the Minutemen last year 8-1, in Springfield.... Boston Bruin forward Dave Forbes is an alumnus of AIC.

Matters makeup Maritime meet; should prove to be a wild one

By BOB HASKELL

Better late than never. Those words of wisdom must have been uttered by some sage who was referring to the UMass wrestling team's match tonight against the grapplers from Mass. Maritime Academy.

Originally, this match-up of two rugged New England teams was scheduled for February 5th, but your friend and mine, Mother Nature, had her own ideas. Snow use crying about it now, but that familiar white shroud settled on us all, forcing the match to be held tonight at 6:00 in Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

And what a match it should be! The cadets are rated fourth in New England, while the MInutemen have won four of their last five matches. This spectacle might even register on the Richter scale.

Mass. Maritime boasts the services of two-time New England champion Leo Dunham at 190 lbs. UMass displays the imposing Heavyweight New England champ (three times), Dennis Fenton.

The Maritime Academy will also unveil two of the finest high school wrestlers produced by Massachusetts in the last few years. Many UMass students are probably familiar with Mitch Murray of Brockton and Mike Mclarney of Chelmsford.

Murray will have to produce one of his best efforts if he is to contend with UMass' Larry Otsuka at 134 lbs. Otsuka is 10-2 on the season, and has been one of the most reliable members of Coach Dave Amato's young squad.

According to Amato, the key to the match is momentum. "If we get some good performances in the early matches, we're going to be tought to beat."

One man to watch, according to Amato, is Steve Jabaut, recently switched to 142 lbs. from 150. Jabaut looked very strong over the weekend, and the Minutemen hope he can continue his stellar performances.

Other starters for UMass will be Dave Daly (118 lbs.), Pete Sachon (126 lbs.), Tim Fallon (150 lbs.), Kevin Griffin (158 lbs.), Dana Cormier (167 lbs.), Mike Rley (177 lbs.), and Bob Spaulding (190 lbs.).

One correction: Saturday's match with Yale will be AWAY, not home as previously reported.

Rimwomen host NH

The 12-3 UMass women's basketball team returns to Curry Hicks Cage this afternoon to tangle with the Wildcats of New Hampshire in a 4:00 game.

New Hampshire, like many New England schools, does not play as extensive a schedule as UMass, but the Wildcats do play many of the same opponents as the Minutewomen. Their record is 4-3, but New Hampshire lost to recent UMass victim Bridgewater State.

The Wildcats match up well with the UMass height, as only 6' center Nancy Hall presents a problem. New Hampshire is led by co-captains Claire Pyne and Lawrence's Jean Giarusso. North Easton's Maura McCarthy is the only other Wildcat from Massachusetts.

The Minutewomen will be bolstered by the return of center Lu-Ann Fletcher, but she may not see too much action against the Wildcats. Coach Mary Ann Ozdarski does not want to rush her leading rebounder into the lineup too soon with towering Southern Connecticut coming to the Cage Saturday night.

Another major concern for the Minutewomen is post-season tournament play. The Massachusetts state playoffs are only two weeks away, while the Eastern regionals are a week later. UMass can hardly afford to be without Fletcher for these games.

There are still four tough games before post-season play, however, and as Ozdarski has said all season, the Minutewomen cannot look past any game.

"It's coming down to the end of the season," Ozdarski said, "but we still have to take every game as it comes along."

She added that the Minutewomen have to peak at playoff time. "If we haven't eliminated our mistakes by then," she said, "it will be too late, and we certainly do have the personnel."

The coach has stressed fundamentals and aggressive play at both ends of the floor all season. These last few games will largely determine the team's attitude for the playoffs.

Hoopsters shoot for fifth straight

By BOB HIGGINS

Coming off its two biggest wins and playing its best basketball of the season, the UMass basketball team gets a bit of a breather tonight when the University of New Hampshire enters the Cage for an 8:00 encounter.

The Minutemen will be seeking their fourth consecutive win, and their eighth in nine games. But now they will be attempting to extend that win streak without their hottest player of late, Mike Pyatt.

Pyatt, who pulled a hamstring against Rhode Island Saturday night, is now up and walking around. "We hope to get him back next week some time," said UMass coach Jack Leaman yesterday. Leaman added that Brad Johnson will take Pyatt's place in the starting lineup.

UNH, enjoying its best season in three years, beat Northeastern Monday night to up its record to 11-11. "They're a solid basketball team," said Leaman before his squad's practice yesterday.

The Minutemen had a rather easy time of it back in December when they downed the Wildcats 80-67 at Durham. Leaman went to his bench in that game, and backup center Len Kohlhaas came through with 15 points. Derick Claiborne led all scorers in that game with 21 points.

"We got off running early with our press," said Leaman about that game. "We're gonna start with the press in all our games at the Cage from now on to try and get the crowd going," said Leaman.

The Wildcats are led in scoring and rebounding by 6-6 forward Pete Laskaris. Laskaris is scoring at a 15.6 points per game average, and pulling down 7.7 rebounds per contest.

Following Laskaris in the scoring column is 6-2 guard Keith Dickson (13.5 per game), 6-9 center Tom Cavanaugh (12.1) and freshman guard Paul Dufour, a fine outside shooter hitting for 11.7 per game.

UNH's second-leading rebounder is Steve Singelais, who moved to forward this year after two years as a guard. Pyatt shot off on Singelais back in December, and tonight Johnson will have that task. Johnson, at 6-4, is also a guard who's playing forward, "so we'll be matching strength against strength", according to Leaman.

The Wildcats' number a last-second 63-62 win over Davidson in the Charlotte Invitational Tournament among their biggest wins of the season. UNH has pulled off no major upsets, however.

One of the keys to this UNH squad is its fine shooting (49.8 per cent from the floor). If the Wildcats are cold, it could be a very easy night for the Minutemen.

"If we play well, we should be in good shape," said Leaman.

Aquamen taken for a nose dive as Coast Guard wins easily

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

Dropping its season's record to 3-6, the UMass men's swim team became the 10th victim of the year for the swimmers of Coast Guard last night, 84-28.

"They were as strong as I expected," said UMass coach Bei Melamed. "They have a powerful team and they don't even let up for the easy teams as was the case tonight."

The UMass mermen had a tough time as they were able to capture only three out of a possible 13 events. One of those wins came in the 1-meter diving event where Jim Antonino took the top spot with only a 1.45 point bulge over his opponent, Kaye of Coast Guard.

Antonino's diving performance along with that of UMass freshman Dan Conley drew praise from Melamed who was glad to see some of the high scores that were given to some individual dives. "Consistency is the name of the game," Melamed said as he spoke of the diving in general.

Junior Russ Yarworth, weakened by an illness, swam only one event, the 50-yard freestyle, and finished first with a time of 22.7. The final UMass win came when senior co-captain Dave Boucher paced the pack in the 200-yard breaststroke event as he turned in a time of 2:21.2.

The UMass loss upped Coast Guard's record to 10-0 on the year and stretched its overall unbeaten string to 41 since 1974.

"This is the most powerful team we've ever had," said Coast Guard mentor Charles Dennis. "We had nine swimmers turn in their personal bests tonight and if we can get by Rhode Island, we can probably remain undefeated for the rest of the season." Dennis went on to say that he has a somewhat easier schedule than that of UMass and would probably not have an unbeaten record if his swimmers were to go against some of the top powers in New England that are included on the Minuteman schedule.

The next meet for the mermen will be this Friday when they travel to Storrs, to swim against the Huskies of UConn in a 4:00 p.m. contest.

JV hoopers suffer with paltry foes

The men's JV basketball season began almost four months ago as newly-hired head coach Ray Ricketts and a crew of 50 anxious candidates strode onto the Cage's freshly finished hardwood court.

An air of enthusiasm generated by the optimism of a new coach and talent just off the playgrounds pervaded the building. By tryouts end 10 players had been selected and the business of basketball was at hand.

Now, three quarters of the way through its season, three players shorter, and seemingly years wiser, the UMass JV's venture onto the Cage's court with barely enough bodies to hold a legitimate practice.

The enthusiasm of the coaches and players remains, but somehow the thrill of playing basketball on the collegiate level before a few thousand screaming fans has been tarnished.

It just hasn't been fun.

Two games were cancelled from the already meager nine-game schedule, and two of the remaining games could best be described as ridiculous. Four months after the start of its season the team has performed in just three games that could be termed worthy of play.

What's happened to the JV basketball program? Is it worthy of notice or has it gone the way of minor league baseball and the corner grocery store?

The JV program was once the proving ground for unseasoned freshman talent. It gave the yearlings an opportunity to play a decent brand of basketball without the pressure of varsity competition.

But in 1974 the NCAA changed all that by declaring freshmen eligible for varsity competition.

"It used to be that kids played three or more sports in high school, so it took a year for a player to develop into varsity caliber," said Ricketts. "Nowadays kids are specializing in one sport, and when they arrive here as freshmen they're capable of playing varsity ball."

Since the inception of the freshman rule, schools across the country have dropped their JV squads in favor of carrying 15 players on a team. UMass is no longer able to schedule JV-varsity doubleheaders against such schools as UConn and URI, simply because their JV programs don't exist.

Another factor in the JV's demise was the move of UMass into the more esteemed ECBL, and subsequent scheduling of games at the Springfield Civic Center. Home at the Cage, the JV's had always been considered as the Ed McMahon of the basketball program. The warmup act, a mood-setter for the crowd, before the more prestigious headline act.

The women's varsity basketball team has adopted that role now, as it did last week at the Civic Center before the men's game against Rutgers.

Thus the question of dates and opponents plagued Ricketts when he set out to create an adequate schedule for his team. By the time he arrived on campus local teams such as Amherst and Springfield had already booked a full schedule, making the call to Westover AFB a necessity.

The call proved to be a bomb (pardon the pun) as the first meeting's score indicates, 129-35. Need I say more!

The question now becomes should UMass even bother to support a JV team, or should it economize? A switch to a 15-man team and 12-man traveling squad seems inevitable.

"I hope not," Ricketts said. "There's always the chance of finding a walk-on, a sleeper who can help the team."

A commitment must be made now, however. If the program is to continue it must be upgraded. Another season such as this one is unfair to the coach, players, and fans.

SATF bill is passed

By BRAD GOVERMAN
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate voted last night to override Senate Co-Presidents Paul M. Cronin and Jay A. Martus' veto ot the $7 increase in the Student Activities Tax. The senate voted to accept the $7 increase by a 53-15 margin with five abstentions.

The $7 increase passed after a motion proposed by Martus to amend the increase to $4 was defeated. Martus said a $4 increase would be a sufficient amount to cover living cost increases, but the senate would have to use a "bite the bullet" budgeting policy to deal with the $86,000 deficiency left by the $4 increase.

Martus added that a senate vote in favor of the $7 increase would be unresponsive to their constituents.

"I have talked to a lot of people and there is a lot of sentiment against the fee increase," Martus said.

Senator Brian Harvey, speaking against the $4 amendment, said without the full $7 increase, groups having no political tentacles in the Senate "will get the shaft."

"We must raise the fee $7 because we'll never figure out how to cut what groups if we're faced with that situation," Harvey said.

Senate Treasurer Thomas Kerrins, author of the $7 increase proposal, pointed out that in order to run Fiscal year 1978 operations with an amount equal to this year's budget a $9 increase would be needed. "We are already cutting ourselves with the $7 increase so we will still be required to work more efficiently," Kerrins said.

After the $7 increase was passed, the senate moved to drop impeachment proceedings against the co-Presidents, Martus and Cronin.

In other business, a motion was presented by Kwaku Saunders speaking on behalf of Craemen Gethers and Earl Brown. The motion stated that the Student Senate require every RSO funded film group to precede their films with a film short on the cases of Brown and Gethers for the purpose of educating students on the case. The film was viewed by the Senate and the motion passed.

Also at last night's meeting, a bill co-authored by Senate Speaker Brian DeLima, Senator Susan Bermingham, and SOP spokesman Bill Bluestein, read "that the Undergraduate Student Senate's support the following policy position as it pertains to student unionization."

"We must now demand, as we have in the past, university recognition of our right to collective bargain. That we request the faculty union to support our right to collective bargain by:

1. in prenegotiations over ground rules of faculty bargaining, the faculty could request that as an alternative to student participation at the table students should be recognized by the administration for purposes of direct student-administration bargaining.

2. the faculty union can de facto recognize the student association as a union by entering into faculty-student bargaining.

3. the faculty union can lend public support to the idea of student-administration bargaining and recognition of the student union, and so forth."

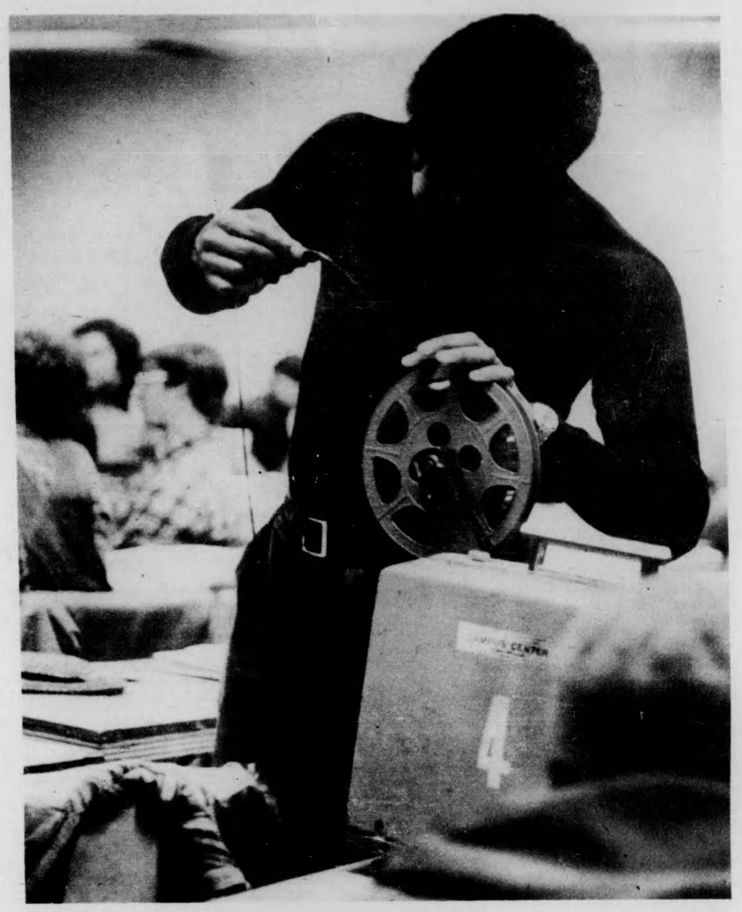
The bill also proposed that a task force be established composed of SGA officers, senators, and representatives from area governments, the Student Organizing Project, and the Student Center for Educational Research.

It was noted by one senator in the past these agencies had been working incongruously but with the establishment of a task force these agencies could work together to recruit student support of unionization.

Speaking on behalf of the proposal, Senator Bermingham pointed out that UMass was far ahead of the rest of the nation in the movement for greater student rights.

"If we win, our victory will have great impact and implications to other schools all over the country," said Bermingham.

There will be a table set up next Tues., Wed., and Thurs. in the Campus Center Concourse to assess support of student interest in the unionization move.



Earl Brown readies the projector, which showed a documentary film to the members of the Undergraduate Student Senate about the basic facts and misunderstandings surrounding the Brown-Gethers case. The senate then passed a proposal that all RSO funded groups should precede their films on the case with this short documentary. (Staff photo by Dale Griswold)

Vietnam needs aid—Weiss

By ROBIN COSTELLO
Collegian Staff

"I am concerned with the Vietnam War and the fact that all of Vietnam is in a state of reconstruction... But more than that, I am concerned with out responsibility towards a reconciliation to normalize relations with the state of Vietnam," said Cora Weiss to 100 persons yesterday in Mahar Auditorium.

Weiss, national coordinator of Friendship, a people-to-people aid organization for Vietnam, was the first American to visit unified Vietnam. She presented a series of slides taken during her most recent visit, in which she portrayed a bleak picture of the conditions of post-war Vietnam. She also introduced a different aspect of the war's results, "an escalation of women and their increased consciousness of their roles in society."

Following the informative and inspiring slide show, which captured the Vietnamese people and countryside, Weiss answered questions from the audience and concluded with another series of slides taken during her recent trip to Cuba.

During the Vietnam war it was necessary for women to "assume all responsibilities that use to be divided." Today, as a result, all women in Vietnam work; whether it be in the fields planting rice, or heavy construction work; joining the armed forces, or actively involved in government. Women also form the majority of the medical technology presently advancing in Vietnam.

"Each of the revolutionary societies agreed that women still have a struggle of our own to claim a place that we deserve in our society," stated Weiss. She spoke highly of the fact that all women in Vietnam belong to women's union and are continuously seeking an awareness that, "as women we deserve and have earned a place in the management of our society."

"There are good things happening in Vietnam and we as Americans should want to be a part of it," Weiss said. Friendshipment is presently appealing to the American government and public to support the construction of the Friendshipment Hospital at the site of the My Lai massacre.

Along with the estimated cost of $149,000 needed to begin construction, direct negotiations between Washington and Hanoi must be insisted upon. A removal of the embargo placed on American trade and travel to Vietnam also must be lifted. Additional policies are needed if we are to begin steps towards a "concrete symbol of American aid and friendship."

"The women in Vietnam have taught me, by their own example, the love of self, the confidence in your people and the lack of fear... I am here to share some feelings and knowledge of Vietnam. For until the embargo is lifted and necessary steps towards normalizing relations is granted, you will not be able to go and learn for yourself," concluded Weiss.

ImproVision's coming

By ANN TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

"Yes, this is the BEST drinking fountain in the Five-College area!" The voice arrested me in mid-stride during my stroll down the Campus Center concourse. It was coming from a TV screen and sure enough, on the screen was a very beautiful... if archaic drinking fountain. Interested, I hung around for the rest of the show.

The show is "ImproVision", the latest product of the Student Video Project, a half-hour, news and feature magazine to preview on the Campus Center concourse March 1. Each show will include a story, personality profile and several informative "tips".

The weekly magazine will "not necessarily be hard news", said David Skillicorn, executive-producer of "ImproVision". Instead it will concentrate on presenting information and stories of interest to Five-College area people.

The magazine will include four or five "tips" as well as a local story and a personality profile which will run about 7-10 minutes each.

"What's Doing," a preview of current events, "What they're saying," people's reaction to a particular topic, "The Best," short blurbs on the best pizza, sledding hill, bus stop (the possibilities are endless) in the area, and short film and movie previews are all ideas for weekly tips. Other tips could include stereo hints, plant tips, a doctor talking on [illegible] symptoms or a magician doing a trick.

"ImproVision" involves about 25 people, most of whom have little or no experience in video-taping. Reporting, editing, taping and talent skills are all involved in putting the show together. Responsibility for segments of the show will be rotated to allow everyone to participate in different aspects of the magazine.

"We're expanding to involve Five-College students," Skillicorn said. He emphasized that anyone willing to learn is welcome and individuals can contribute articles and story ideas.

Skillicorn got the idea for "ImproVision" when he saw "Weekend" a daily, news magazine show on Westinghouse, a local San Francisco TV station. "Weekend" is rising in popularity and will be shown on Channel 4 in Boston starting in April.

Starting March 1st, "ImproVision" will be shown on the Concourse, in the Hatch and at 7:30 on CCA-TV, a local cable station.

The deadline for submitting nominations for Student Government Association (SGA) president is Feb. 23 and not March 23 as reported in yesterday's Collegian.

SGA Speaker Brian J. DeLima did not say yesterday that even with the proposed $7 SATF fee increase, the SGA will be short $11,000 next semester. The figure, according to SGA treasurer Tommy Kerrins, is around $6,500.

Montague nukes OK says federal report

MONTAGUE, Mass. (AP) — Construction of proposed twin nuclear power plants in Montague, a town ten miles from Amherst has been backed by the final environmental statement of the federal Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

The 400-page report released here and in other cities concludes giant cooling towers planned at the plants by Northeast Utilities would have "a major adverse impact" aesthetically on the rural area of Franklin County.

The statement says, "The risk associated with accidental radiation exposure will be very low."

The cooling towers would be 500 to 570 feet tall — the tallest structures in New England outside Boston and Hartford, Conn. The towers would use Connecticut River water to cool the two nuclear generators, each producing more than one million kilowatts of power.

Construction permit hearings now are expected to begin late this spring or during the summer. Northeast Utilities tentatively plans to start construction of the $2.3-billion plants in 1980.

The first unit would be ready in 1986 and the second two years later, according to the Connecticut-based utility company, New England's largest power supplier.

The controversial cooling towers have drawn criticism in a separate government safety study.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission's reactor safety office says air traffic out of a small airport in nearby Turner Falls may pose too great a risk of a plane crashing into the power plants. The office said last summer more study of the problem was needed.

Environmentalists, led by the Alternative Energy Coalition of Greenfield, have mounted an effort to prevent construction of the plants.

At a safety hearing last August, a spokeswoman said, "We're going to stop Seabrook and Montague will be next."

A nuclear power plant under construction in Seabrook, N.H., has been the scene of a series of anti-nuclear power demonstrations.

Timothy Bernard was elected president of Sylvan Area Government last night with 186 votes in a victory over David Williams and James O'Connell.

A recount will be made tomorrow to determine the winner of the vice presidency. As it stands Michael Fix holds 191 votes to Lynn Donaldson's 188 votes.

Voter turn-out was low with approximately 35 per cent of the Sylvan residents voting.

Bernard's opponents split the remainder of the vote with Williams receiving 130 votes and O'Connell receiving 72 votes.

Candidates for area government representatives and a student senator were voted on. Joseph Fertitta won the student senate seat by a slim 54 to 50 margin over Edward Hillery. Richard Foster and Jesse Chanonhouse also ran for the position.

In Cashin dorm two representative positions were taken by Michele Johnston and Donna Hounsell. Kathleen Riendeau was defeated for the position.

In Brown dorm, James Condon and Regina Hurley were elected representatives. Within the next week another election is to be held to fill another representative opening.

A referendum to determine whether the area's Third World Center would have voting representatives in the area government was defeated.

McNamara dorm elected Barry Mason, Stanley Fitch and Lance Peterson (a write-in) as representative. The fourth position was a tie between Elliot Myer, Steven Glazer and David Melo. The decision will be determined between the three candidates.

The elections were held as a result of the resignation of the Sylvan Area's President Gail Syphers, Vice President Mark Machler and several of the area's representatives and a student senator.

Bernard called his presidential win "a victory for the people," and hopes to distribute responsibility equally throughout the area government. He said the Big Bad Boogie and the Spring Weekend hopefully will take place and regrets he has little money to work with.

Project Self offers training

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

"Learning to say 'no' in a manner that's asserts one's own right to say 'no' while not violating another individual's needs," is how Linda Spataro, coordinator of Project Self, describes "Assertiveness Training," one workshop offered by the Project this semester.

Project Self, a service of Everywoman's Center, is "a series of workshops by, for, and about women," reads the brochure for this semester.

Most of the 44 workshops will begin February 28 and run for eight weeks. The cost is $25 for most workshops, and one Women's Studies credit is available to University undergraduates. For an additional $15 a credit is possible for Continuing Education students.

Workshops include, "Basic Carpentry," "Issues for Older Women," "Women and Alcohol," and "Women's Practical Self-defense".

"The Individual and Collective Power of Women in Politics", is one workshop offered by Jean Cahill and Diana Souza. "We'd like to get women involved in local politics; going to committee meetings, running for office," said Souza.

The Project has existed, though not in its present form, since April 1975, and involves 350-400 students each semester, said Spataro. She said there are four general attractions of the program for students; making friends, acquisition of a skill, support, and a means of entering the University for the first time.

In the future the program may be expanded into other communities, Spataro said. Currently the program financially breaks even; the only instance of profit in the past resulting in the extra money being divided up between all the facilitators of the workshops, said Spataro.

Deadline for registration for the workshops is February 22.

Medic! A textbook just bit me!

By ILENE QUINT
Collegian Staff

I can't prove what I am about to tell you. I'm not really sure that it happened. I made my first trip to the Textbook Annex to begin my long, hard, textbook trek.

Fire and Brimstone's Philosophy 608H, Introduction to God, lay in wait for me, the last copy on the shelf and I eagerly reached for it. "Ouch!" I screamed; the book had bitten me on the hand. People were staring, and I didn't know how to explain myself.

I carefully lifted the hardcover flap and peeked at the price, and glanced back at my teeth-pocked wrist. "Twenty-nine-fifty!" I exclaimed just as loud as before. People were staring again. They seemed to understand my dilemma.

Indeed, we have all been bitten by the skyrocketing prices of textbooks this semester. It seems as if you just turn around and the price is up. I mean if you want to knock off a quick $50, just start purchasing those vast volumes of knowledge.

English Literature Professor Paul F. Saagpak, said in reference to the annex, "The annex charges me too much money. Many times the books I order don't come in until halfway through the semester. The students should have a cooperative system as in Europe."In this system, the students themselves sell old and new books at fair prices."

Sociology Professor John Manfredi doesn't take the poor service out on the annex. He explained, "The problem is the irresponsibility of the publishers."

Another English Literature professor, John Hicks, apparently has had no major problems with the annex.

He commented, "The Textbook Annex's service is immediate, kind, and courteous."

"I don't use the annex at all. They gave me rotten service. They short order and I can't return. They're running their store to make money. I do all my business through the Odyssey Book Store in South Hadley. They give me good service and I don't have to rush to get my booklist in," said Contemporary History Professor Dean Albertson.

As Albertson has demonstrated, there are some alternatives to the annex. Some of the "competitors", even have comments of their own about the current textbook situation.

Zachary Cohn, owner of Logos Bookstore in Amherst, remarked, "I hate when people call me and knock the Textbook Annex. It's an enormous job with I myself couldn't handle.

In defense of the harsh criticism that the annex gets, Ann G. Broga, annex manager, said, "I consider the Textbook Annex a game. Our prices are set by the publishers. The hardbound books are discounted five per cent. We are fighting costs all the time. Shipping back books and handling take the majority of the profit. As far as the profit goes, the Campus Center gets it. I have very few hassles with students, but let's fact it, if I didn't enjoy my work, I wouldn't be here."

Who knows what will springboard from these varying attitudes. Maybe it is the publishers that should be attacked, not the distributors. Whatever ... I have to go tend to my wrist.

Orchard land could become fertile

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

It's the classic case of planting the seed of an idea and waiting to see what comes up.

The seed: A plan to convert 75 acres of unused orchard land adjacent to Sylvan and Orchard Hill into a model agricultural, recreational and educational site.

The Planters: The Coalition for Alternative Agriculture and Self-Sufficiency (CAAS), group determined to put the badly neglected land "into more rational use based on the university's needs."

The Harvest: A self-sufficient food co-op to supply the University with fresh fruits and vegetables;

—An aesthetically pleasing orchard with shade trees, tables and a function area;

—Opportunities for students to gain academic credit and field experience working in the orchards; and —Continuing research into organic farming techniques.

If all that sounds too good to be true, don't try to tell Ed Pachico or Sandy Matathia, CAAS co-coordinators.

"We're trying to show people that we're up to something," said Matathia "As late as the 1950's, the University was self-sufficient in providing meat, dairy products, fresh fruit and vegetables. For years, the Orchard has been abandoned. We just want to take care of it."

Matathia, Pachico and the other 20 or so people who currently comprise CAAS (a student center for educational research-based group) are very much justified in trying to improve the orchard.

Until it was abandoned in 1960 the site was maintained as an experimental orchard producing apples, peaches, plums, pears, assorted berries, grapes and a variety of vegetables.

In 1975, the Commonwealth issued a "Policy for Food and Agriculture in Massachusetts," aimed at introducing more resource-efficient food, waste and energy systems at UMass.

CAAS members said they feel little headway has been made in compliance with the policy, hence the plan for "public, co-operative" action to develop the orchard.

"The University is way behind the times when it comes to the orchard. The official policy is so incredibly fragmented that no one really knows what anyone else is up to," said Matathia.

He said, "We're mobilizing students at this point, trying to show people were doing something. Maybe then they'll start to take some interest."

Despite a discouraging start, Pachico said things had really picked up in the last few weeks. He said that last semester, over 50 faculty members were invited to attend preliminary sessions for the project. One showed up.

"But things are rolling now," he added.

CAAS' most imposing problem is a lack of funding. Pachico said funds for seeds and equipment were provided by the Academic Affairs Committee for the Butterfield garden last year, and hopes are up for additional funding for the Orchard Hill site.

Pachico said he was optimistic that additional money would come from the Student Senate, various area governments and the Stockbridge Student Senate.

He was less than optimistic about the possibility of a grant from the State Government.

"But you never know," he said, smiling.

Massachusetts currently imports 85 per cent of its food at a cost of $2.8 billion. The cost of food transportation alone is $300 million annually.

Candidates respond

WMUA (91.1 FM) will broadcast tonight's candidate question and answer session at 9:00 from the Town Room at Town Hall.

The session, sponsored by the Amherst Democratic Committee, will feature candidates for town offices who will be running in the March 1 caucus.

The purpose of the caucus is to narrow down the field of candidates to two each for positions on the board of selectmen and the school committee.

Three candidates are seeking one-year terms on the board and six candidates are running for two three-year terms on the school committee.

The candidates for the selectmen post are William Barnes, Roger Jacque and Kenneth Mosakowski. The school committee contenders are Ralmon Jon Black, Betty A. Brace, Casey Clark, Janice Denton, Nancy Gordon and Loren S. Howell.

All candidates except Denton are expected to take part in the session.

Bernard elected president

The Stockbridge Student Senate gave its support last night to an increase in the Student Activities Fee, the right of students to hold a voting position at Amherst Town Meetings, and allocated a total of $2740 to various upcoming Stockbridge activities.

A vote to support a raise in the Student Activities Trust Fund fee by a maximum of seven dollars was passed unanimously after SGA representative Glenn Munroe explained the additional money was needed to cover inflationary costs.

Vince O'Connor, of the Amherst Tenants Association, spoke on his proposal to give all college students in the Amherst area the right to hold the office of Amherst town meeting representative or town selectperson.

O'Connor explained that due to restructing of Amherst, two precincts now list students as the majority of registered voters and residents.

O'Connor said he believes students have a concern in the town of Amherst regarding such issues as mass transit, child care, health services and bicycle paths.

"The town of Amherst should be more responsive to the students," he said.

Ron Shillady, a Stockbridge Senator, supported the issue by encouraging students to register in the town of Amherst, regardless if they are registered in their hometown. This will enable students to vote for student representatives to the Amherst Town Meetings in the April 5th election.

Singer-guitarist Tyler Everett, from Key Large, Florida, will be featured at a Senate sponsored coffeehouse to be held April 6th. The Senate appropriated $440 to cover Everett's traveling expenses and other expenses of the coffeehouse.

Other money allocated included $1000 for a graduation party for the class of 1977, $500 to help cover graduation expenses, $450 for a new printing machine for the Senate Office, used primarily by the Stockbridge school newspaper, $200 for new furniture in the Senate office, and $150 to cover transportation costs of a Stockbridge student ski trip to Berkshire East on Feb. 24th.

A motion was brought to the floor regarding a petition by the students in Floriculture expressing their views of disappointment in the department pertaining to poor facilities and curriculum.

Support group held for victims of rape

By MELANIE JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

The Everywomen's Center, in conjunction with the University Rape Task Force, is sponsoring a support group for women desiring to integrate the rape experience into their lives through discussion with other victims.

The group will consist of no more than eight adult (18 years and older) female rape victims over the initial crisis stage.

The facilitators of the group, Sarena Lurie and Leslie Goldberg, are both conselor-advocates working with the UMass Rape Task Force. Lurie said that she hopes the group will attract people who have been previously counselled, as well as rape victims who have never received any counseling.

According to Lurie, the group is designed as a non-threatening setting for women to share their experiences and feelings. It will support the women in their dealings with court, police, and family. The group will decide its focus and direction. The facilitators ask that the members be committed to the full nine weeks of meetings.

The support group will start February 24 and meet every Thursday from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. in the Everywomen's Center, 506 Goodell.

Lurie has facilitated groups while working with the Boston Area Rape Crisis Center and is a graduate student in counselling at the School of Education at UMass.

House size reduction vote seen

BOSTON [UPI] — Redistricting Chairman George Keverian, D-Everett, says he hopes to finalize his plan to implement a reduction in the size of the Massachusetts House and bring it to a vote next month.

Keverian, following a stormy final hearing on the plan Tuesday night, said voting on the plan could be delayed because of the absence of House Speaker Thomas W. McGee, D-Lynn, who is recuperating from a skiing accident.

House votes down charter changes

BOSTON [AP] — The House Democratic leadership unceremoniously scuttled Mayor Kevin H. White's Boston charter change bill Wednesday and the mayor's strategists tied to decide how it could be revived.

White's initial reaction was to support a change he had been against, making the new charter subject to a referendum of Boston voters. The unwillingness to put this on the ballot was said to have cost proponents some supporters in the legislature.

Feds eye African auto ripoff

BOSTON [UPI] — A scheme in which automobiles are purchased in the United States, reported stolen to collect on insurance and then shipped to Ghana, Africa, for sale at prices triple their value is under investigation by federal authorities.

Little official information about the operation was being released, but a spokesman for the Boston office of the FBI confirmed Wednesday "an extensive investigation of such an operation" was under way.

Springfield busing seen needed

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [AP] — Busing of students between Springfield and the suburbs is the only way to resolve the city's alleged violation of state integration orders, School Supt. John E. Deady said yesterday.

Deady said he had been assured the finding by the state Board of Education did not mean an immediate redrawing of school district lines.

Buffalo snow sent to N'hampton

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. [UPI] — Sponsors of the Northampton winter carnival don't have to worry about not having enough snow. Buffalo, N.Y., is sending some.

One-half ton of "clean Buffalo snow" was to be shipped to Northampton on a 45-foot truck in time for the carnival opening today.

Paul Walker, a member of the Northampton Chamber of Commerce, had asked the Buffalo chamber for the snow, although, he added, he didn't want to leave Buffalo short.

Food stamp fraud found

ORLANDO, Fla. [UPI] — Investigators disclosed Wednesday they have found that food stamps are being traded for cash, booze, dope, guns, cars and even sex.

"I would venture to say the taxpayers are being ripped off by the millions of dollars by people selling food stamps for cash or buying wine, whiskey or anything else that a consumer would want," said State Attorney Robert Eagan.

Officials said four persons had been arrested and four others were being sought on food stamp abuse charges, mostly felonies, following a month and a half investigation by Eagan's office.

They were the first arrests under a Florida law that became effective Oct. 1, allowing local law enforcement agencies to prosecute abuses under the food stamp program, a federal program administered by the state.

State ends its shake-down trial case

BOSTON [AP] — The prosecution wrapped up its federal conspiracy-estortion case Wednesday against two Massachusetts state senators after calling more than two dozen witnesses in the past 4¾ weeks.

Senate Majority Leader Joseph J.C. DiCarlo, D-Revere, and Asst. Minority Leader Ronald C. MacKenzie, R-Burlington, are accused of shaking down a New York construction management firm for $40,000 in return for a favorable report by a special legislative committee.

DiCarlo headed the committee investigating the state's contract with McKee-Berger-Mansueto to supervise construction of the University of Massachusetts campus at Boston. The state auditor had criticized the contract as "open-ended."

The House chairman of the 1971 committee testified Wednesday he did not write any part of that report, but did influence it.

Former Rep. Ralph E. Sirianni Jr., D-Winthrop, who identified himself as a "very close personal friend" of DiCarlo's, said, "We compiled the whole report together, making the decision as to what the ultimate report would be."

Now a director of research for a legislative committee, Sirianni said he agreed with all of the report's findings, despite his earlier opposition to the MBM contract.

The report concluded there was nothing illegal or improper about the contract, which ultimately cost the state $6 million.

Asst. U.S. Atty. Edward Lee has contended the conclusion of that report was virtually dictated by officials of MBM.

Lee tried to stregthen that case by calling as his last witness an FBI document expert.

James Lile of the FBI's Washington laboratory testified that he examined two documents, one with the signature of MBM vice president Jack Thomas, the other was a photocopy of the same document, he said.

Lee has argued the contents of that photocopy were reprinted verbatim in the conclusion of the committee report.

President Carter greets employes of the Agriculture Department yesterday. He told the employes that he has amended his standard tax deduction proposal from $2000 for couples and $2,400 for single persons to $2100 or $2200 for singles and $3000 for couples.

Cowens, killer of five, was member

Gunman tied to racist party

ATLANTA [UPI] — The National States Rights Party, a small white racist organization headquartered in nearby Marietta, reached its heyday during the civil rights drives of the 1950s and early 1960s.

Until Fred Cowan, who killed five persons and wounded five others before commiting suicide Monday in New Rochelle, N.Y., was found to have belonged to the party, little had been heard of the group which describes itself as anti-Semitic, anti-black and anti-Catholic.

Party Chairman J.B. Stoner, an attorney, claims the NSRP has 15,000 members but refuses to confirm whether Cowan was a member. "We don't give out any information on any members," he said.

The party's principal publication is a tabloid-size paper called "The Thunderbolt" which says on the masthead it covers "the white man's viewpoint."

The NSRP was an outgrowth of the United White Party which was formed in Knoxville, Tenn., in 1957 and its headquarters was listed in 1958-60 as Jeffersonville, Ind.

Edward Fields, a leader of the party with Stoner and editor of the Thunderbolt, went to Birmingham, Ala., in 1960 and remained there for five years. Both preached militant segregation in the then-racially troubled city.

Both men also spoke in other southern cities where racial crises erupted over the segregation issue.

Apparently, the newspaper preceded the party as it was being published in Atlanta in 1946 by another organization known as the Columbians.

When the Columbians disbanded, the NSRP picked up the newspaper with the name and lightning-bolt insignia.

Stuart Lewengrub of the Anti-Defamation League in Atlanta which keeps track of such anti-Semitic groups said, "This is not the first time that we have seen violent criminal acts committed by people who have obviously and admittedly been influenced by the hate literature put out by the NSRP."

Lewengrub said William A. H. Williams, the man who was convicted in the kidnapping of newspaper editor Reg Murphy here, also subscribed to the Thunderbolt.

Stoner has been involved in Georgia politics in recent years, receiving about 80,000 votes in 1974 when he ran for governor. He finished well out of the primary running.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Vance meets Israeli officials

JERUSALEM [UPI] — Secretary of State Cyrus Vance's first day of talks with Israeli officials yesterday brought some apparent differences to the surface, but Israeli leaders said they remain convinced of fundamental U.S. support for the Jewish state.

Prime Minister Rabin told reporters after his second meeting of the day with Vance, "The United States commitment to the strength of Israel is valid, effective and will be implemented."

Carter discusses Cuba ties

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter laid down his conditions for normal relations with Cuba, Vietnam, and Angola yesterday and said he is considering ties with 14 estranged nations in all.

Carter summarized the conditions — including such familiar requirements as troop withdrawals, respect for human rights and MIA accountings — in one sweeping statement on the issue during a chat with Agriculture Department employes.

House adjusts tax rebate plan

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House Ways and Means Committee voted yesterday to deny President Carter's proposed $50 per person rebate to those making more than $30,000 and to give a smaller rebate to those making more than $25,000 a year.

The committee voted 17 to 9 in favor of a proposal by Rep. William Cott, D-Conn., to "phase out" the rebate gradually as family income rose from $25.000 to $30.000.

This, for example, would mean that someone making $27,500 would receive a rebate of $25 for each family member. In some cases, checks for as little as $1 or perhaps a few cents would be mailed to those making almost but not quite $30,000.

Tax refunds 'highest in history'

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Taxpayers who already have filed 1976 income tax forms are receiving average refunds of $456.34, the highest in history, the Internal Revenue Service said yesterday.

The average probably will climb even higher before all returns are processed.

But the IRS is concerned that another record may be set this year — for errors. One in every 10 taxpayers who have filed returns so far made mistakes, partly because of extensive tax law revisions enacted last year.

Ugandan archbishop arrested

KAMPALA, Uganda [UPI] — The Anglican archbishop of Uganda, Burunki and Rwanda and two government ministers were arrested in connection with an alleged plot to overthrow President Idi Amin, Uganda radio announced yesterday.

Archbishop Janani Luwum, Internal Affairs Minister Oboth Otumbi and Water Resources Minister Lt. Col. Erinayo Oryema were arrested only hours after a rally which Luwum attended where thousands of troops shouted, "Kill them, kill them!" at the accused conspirators.

Britain, France may sue New York

LONDON [UPI] — Britain and France, which are losing $4.5 million a month on the Concorde jetliner, may sue to force New York to grant landing rights for the controversial supersonic craft, the government said yesterday.

"It's a matter of hours or days when a decision will have to be taken whether we go to court," said Britain's secretary of state for trade, Edmund Dell.

France reported that President Carter had sent a private "hot-line" message to President Valery Giscard d'Estaing expressing his hope the Concorde dispute could be solved "in a way that reflects the close friendship between France and the United States."

Being realistic

To the Editor:

I would like to comment on a statement made by Dee Drake, a work study student in the Financial Aid Office, which appeared in the February 14th article entitled; Financial Aid; Help For Non-traditional Students. She said, and I quote, "There are a number of single parents who aggravate me with 'I won't do this or that or take out a loan to go back to school.' It's a moral decision though. If you take responsibility of coming back to school, you must make a personal sacrifice. But it's tough when if affects your standard of living."

It certainly is a lot more than 'tough' to come back to school being a single mother, and I am shocked by Ms. Drake's gross assumption that a single mother is somehow copping out when she decides to turn down a loan or refuse work study. If anything, the single mother is looking at things realistically. Consider her situation... she wants to return to school but she has children. Financial Aid offers her help in terms of work study and loans. If she takes work study, she then becomes an employee as well as continuing her previous roles of full time parent and full time student.

I think that it is a lot more than a "personal sacrifice" to expect this woman to adjust to all of these things, never mind do well in them. As far as loans are concerned, remember, she is a single mother, and although, generally, she is trying to get out of her impoverished state by coming to college, the job market is quite unstable. Does Ms. Drake expect a woman with children to pay off a loan that can reach up to $8,000 when she could very well be unemployed or on welfare? Certainly not. I hope that in the future we will see more compassion and concern regarding the plight of the single mother who wants to return to school.

Clearing the air

To the Editor:

Are non-smokers the only literate people on this campus? Or are the no-smoking signs written in foreign languages? The answers to these questions must be yes, because everywhere there is a no-smoking sign, there ia a person lighting up.

The smoke of a cigarette is just as bad for the person who chose not to smoke as it is for the smoker. Non-smokers must band together and support their right to clean air and a healthy life. So non-smokers, next time some rude smoker is blowing smoke into your face or the smoke is contaminating your food in the D.C., while you're sitting in the no-smoking section, ask them to put their cigarette out. They are violating your right to a healthy life.

A smoker, when in a group of non-smokers, should ask permission to light up. If only non-smokers would apeak their feelings, this world would be a cleaner and healthier place to live.

Joe Dobrowolski

A plea for moderation

To the Editor:

I'm writing this letter as I am attending my Interpersonal Communication class at Graduate Research Tower A. The temperature outside is 30 degrees and the temperature inside according to the thermostat is 80 degrees. I should have brought my sweatsuit to enjoy this great sauna. The recent Collegian article discussed lowering the thermostats to 65 degrees; this certainly would be more reasonable than an 80 degree temperature.

An excessive warm temperature is not conducive to a proper study atmosphere, and hinders one's ability to concentrate on scholastic activity. I hope that someone hears me, and that the appropriate steps are taken to lower the thermostat.

Frederick J. Winer

Taking care of business

To the Editor:

It's been a long time since I've walked on a college campus.

No longer are students outraged by injustices civil and social. There are no causes which initiate feelings of self-pride and group love.

I find these things curious and slightly disturbing. But it can be understood that people feel detached from society where views are so divergent; and any concrete actions for change appear ineffectual on a societal level.

What I can't understand is how people can avoid caring for the space in which they live.

It is truly disturbing to walk through the Campus Center late in the afternoon and watch as a few hired hands clean the strewn papers, discarded milk and soda containers and crushed cigarette butts of the day.

Is there any more direct and obvious way to show concern for the world than by taking care of your own mess?

Can there be any hope that people will once again care about and better the world, when they don't care about their own lives?

Tales from the crypt

By GREG BRYANT

Have you ever wanted to attend a funeral of a friend or relative but didn't have the time to get dressed up and idly stand around while people you don't even know chew the fat about the final condition of the deceased? Do you like the convenience of drive-in banking and fast food service and the impersonality it embodies? Well now there is a wonderfully barbaric innovation that will please all: the drive-in funeral home.

Now you don't have to be hassled about taking the day off from work, dredging up that old dusty suit or dress and trucking down to your neighborhood funeral parlor to endure the rigors of a memorial service and burial. Drive-in funeral homes are now a reality, making believers out of even the most ardent sceptics.

As Alvin Verrette, president of the Point Coupee Funeral Home in New Roads, Louisiana, articulately explained in a recent interview, "We wanted something for working people who didn't have time to dress but wanted to show their condolences and sympathy. It's so nice to know someone cares." The whole process takes as long as one can drive up to the parlor, sign the register and look sympathetically at the deceased resting complacently in his comfortable satin-lined casket.

Just imagine yourself lying there with a cross out-lined in neon light looming spiritually behind you while friends and relatives in rapid succession gaze through the plate glass window from the convenience of their cars. You are on display to the world in all this artificial splendor, the envy of your friends. Even passers-by can admire you in your final state. Who says the funeral industry is corrupt and commercialized when for a mere $2,000 or so a family is not only able to display their loved one but their affluence as well?

Thus the age of the drive-in funeral home is upon us in answer to America's passionate desire to get somewhere and do things as fast as possible. The funeral industry has truly surpassed itself this time, seeing to it that a new dimension is added to the simple state of death.

Learning how to live

By KEVIN KNOBLOCH

We don't seem to be a very unique generation. When we grow up and become firefighters and nurses, I predict that just as our parents and grandparents, we will inform our kids how "good it was" when we tell them about the old days. We will probably tell these unfortunates about the four cent stamp and the 29 cent gallon of gasoline or maybe we'll just brag about the few years of peace our country now seems to be enjoying. Most likely in our senility we will wail and whine about how their generation has gone to pot and has no morals, etc. But, fellow future parents, what will we tell them when they ask why we have handed them an inferior society and not an improved model? How will we excuse the conditions they will be forced to survive under?

We college students are experiencing "the prime of life" as our adult friends like to assure us. What is so prime about it is that we are not tied down to a 30-year mortgage, seven kids, or a 40-hour work week. We are in an ideal situation to experience a wide variety of peer relationships, to absorb both new and old ideas and most of all, to apply these ideas to our lifestyles. Now seems to be the opportune time to study the problems of our society and think ahead to the world tomorrow's generation will inherit (and not necessarily by choice).

Comedian-activist Dick Gregory knew what he was saying in 1969 when he told a large gathering of college students the following advice: Do not waste your time going to college to learn how to make a living but go to college to learn how to live. But with the disappearance of Vietnam, at least on the surface of the fallable American memory, Mr. Gregory's advice seems also to have escaped us.

We now find our college campuses, UMass not excluded, in a mood suddenly different from the Vietnam era. Students from coast to coast are slaving away in lecture halls and exam rooms for multiple year stints with a single objective in mind — a job. The job is a curious American institution. It makes some 30 million Americans do very strange things such as cheat, lie and otherwise step on one another on their way to the goal. It is this often non-existent job that spurs the student on. It is this job that motivates the young and bright to invest their valuable time and money into an education. It is this job that one looks to in future years as the reward of working hard early in life. Yes, it is this job that often forces them to compromise a genuine education as well as their intellectual needs.

Back in 1969 Mr. Gregory wondered how many students graduated to a well paying job totally lacking the knowledge of HOW to live. He wondered how many knew how to communicate with each other, to be non-violent functioning human beings whose presence was an asset to the preservation of human rights. How many were part of the solution rather than part of the problem?

In 1969 the scenario was not as critical as it is today. The economy, riding on the crest of the Vietnam War, created a job market graduates did not have to worry about. Students were in a position to wonder about the world and devote energies to a favorite cause. Today, a sour economy (and we may never know to what extent it was purposely manipulated to place a stranglehold on the American youth) has taken control. The concept that hard work will reap rewards is being bred into our generation and students are told that they must succumb to these economic forces and work hard and long before they can enjoy the benefits of retiring in this wonderful society.

This is where someone failed. A well paying job in a technical, fast moving world cannot be the source of happiness or the solution to the problems that face our generation. No, we must learn how to live and only then can we succeed. Pity those who graduate from four long years with only a new job to celebrate. And pity their sons and daughters who will graduate with the same hopes and goals thirty years from today.

But, alas, given the amount of faith I have in my peers, I see no reason why we can't tell our children "how good you have it today" when we send them off to college in the not-so-distant future. All it takes is a little learning about life.

Kant can't

> Dancing is the loftiest, the most moving, the most beautiful of the arts, because it is no mere translation of abstraction from life; it is life itself.
> —Havelock Ellis

Does anyone remember Angela Davis? Around "Angela Davis Time", I was starting to study different philosophers and I read that Angela was a philosophy teacher at Berkeley and a "Kantian", (whatever that is). Although pro-cause, at the time I wasn't ready to be David-like and refused to read any Immanuel Kant.

Years have past, and most of my Kantaphobia is gone; but even as I read him now the vision of "FREE ANGELA" painted on city walls slips through my mind. I don't even know where she is now or if she's free yet; although she'll probably never really be "free" if she's still Kantian, but that's another subject and I'm trying to work this around to "dance."

Someday I would like to be a champion of Einstein; ever the ardent admirer, someday a champion. He began what represents for me the attainment of true knowledge by respecting and combining "the human triangle" of exact science, philosophy, and the arts or aesthetics.

The thing that makes us humans unique (and sometimes our downfall) is that it is our nature to classify and define our being until we are often more hopelessly confused and entangled in the word-thoughts than we would have been had we lived like animals or rocks.

The rationale or purpose for science is the ultimate in our humanness in that it attempts to classify and define our existence. The means of philosophy are nebulous and more indefinite than those of exact science — which are almost glaringly distinct, but the purpose of philosophy is the same as for our science. Our art or aesthetics, on the other hand, makes no attempt to define our existence, but rather to express it. (See, I'm getting closer to "dance", but a little more philosophy.)

As a philosopher, Kant's goal was to put "certainty" into the word-play of philosophical argumentation. A noble but fruitless task because the very nature of the expression of his philosophies is words, which are digested and interpreted in as many different ways as the people exposed to them. He did at least do one thing: Kant gave recognition, even though he said he couldn't explain it, to the metaphysical realm. He called it the "numona" and said it is manifested in the mystical (not gothic), the psychic, and the aesthetic.

I feel I can say with at least the certainty of Kant in his "Categorical Imperative" that had Angela Davis been with me last Saturday at The Royal Winnipeg Ballet, she too would have been touched by something in that "numona". It is nothing you can define or explain away. It is life.

Who's kidding whom?

While we had not suspected that the Collegian is actually a front for the Student Organizing Project, Monday's bold editorial "UNIONIZE!" suggests some connection, especially having, as it did, the lucidity and wit of a John Fisher memo.

Actually we're glad that the Union is not as dead as its long silence had suggested. Probably it was just resting until rudely awakened by faculty organization. Or perhaps the worm of wishful thinking that it was has been magically transformed into the butterfly of student solidarity.

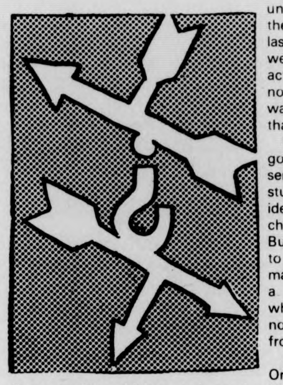
The only reason we can think of for renewed enthusiasm for a student union is that SOP's think tank has solved the problem of what to do with the Engineering students who have too much homework to go out on strike. At least with Engineering students involved, the average IQ on those on the picket line will approach a respectable level.

No, apparently small minds have decided that if the faculty can do it, students can as well. However, it seems that they assume that students also have something that the state cannot do without. The reasoning goes something like "if you give us what we want, we'll agree to go to school". Who really gives a damn whether we go to classes or not??

Even better, two or three semesters ago a UMass grad student did a thesis suggesting that the state should PAY students to go to school. After all school prepares us for our niche in the capitalistic system, right? Try to get THAT through the Legislature. Given such a delightful fantasy, it's just a pity that the fellow, now presumably unemployed, was not an English major rather than an alleged Economics student.

Last Spring, SOP's wizards thought they had discovered a fruitful way of organizing. The idea was for students to "form miniature unions (councils) in their departments". These little units would join to form one big union. Sort of like raindrops forming a big puddle. But so far they haven't made much of a splash.

Adam Auster pointed out Monday that "the undergraduate councils have already proven themselves able to affect their own departments". Yet we suggest that any gains those councils made did not come through the implied threat of a walkout or boycott, but rather came through reasonable discussion with faculty. Treasonous as it sounds, professors are generally decent people, and will listen to fair criticism and good suggestions.



The main reason that it seems unlikely a union will ever come about is that students are magnificently incompetent as leaders. But that shouldn't be taken as harshly as it sounds, for we subscribe to the theory that says students are here to LEARN from things like courses and extracurricular activities such as student government, so that when the time comes that their decisions do count for something, they will be more likely to be correct. They can afford to be inept now; it really doesn't matter what student "leaders" decide here.

As illustrations of incompetence, consider these examples. In 1975, it was known for months that the Trustees would raise tuition at their Amherst meeting. Nothing was done until the day before the vote when it was decided to issue red protest ribbons. Red ribbons, of all things!!

Remember last semester's course evaluation boycott joke? The SGA had been aware of access problems for weeks; yet they could do no better than suggest a feeble boycott. Even this column listed better suggestions than that!

But the best demonstration of unionization's impracticability was the failure to organize during the last year and a half when the issues were clear and some vestiges of activism remained. If the job could not be done while the opportunity was ripe, it seems futile to pretend that it ever can be.

For all our contempt for student government when it takes itself seriously, we certainly agree that students occasionally have good ideas and that they ought to have a chance to make their views known. But the proper way to have input is to make rational proposals, not to make tinny denunciations borne of a confrontation mentality. And what would a union be based on if not at least the threat of confrontation?

As a final consideration, the Organizing Project will have spent $152,553 over the past three years as of this June, $125,901 of that for salaries of various sorts. (Senate acts 74S-1, 76S-1) AND FOR WHAT?? As far as practical effects go, the alleged Union might as well be one of Plato's Forms. In terms of the present SATF dispute, SOP's budget cost every student $3.15 this year. Why not simply write off the union attempt as a bad investment and reduce any SATF increase by that much?

Or better yet, as the Harvey-Yanowitch presidential ticket suggests, give it to Baroque Enterprises.....

A day in the life...

By STEVE DUBIN

Waking, slowly realizing where he is, Scont squints at the illuminated digital clock in the shade-drawn darkened room. Lying in bed, gradually regaining daytime consciousness, Scon contemplates the cracks in the ceiling.

Uprighting himself on the edge of the upheavaled mattress, Scon picks torn dungarees off the cluttered floor and in his morning clumsiness, stumbles trying to do the necessary balancing act to put them on. This accomplished, he applies the sniff test to several T-shirts and pulls one over his head onto the lulled muscles of the back and shoulders.

Trudging to the no-longer-so-sharp mirror, and steadying himself on the paint spotted dresser, Scon gropes to assess the condition of his bushy hair and young beard. Contorting his face to get a better view, he exhales deeply thinking, "Oh well, could be worse."

Briskly shaking his head twice clears the senses. Heading onto the bathroom, his barefeet cringe on the wet tiled floor. The steamed mirror and towels astrewn are evidence of early risers.

Turning the hot water on first to let it warm, Scon notices toothbrush and paste in the dirt rimmed sink and removes them with a look of disgust. Ivory Soap, good enough for Marilyn Chambers (although she probably had someone else to scrub her cheeks.) A good lather and rinse, leaves the face squeaking clean. Quick brush of the teeth and the mouth is fuming with sterility.

Beaming of hygiene, Scon travels the short distance of the thick carpeted hall to the kitchen. What breakfast concoction can he face today? "Special K?" No sugar! Well, popping cardboard doesn't sound appetizing anyway. Pancakes, French toast? No, can't wait that long. Ah, a cheese omelet. Not officially gourmet, but suitable.

Cracking the first egg on the "Arco" gas station giveaway bowl, Scon manages to drip some of the transparent goo on the red-speckled formica counter. The stuff has infinite drip, like mozzerella cheese on pizza. Casually wiping it with a paper bag, Scon cracks the other two eggs flawlessly. The pan buttered and crackling welcomes the beaten mixture.

Feeling foolish observing the eggs cook, like observing a flower grow, Scon ambles to the front door to greet the faithful "Globe." Six murders, two wars, three vetoed, bills, and an article about the higher standards of living in America.

Not feeling heavy this morning, Scon plucks the SPORTS section, bordered by LIVING and ECONOMY. Two trades, three Boston loses, and four new expansions. What's this, Ali remarried in double ceremony, to two wives.

Better flip the eggs and shower with cheese. Oh no, it broke! Here comes the special scrambled cheese wamlet. Topped by a glass of choking thick orange juice.

Now, what to do with the rest of the day. Nothing going on, maybe I'll write a story, "Waking, slowly realizing where he is ...

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

Thursday, February 17— Born today, you are one of those friendly individuals who may well be plagued by fair-weather associates attempting to climb aboard your bandwagon. Many will attempt to take take advantage of you -- and you will be well into maturity before you begin to develop the discernment it takes to distinguish these friends from your real friends. Those who are truly fond of you, who take a genuine interest in your personal welfare, may try very hard to protect you from those enemies you refuse to recognize, and it may be that you will at times mistake the true friends for the false and, thus, play your cards exactly opposite from the way you should play them. Ultimately, you will succeed in establishing feasible means of self-defense, but many may be hurt in the process.

Aside from your relationships with people, you dealings should prove highly successful. You may well even gain a reputation for being something of a financial wizard because of your ability to make money in the first place and then to parlay what you have into more of the same. One of those basically calm persons who refuses to fall apart in a crisis, you are capable of thinking clearly in sitatuions that leave others mentally gasping.

Friday, February 18

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Your romantic nature leads you into an interesting -- though perhaps not very wise --adventure today. Direct your own activity.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — You would do well to tell your side of a controversial tale immediately. Otherwise, your "enemy" may get the opposition on his side.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — You should be in your element today as you go about the business of changing another's opinion of your work. Be persuasive.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Take care that a reputation for perching on the fence does not keep others from putting a question to you. State your views at once.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Strategic retreat may well be the wisest course at this point. A friend will not become an overnight enemy.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Don't allow debate to deteriorate into argument of the baser sort. Stick to your point of view -- but support it with facts.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Although you take great joy out of battling for the underdog, you would do well at this point to seek peace instead.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — The high spirits of another may land you in trouble before noon. Don't make an issue of the differences between you and a friend.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Temper may well be regarded simply as temperament -- if you are wise enough to keep it under control. Respond with an overtone of calm.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Clever conversation can impress another with your good points even as you pretend to be self-effacing and modest.

SAGITTAIRUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Surprise another; take him into your confidence where personal affairs are concerned. This is a good day for seeking out a new friend.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — New projects on the employment scene threaten to set your personal world on its ear. Gain all the information you can.

Gymmen meet a tough foe in high-scoring So. Conn.

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team, winners of its last three meets, travels to New Haven, Conn. tonight to face one of the top men's gymnastics team in the country - Southern Connecticut State in a 6 p.m. meet.

The Minutemen, who have a 5-2 record and are presently in third place in the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League, will be facing, according to UMass coach Dick Swetman, probably the best men's team in the country.

So. Connecticut is presently in first place in the EICL with a 4-0 mark and has been averaging a phenomenal 211.94 points per match.

"Right now," Swetman said, "So. Connecticut is the second highest scoring team in the country, following Oklahoma, and they haven't even fielded a full team yet.

"Unbelievably, they have 14 all-around men, whereas most schools are lucky if they have four, and they are all top-flight performers giving the team great strength and depth. You could easily say that So. Connecticut is a gymnastics factory."

UMass is coming off a comeback victory over Navy in Annapolis last Saturday afternoon, giving the Minutemen their third straight victory since intersession, but Swetman concedes that his gymnasts will really have their hands full tonight.

"I really don't think we have that much of a chance to beat them,' Swetman admitted. "They are so much stronger than us and they are able to experiment a lot more during the course of the season."

Swetman also pointed out that several of the UMass gymnasts are good friends with some members of the So. Connecticut team and that the meet whould be a friendly one.

"I'll still be going with my best performers," Swetman said, "but because the nature of the meet, I think we may be doing a little experimenting for the next meet we have against Springfield College this Sunday afternoon.

"In effect, tonight's meet will serve as a good warm-up for us in preparing for Springfield."

Physically the Minutemen have a few people with some minor nagging injuries, but Swetman doesn't forsee anyone being kept out of the meet, with the exception of John Forshay who is still recovering from a knee injury.

"John has been working out occassionally," Swetman said, "and I think he'll be ready for Springfield on Sunday."

Yellowjackets sting icemen

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

Inconsistency in completing scoring plays once again was the downfall of the UMass hockey team as AIC kept its road record perfect by defeating the Minutemen, 5-3, in a game played yesterday afternoon at Orr Rink.

The Yellow Jackets are 8-0 on the road this season with an overall record of 16-5 and a Division II record of 12-5. The loss dropped the Minutemen's mark to 7-10-1 overall and 7-8-1 in the division.

Mike Smith, a junior defenseman from Norwood, had two goals for the winners, while Mike Dagenais, Mario Pugliese and Ken Muse added single tallies. Carl Burns, Chris Lamby and Mike Merchant had the Minutemen goals.

"We work hard for our chances," said UMass coach Jack Canniff, "but we just don't have anyone to finish them off."

The Yellow Jackets were without the services of Tom Mullen, whose 29 goals and 34 assists are good for second place in Division II scoring.

AIC almost got a goal less than 30 seconds into the game when Smith fired a shot from the point that hit the post. The visitors got on the board at 13:12 of the first period on a Mike Dagenais goal, assisted by Tom Lloyd and Mark Schneider.

The Minutemen came back to take a 2-1 in the second period on goals by Burns and Lamby. Burns scored at 6:04 after AIC goalie Ray Belisle made a great save through a tough screen on a shot by Merchant. Freshman Jim Benelli also assisted on the goal. Kevin Sullivan left Lamby the puck at the blue line and the senior defenseman moved in and fired a hard shot past Belisle at 7:23.

However, AIC got one back just 34 seconds later when Pugliese blocked Bob Jefferson's shot from the point and came in all alone on Dana Redmond and scored to tie the game.

The Yellow Jackets took a 3-2 lead on a powerplay goal by Muse. Muse picked up Smith's rebound and had the whole open side of the net to shoot at.

Smith scored two quick goals in the third period to boost his team's lead to 5-2. Merchant scored the final goal of the game at 10:30 when he shifted around the AIC defense and fired a shot past Belisle.

The Minutemen were outshot in the game, 34-28.

BURHOE ACOUSTICS

What makes the Burhoe speaker better?

The Burhoe tweeter is the first "Felted-Dome" tweeter in the industry. It features a carefully designed inverted dome of extremely low mass and high rigidity, which provides a widely dispersed sound.
The entire assembly is hermetically sealed and located in a precision-formed aluminum mounting plate. This plate is rectangular, so as to avoid the possibility of reflected standing waves, which could otherwise be formed between the radiating surface and the edge of the mounting surface. The voice coil is immersed in a magnetic fluid, which reduces distortion and dissipates excess heat.

The Burhoe woofer is a continuation in the evolution of design that has occurred from AR to KLH to EPI. Each improvement is subtle and relies on past experience. The recent advances in paper technology provide a rugged, durable cone which completely avoids standing waves and resonances; new plastics technology provides an outer flexible surround which in no way limits the woofer's excursion or interferes with the upper limits of its frequency response. Innovations in voice coil assembly and adhesives permit very high temperatures and rapid heat dissipation. New, large power magnets provide the enormous field strengths that help provide Burhoe's high efficiency.

The tuned enclosure has a distinct advantage over sealed enclosures in that the tuned port is able to utilize the energy emanating from the back-motion of the woofer, rather than absorbing it as the sealed enclosure does.
In recent years, a synthesis of filter technology, computer analysis and analog techniques has permitted detailed control over frequency response, damping, and band-width. Burhoe Acoustics has chosen to use this tuned port system, along with high-efficiency woofer design to extend low-frequency band-width.

Because of these significant design improvements, Burhoe Acoustics is able to offer you excellent frequency response for the entire human hearing range, in a speaker that is both highly efficient, and reasonably priced.
It one of your fetishes is musical accuracy feed it with a pair of Burhoe Whites for only $240 the stereo pair.

Gymwomen on road

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

Southern Connecticut is tonight's opponent for the UMass women's gymnastics team in a 6 p.m. away meet.

Southern sports a shiny 3-0 record and has been scoring in the range of 120 points. Impressive as Southern may sound, it should be no match for the 3-1, third in the East Minutewomen.

UMass coach Virginia Evans echoes what the statistics show. "I'm not anticipating a great deal of competition from Southern," she said. For the gymwomen this is a warm-up before Sunday's showdown, with Springfield College.

In most meets, the gymnasts compete according to the position they have earned. The strongest performer anchors the event. Against Southern, however, Evans is going to have her strongest gymnast compete first for the team.

Karen Hemberger is still bothered by an ankle injury so the four all-around performers will be Jill Heggie, Stephanie Jones, Susan Cantwell and Cheryl Morrier. The only other change in the lineup will see Barbara Burmeister competing in the floor exercise event in place of Julie Myers.

Even though this meet should not be tough gymnastically, it is a personal meet for many of the gymwomen. Hemberger, Jones and Heggie will all be returning to a familiar place. All three attended Southern Connecticut while they were working with Muriel Grossman and her club in New Haven.

Hoopmen stunned by UNH in triple OT at Cage, 78-76

By BOB HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

New Hampshire guard Keith Dickson threw in a driving, twisting layup with eight seconds left in the third overtime period to give the Wildcats a 78-76 win over UMass before 3200 last night at the Cage.

Dickson's hoop ended what had to be the dullest triple overtime game in basketball history. Each team was able to score just 10 points in the 15 overtime minutes before Dickson put a stop to it.

"I was just trying to penetrate and draw a foul," said an excited Dickson after the contest. The sophomore guard from Rockland was cutting from right to left in the lane and had to twist his body back to lay it in.

For UMass, it was a well-deserved loss, according to coach Jack Leaman. "We weren't ready to play ball," said Leaman. "We were very selfish out there. We had five individuals trying to do five individual things."

Still, with all their lackadaisical play, the Minutemen had penty of opportunities to win it. Alex Eldridge, who suffered through an off night of three for 13 shooting, made both ends of a one-and-one with just five seconds remaining in the second overtime to put the Minutemen up by two 74-72.

But suddenly after Eldridge's second shot, there was UNH's Paul Dufour (26 points) streaking away all alone to send the game into the final overtime.

"I guess I have to take the blame for that," said Leaman. "But I can't imagine anyone who's played any basketball letting that happen. For the life of me I can't figure out what happened."

The Minutemen had broken into an early 15-7 lead, and looked to be in command from the start. But UNH, hustling and taking advantage of some poor UMass shots and behind some hot outside shooting from Dufour, grabbed a 40-37 halftime lead.

"They outhustled us, they out-scrapped us — I could feel this coming. I could sense this in the locker room before the game," said Leaman.

The coach had some choice words for his squad in the halftime locker room, but it didn't seem to help. UNH opened the second half with two Peter Laskaris buckets, and went on to build leads of as much as 12 (58-46) midway through the second half.

Jim Town, the Minutemen's leading scorer with 23 points, came off the bench at this point to put in a jumper, a foul shot and another jumper to spark a comeback that finally tied the contest at 66 with 33 seconds left in regulation time.

Each team scored just one basket in the first OT, UNH on a short jumper by Steve Singelais (12 points) and UMass on a Derick Claiborne (15 points) jumper.

The second overtime was better, although by that time Town and Brad Johnson had fouled out for UMass, Laskaris and center Tom Cavanaugh for the Wildcats. In the final overtime, the Wildcats stalled for more than three minutes before Dickson's game-winner.

Rimwomen take second in row by besting poor-shooting Cats

By JOHN LOWNEY
Collegian Staff

Normally when a basketball team is outshot 23-2 at the foul line, it loses, but the UMass women's squad had plenty of offensive spark to exploit New Hampshire's weak outside shooting in a decisive 80-63 win yesterday afternoon.

UMass, now 13-3, started slowly and finished slowly, but Sue Peters (23 points), Cheryl Carey (14) and Nancy O'Neil (10) each went on scoring sprees to keep the Minutewomen comfortably ahead.

New Hampshire moved the ball well against UMass, but the Wildcats lacked the necessary shooting touch to contend with the running Minutewomen.

New Hampshire, like many of the Minutewomen's opponents this season, outplayed UMass for the first few minutes. The one-two punch of scrappy guards Kathy Sanborn (21 points) and aggressive forward Jean Giarusso (22) paced the Wildcats to a 21-18 lead with less than six minutes left in the half.

UMass then awakened as O'Neil hit a short jumper, a layup after a Carey steal, and another inside jumper. Carey then hit Peters for a layup before Maura Supinski hit one of her patented drives for a 28-21 UMass lead.

The Minutewomen, having finally regained their shooting eyes, continued to harass the ice-cold Wildcats, turning wild shots into fast-break layups. Peters' last second 35-footer gave UMass a solid 44-28 halftime lead.

The Minutewomen continued to take it to New Hampshire in the second half, as Carey, whose defense and ballhandling in the first half was superb, hit from the corners to supplement the strong inside play of centers Lu Fletcher and Ginny Peebles.

Fletcher, recovering from a sprained ankle, looked good and should be strong for Saturday's encounter with Southern Connecticut. She combined with forwards O'Neil, Supinski and Chris Basile to pull down 36 rebounds.

She filled a key position on defense, too, despite the large number of fouls called against UMass. Coach Mary Ann Ozdarski commented, "We were a little lazy at times, but we mixed our zone and man-to-man defenses well. New Hampshire was sticky and the refs just called a tight game."

Wildcat coach Joyce Mills thought her team lost because of unusually poor shooting. "We just missed too many layups for which we have no excuse, but UMass is definitely a very good team."

UMASS (80) — Basile 1-0-2, O'Neil 5-0-10, Fletcher 4-0-8, Peters 11-1-23, Henry 4-0-8, Peebles 3-0-6, Supinski 3-0-6, Carey 7-0-14, McHugh 1-1-3, Martinelli 0-0-0, Hutchinson 0-0-0, Totals: 39-2-80.

UNH (63) — McCarthy 3-2-8, Bolten 1-1-3, Giarusso 7-8-22, Pyne 0-0-0, Sanborn 6-9-21, Delisle 2-1-5, Ring 0-2-2, Cocco 1-0-2, Totals: 20-23-63.

Matmen flattened out

By BOB HASKELL
Collegian Staff

The UMass wrestling team lost 32-15, to a talented squad of grapplers from Mass. Maritime Academy last night in front of an enthusiastic crowd at Boyden Gym.

The match started optimistically enough, with Maritime having to forfeit its match at 134 lbs., giving the Minutemen six quick points, but things went downhill from there for the home team.

After UMass dropped their first two matches, the fans were treated to a classic matchup at 142 lbs., between Steve Jabaut for the Minutemen and Mitch Murray for the Academy. Jabaut held the lead at 7-2 late in the match, when Murray put on a nifty display of moves to tie up the match. The match ended in a draw.

"That was the turning point," remarked UMass coach Dave Amato after the contest, "When Murray pulled out that tie our guys just went flat. We weren't using our heads out there tonight."

The Minutemen looked lethargic through many of the matches. One bright spot was the performance of Mike Riley at 177 lbs. Riley wrestled tough in winning his match, 6-2, against a taller opponent.

Dennis Fenton surprised no one at all by manhandling his burly adversary, winning handily, 8-0, and raising his record for the year to an impressive 13-0.

Amato was understandably disappointed after the match. "We were really bad out there tonight. We were asleep, and they came to wrestle. It's as simple as that," said the former UMass star and first-year coach.

The Minutemen, now 5-11 on the season, take to the road on Saturday when they travel to New Haven, Conn. to do battle with the Yale Bulldogs. Match time is 2:30.

The next home match is scheduled for Tuesday, February 22 against UConn at 7:30.

Don't take this to heart

There was an awful lot of mail passing through the nation's post offices this past Monday, as millions of lovers expressed their innermost affections for one another. And, as is true when a quarterback throws many passes, not every valentine reaches its intended receiver. One of those occasional mix-ups occurred when a large manila envelope mis-addressed "Occupant — Campus Center" landed in the Collegian office.

Somewhere there are probably a few professional athletes who are reading 'Letters to the Editor' intended for this daily publication, because there were some valentines inside the manila envelope, and I found that ... well, I guess I'd best let the envelope's contents do their own talking.

Parker Bros. Games

To George Atkinson; a real pro,
You ran willy-nilly
To knock Lynn Swann silly;
You beat on Russ Francis's snoot.
You threw a left, lopin'
Right out in the open,
And still came away with the loot.
Receivers called "foul play."
Yet you had a field day,
And made the whole thing look like fun;
I couldn't do better,
So send me a letter
Explaining just how it is done.
Please be my valentine,
"Chuckie" Manson

To Bobby Orr; a good provider,
The food's on the table, the car's full of gas;
The kids' teeth are straight now, from braces, alas.
And we can buy coffee, and shop in a spree;
Our future is rosy, Bob, thanks to your knee.
Much love,
Dr. Carter Rowe

To my favorite boxer; Richard Dunn,
The style with which you did your thing
Just set my heart a-flutter;
With tootsies rooted to the ring,
You turned to peanut butter.
The mighty oak would seem to bend
Next to your lack of motion;
And green leaves sprout from your rear end,
As flowers grown in Goshen.
Yes, you stood still, with offered jaw,
Though Ali stung you, like a bee;
In short, I think I never saw
A man look much more like a tree.
With reverence,
J. Kilmer

I Love Your Songs
a book of poems by Eric N. Grubinger available through the author

By John Zieman

I met and interviewed Eric N. Grubinger when he came to the Collegian to place an ad for the mail order of his book. His book, I Love Your Songs, is a very different sort of manuscript, the product of a quite unusual individual. I use the term "individual" because he has done what many struggle for, and then followed his conscience beyond outward success.

Perspective

I list my observations here, full well aware that I can see no more of our whole world than a small, itching crab, can see of me.

—Eric Grubinger

After being Honorably Discharged from the Navy in 1946, Eric went on to take a degree in Electrical Engineering from Princeton in 1948, and, ten years later, earned a Master's Degree in Business Administration. His resume published in his book, is most impressive. Describing his job as a "conceptual consultant," he taught, was director of long-range planning for a giant conglomerate, director of sales promotion for a major computer manufacturer, and worked in product management and consulting for three of the ten largest banks in the U.S. This extreme business-world success was halted by his criticism of underhanded and wasteful business techniques that quickly had him out of a steady job.

Poorer, yet rich with conscience, he added up his views and edited them into this book.

His criticism of the corporate oligarchy is well-armed, but shorter than I had hoped for. His views of life are phrased in a prosaic sort of poetic form which suits the length and breadth of the piece. Especially notable is the section on the "V-turn of the species" where he starts with Elaine Morgan's theories from "The Descent of Woman." This Darwinian approach to male-female relations yields some startling insights that we all could use.

Eric's engineering background is obvious in the clarity of his theories with supporting evidence. His perceptions may be disagreed with, but his humanity, above all, makes this book unique and enjoyable.

The only way to read I Love Your Songs, unfortunately, is by ordering it from Eric through the mail, until he (if he) markets it through a publishing house. See the ad on pg. 5 of today's Salt for the details.

BINGO!

By Jean Conley

The door bangs the cold out as the player is whisked past the threshold in a gust of wind.

"Whoosh. Didn't mean to bang that", a woman whispers as she scurries past in her low black, fur-topped boots.

"Cold one", says another as she brushes by, confusedly smoothing down her coat and removing her scarf, all the while taking the admission money from her wallet.

They come at least once a week, sometimes winning big, sometimes breaking even, and sometimes they're even in the hole $10. But that doesn't stop them. They like to play Bingo.

The crowd is small tonight at St. Mary's parish in Northampton, and it seems that most the players will be female, of different ages but most over 50, and if clothes are any indication of wealth, these women are most likely a part of the working class.

Indeed, Bingo has emerged as a working class game. Tittered at by the rich and many aspiring young college students, most from the working class themselves, Bingo has become a favorite "sport" of the working class. The stakes are small, in most cases you lose no more than $10 a night, although you can win more than $1000. And, Bingo is played in and is the only gamble sanctioned by the Church.

A stately, fur-coated woman with yellow hair, ushered in on a gust of wind seems not to fit in with the crowd that has arrived so far. She gives a two-rows-of- several-small - white- teeth smile, she's probably a professor escaping the dogged intellectualism for a few hours of fun.

An older couple arrives. He seats her, puts her "lucky chips" in a recycled margarine cup beside her, plants a light kiss on her cheek. "Good luck", is all he says, almost imperceptibly, and is gone.

The margarine cup, incidentally, is one of the marks of a hard core Bingo player. With a knitted or crocheted top, the cup holds chips and "lucky" porcelain animals, tiny rag dolls and even lucky pieces of cloth.

The first game starts quickly. No one wants to chat with friends at any length. Most are too busy spreading out cards and rubbing their lucky trinkets. The caller, a rotund, red-faced man of fifty, announces that the pot is small, "less than $1000". The players groan.

The "Early Bird", the first game of the evening, is also the first special game. There will be six such games tonight — "O's", where all the spaces under the "O" in Bingo have to be filled in. There are "I's", "Round Robin", "Cover All", and "X's". "Winner Take All" tonight is "G's", with a continuance to construct a Butterfly for what remains in the pot. The Butterfly is the last game, the game everyone is waiting for.

The win is quick in Early Bird, being just regular Bingo or covering four corners. Some of the players watch as many as 20 cards at the same time, and three players yell Bingo at once. The $25 is split three ways.

The next four games are regular games, and everyone plays. They light up cigarettes and draw hard on them, push the long stream of smoke out through the nostrils and wait for the first number to be called. A smoke cloud clings to the players and mingles with the smell of coffee in the back of the room. No one talks.

Two people suddenly yell "Bingo", and the players' stiff backs curve back into the chairs. They take another drag off their cigarettes and shoot new smoke into the room.

The woman seated across the table has not said a word. Her husband's good-luck kiss, implanted some two hours ago, seems not to be working. She has at least 15 cards, and she has bought all of the "specials". Most of the players have. She marks the enters of the special cards with a blue dauber, and waits for the numbers to be called.

Still she doesn't win anything, and simply stares at the player opposite who yells "Bingo", triumphantly. It's her second yell of the evening.

During intermission, most of the players don't leave their seats. They talk for the first time.

"I love to play. It relaxes me," says one woman between drags on a long, slim cigarette. "I almost didn't come, it was so cold." "Oh, isn't it." "Freezing," echo two other women.

Not much of the acrid-smelling coffee or honey-glazed donuts are sold, and the intermission is brief.

The second half of the evening begins with the third special game, "I's" to continue to a "T" for $75, and the win is slow. Each number called adds a little tension, lessens the player's chances for a win if he doesn't have the number. Finally, after 10 or 11 minutes of silence, set faces and stiff spines, comes the cry of Bingo.

Groan.

People groan a lot in this game.

"O 66. That was the number I was waiting for and I would have had it", says one woman. But she's not angry. You come so close so often in this game.

Maybe this explains the apparent lack of enthusiasm of the winners. The games move along quickly, but the tension is almost constant, and after a while the tension does not inflate and burst like a balloon any more. Rather it becomes the ebb and flow of a tide, undulating slightly when the win is called. The groans become reflex.

By 10 o'clock, the Butterfly of $160 had flown into the waiting hands of a grey-haired man who had not been able to attain a win all evening.

The games all over, the woman so seemingly placid across the table finally shows her frustration in banging the plastic cover back down on her margarine container. She sits back again, calm.

The winners allow themselves tight-lipped smiles, the losers shrug. They sift back out into the wind, but they'll be back.

The Phonz Phenomena

By Greg Tarlin

Let us now pause to consider the phenomena that is 'the Fonz' (star of 'Happy Days'. Not since 'Uncle Milty' Berle — Mr. Television himself — has there been such a beloved figure gracing our picture tubes. This duck-tailed paragon of 'cool' has not only situated himself atop the all-important Nielson Ratings, but has, at the same time, endeared himself to such a cross-section of Americans as to nearly defy description.

'The Fonz', and 'Happy Days' itself, cannot be dismissed merely as some Jr. High pipedream or cultural fad. The fact that it is the most widely viewed program in a nation in which everyone watches television (there are more TV sets in the U.S. than bathtubs) does not allow such dismissal. Rather, it should be acknowledged that the number one program in this country says a great deal about its people. Critics were quick to point this out with the former No. 1; they have been extraordinarily slow to do so with 'Happy Days'.

To find out just what it is that 'Happy Days' and 'the Fonz' have to say about us, it is first necessary to examine the program itself. 'Happy Days' came on the air three years ago and, on initial viewing, showed slim chance of survival in the TV Prime Time jungle.

Basically it was an 'American Graffiti' rip-off, counting strongly on a 50's nostalgia fad that was already on the wane. It's star was Richie Cunningham — a teenaged 'Opie' from Andy Griffith days, who, although fairly likable, obviously did not have the appeal necessary to draw a mass audience.

His sidekicks, Ralph Malph and Potsy Weber, were funny and more than adequate in their roles, but the role of sidekick does not carry a show. Richie's family was an average TV family — dim-witted, good-natured mother; constantly perplexed father; lovable, brat sister; (the older brother was barely ever seen, so doesn't really count). What then, could possibly raise this incredibly routine sit-com base to the grand heights it stands at today? Well, I'm glad you asked that question. What else but 'the Fonz'?

'The Fonz', as we're all well aware of by now, is the real star of 'Happy Days', and has been so ever since the show's writers realized just what they had created. Fonzie is the hood with the heart of gold. He is the coolest dude in Milwaukee, and the toughest one as well; nobody messes with 'the Fonz'.

Most importantly, Fonz has the most incredible mass appeal in the industry. People of every age like 'the Fonz' — all children, most teenagers, some adults, a few oldsters, and a large percentage of college students. I, myself, have witnessed as many as 25 dorm residents in front of one TV set intently watching 'the Fonz'.

The cause of Fonzie's appeal is easily understandable; the width and scope of that appeal is less so. 'The Fonz' embodies all that we have yearned for since our adolescent fears and neuroses first set in.

Fonz has supreme confidence; he feels he can do anything and do it well and, of course, he can. He can fix any machine, get any girl, win any contest, out-talk and out-fight any mere mortal. He invariably does and says the right thing at the right time. When 'the Fonz' asks a girl out by telephone, he doesn't mumble, beg, negotiate, and lose his voice. His method is more direct and extremely enviable:

'Hello... Gloria... the Fonz... Saturday night... 8:00... Arnold's... Be there. (click)'

This carricature 'the Fonz' portrays has been done before. James Bond and Clint Eastwood are two obvious examples, and each ones' considerable success can be attributed to the fact that the formula works. But, while Bond and Eastwood are awesome figures of incredible perfection, 'the Fonz' is imperfect and vulnerable, and this, perhaps, is the secret of his enormous appeal.

Often, he cannot solve a problem by himself, and must turn to Richie for help. Occasionally he finds himself in a jam and requires assistance from friends and the Cunninghams. Most importantly, while Bond and Eastwood are loners who use women and friends like napkins, 'the Fonz', like all humans, requires love. In fact, he thrives on it, not only from his countless girlfriends, but from the Cunninghams and his friends. It is, I believe, an easily identified with trait.

Dynamic Drama

By Lindsey Lane

Until 1965 "Mrs. Dally" was performed as two one act plays: "Mrs. Dally Has a Lover" and "Today is Independence Day." On Friday, February 11, the City Studio Theater performed the combined version of the play: a two act drama entitled "Mrs. Dally."

As the audience settles around the one room living-dining-kitchen area, the play unwittingly begins with a hissing radiator and metallic clicking of a travelling alarm clock performing an ever present backdrop in Mrs. Dally's life, drawing the circumferential audience into the living room, stalking the heart of the insidious dialogue.

The play focuses on two climactic days in the life of Mrs. Evalyn Dally, one in which, after an afternoon of lovemaking, she shares her still tender emotions with her young lover, and another where she and her husband confront the rubble of their lives together trying to find the love that once still exists.

Janice Collett Cuddy maintains the pivot point of the play around which the two men in her life reflect her hopes and, more importantly, her inability to let herself be satisfied. Ms. Cuddy does well. The play could be static. Instead, as the dialogue ventures into her heart as wife and woman, she animates her setting as best a woman can whose life is confined to a two room apartment. While these two acts are climactic excerpts from her life, she maintains an on-going believability and character honesty. This is her world.

Frankie, played by Jay Charbonneau, is her lover. He is embarking on manhood. Rather than scoring his way into manhood with young women, he finds himself in bed with a woman who enjoys her sexuality and who forces him to share the awkward emotions after the act. Jay Charbonneau heightens Frankie's clumsy transition to adult sexuality. Learning how to love, learning how to love a woman, Frankie squirms. He tries to understand. One hopes he will.

William Smitrovich plays Sam, 'the brute.' On one hand Sam has forgotten how to love, yet Mr. Smitrovich reveals the undeniable tenderness a man tries to express. Together, Mr. Smitrovich and Ms. Cuddy portray the static dynamics of their relationship. They shout. They try to ignore each other. They pit themselves against each other. They accept the space between them as shared without venturing into it.

"Mrs. Dally" proffers a solid dynamic drama. If the players had resisted punctuating their characters with silence too long to be painful, if they had not lingered over dialogue too simple to be singularly dynamic, they would have been better able to involve the audience in the various crises. Instead, we yawn, not from disinterest, but from impatience with a discussion that is not heady enough to justify the lengthy pauses.

"Mrs. Dally" is a 'real' play. The players present a living situation we know well. No matter how much or how well we understand our interactions as men and women, "Mrs. Dally" provides us with a well-crafted and well-acted opportunity to shed more illumination on our lives. THREE ONE-ACT PLAYS
Smith College

Inhumanity

By Nancy Bernstein and Gail Goldberg

The Hally Flanagan Studio Theater at Smith College was the setting for three one-act plays presented by members of the theater department, Feb. 14 and 15. "A Slight Ache" by Harold Pinter, "Aria da Capo" by Edna St. Vincent Millay and "Rites" by Maureen Duffy were powerful in their acting and message. Each play carried the theme of the inhumanity we inflict upon each other.

"A Slight Ache" focused on the relationship of a married couple and how they deal with their past, each other and themselves through the silent and often threatening presence of a matchseller. He enabled them to speak in ways which they otherwise could not. The uncaring feelings they possessed were epitomized by the death scene at the end, where Flora walks over her husband and out of the house.

During the play, Edward was fearful of his loss of identity to the matchseller and he tried to establish it through the use of his material possessions. He was unable to maintain his identity and relinquished it to the matchseller, thus becoming a non-entity. The set was interesting, using segments of the entire stage and blackouts in very strategic places. The acting was fairly good, especially the role of Flora, the long-suffering wife.

"Aria da Capo" was a second study in this vein of insensitivity. The play is a commentary on relationships, both shallow and intense and the reasons for some relationships being as they are. There are two mini-plays running simultaneously here and they each add their own dimension. A large part of the play focuses on a friendship which, when under the stress of a "Game", rules break down and winner takes all. In this case, the two were attempting to kill each other off for the respective wealth. The game turns sour and the playing becomes real, with both being killed in the end. As the evolution of the game becomes a reality, each man is caught up in it more and more, until they both want to stop the "game" and go back to the way they were. They realize the futility of their war, but neither can initiate its end, because it's gone too far and it's too late. Throughout their scene, we hear dialogue from the first two players, epitomizing their farce of a relationship and making a mockery of relationships which do have substance. In the end, they cover the bodies and procede with their scene, oblivious to everything and disinterested in that which might interrupt their mundane existence. The acting in this play was fair, although the performances of the two martyred friends were to be commended, if somewhat over-dramatized.

"Rites" was the most powerful of the three plays. In the unusual setting of a women's public restroom, it dealt with interactions of many levels of society's strata and how each reacted with the male agressor. It analyzed the female role in society, her feeling of abuse, lack of need for men, and the desire to break away from male brutality and animalistic tendencies. Tragically, they display these very same characteristics which they so vehemently denounce, culminating in the group murder of a woman, dressed in masculine clothing, who intrudes on their meeting. Although the British accents often detracted from the overall performance, the acting was excellent and created an emotionally draining piece. Special effects added an eerie dimension, literally setting the stage for what was to come.

Coming away from the theater department's Workshop Festival production, one cannot feel positively about our interactions towards one another. Symbolically, realistically and in the extreme, the plays provided certain insights into our treatment of fellow human beings. Unfortunately, most students will have been unable to view this trilogy. However, given the opportunity, we recommend any or all as an introspective study.

Conquering The World

By Susan Galer

Recently, some people I know have been overtaken by a strange mania in terms of dealing with their free time. Pinball, bridge, and Monopoly have been thrown out in favor of a fairly well known Parker Brother's game called "Risk." I hate "Risk." For those fortunate few who don't know what "Risk" is, I will explain what it's all about.

The board has on it a map of the world, with the continents being design ted by their specific color. Each person gets a certain amount of countries and armies (little multi-colored wooden pieces), which are distributed on his—her property. The object of the game is to take over the entire world by attacking all the other players' countries. Both the attacker and defender throw dice and the highest roll wins the battle. The loser's armies are taken off the board and the victor goes on through the rest of the world to kill off the rest of the players so he—she can rule the world.

Three or more people can play, but it's ideal for four, so that's what usually happens is that players pair off and there are two separate battles going on at all times.

I'm extremely displeased at this strange comeback of "Risk," because it brings back bad memories. My brother got the game for a gift about eight years ago and developed a similar craze for playing it. Forced into playing, I would delay the game and make it as long as possible in between turns so that eventually we would either have to eat supper or go to bed and the game would be over. However, my brother (clever person that he was), cleared off a table in the playroom and declaring it off limits to all (on penalty of extreme physical discomfort), would leave the game indefinitely set up so that upon waking up in the morning, lo and behold, there were the little wooden armies waiting patiently to be annihilated in the morning.

I don't get off on violence, at least not to wooden pieces. I could get into a little arbitrary barbarity in dealing with people, but dice throwing at inanimate objects in order to rise as a facist leader of the world is just not my style. The most satisfying memories I associate with Risk was dumping out all those thousands of little multi-colored pieces on the floor, mixing them up a little and getting a glimpse of the look on my brother's face close behind me as I ran up the stairs before locking myself in the bathroom till my mother got home.

Besides personal objections concerning arbitrary violence and "Risk," I think that the game is basically unAmerican. The American dream does not hold that you're supposed to simply bomb people out of existence. In America we do things logically, with a premeditated strategy, in a bit more civilized manner.

With this view in mind, one can easily see how Monopoly could be my favorite game. What could be more American than setting up monstrous conglomerations along a board and just sitting back to wait for people to come along so you can charge them astronomical rent fees? In Monopoly you don't bomb your opponent to bits with a few paltry throws of the dice. Monopoly enables you to quietly, efficiently, extract people's life savings as they make their way around the board. And you're benevolent as well as compromising. When your opponent is forced to mortgage their property to pay the $2,000 rent charge for landing on Boardwalk, you offer to buy the property from them in exchange for non-payment of the rent. This kind of compromising is taking place all through the game.

There's also a lot of complex premeditation as you look around the board before your turn to see who's coming up to your property, and then decide to spend your last cent on another house in order to get a hotel and maybe squeeze a few more rent dollars out of your opponent.

Monopoly is very realistic. You're directed by little yellow and orange cards to pay arbitrary taxes, forced into paying out escalating amounts of money to utility companies while you are constantly giving out large sums of money to the property owners. It is impossible to draw a more authentic picture of real life in the United States.

As far as I'm concerned, these people I know can sense — lessly maneuver little wooden pieces around a board and fulfill their fantasies of becoming another Hitler. I intend to get that real estate, make some deals and accumulate all the wealth I possibly can from my opponents as I win at Monopoly (which I usually do). I've never won that ridiculous game called Risk and I don't intend to.

Risk can go rot. I will never play again.

Back To Backgammon: A Gentleman's Game

By Alison Kenney

You don't need a house to fall on you to realize that Backgammon is definitely back. Ranking high in popularity along with Monopoly, chess and checkers, one reads about it in almost every magazine, sees it in every dorm room, and walks by it in almost every department store, including the Mountain Farms Mall. The boards and pieces have been constructed of every material known to mankind from cork to ivory to American cheese. Why is it that this age-old form of entertainment seems to be experiencing quite a renaissance? Certainly there has been no international tournament like that of Bobby Fisher who incurred the chess fad of the early '70's.

Backgammon can be traced to precursers about 3000 BC, according to British archaeologist Sir Leonard Whoolley, who made certain findings in the tombs of Ur. Since then numerous spin-offs have come and gone in their short lived popularity only to be equalled and surpassed by the classic, also known as Tric-Trac. So Backgammon isn't really "back". It's been around the whole time, maybe we just haven't noticed it.

"But," you ask, "how could a game outlast so many other institutions in society for nearly 5000 years?" The proof is in the pudding. Because Backgammon did originate so long ago the rules and plot of the game are basically simple.

First of all, there is no need to round up droves of people to get a good game underway. It takes only two people to play and requires no uniform or special padding as it is, of course, a non-contact sport. The materials are simple, pretty inexpensive, and easy to obtain. Nearly every store in the Mountain Farms Mall carries Backgammon. All you need is a board with two alternating colors, a pair of dice, and 30 "stones" or pieces, 15 of each coordinate with the alternating colors of the board.

The directions are basic, although reading one of those "How To Win At Backgammon" books is not recommended for beginners. Literature such as that is a gimmick that consumers are enticed to buy along with a Backgammon board for the "person who has everything." Perhaps when one becomes an expert player one can somehow decipher the jibberish and jargon and relate it to a practical game, although it's highly doubtful. These books look impressive but are actually public outlets for verbose, frustrated novelists or ill-fated Backgammon players. Definitely have someone who you've seen play show you how.

The object of the game is to move your fifteen pieces around and off of the board before your opponent does. However, the trick is in the dice. If you have a good hand at rolling and a grasp of modern mathematics, you're all set.

But Backgammon is a "gentlemen's game" and it is important to keep in mind the unwritten rules that give the game that sense of class. For instance, always remember to pick up your die after you've made your move. And remember also that once you have picked up the die, there's no turning back.

It is also important to keep in mind that although the fanatical Backgammon participant seems to be a stickler about these unwritten rules, you will soon find that it is people like them that keep the Backgammon art alive.

Don't be discouraged. When you first play it's quite a culture shock. You feel as if you've given in to the game, learned it, played it, probably lost an innumberable amount of times at it, and your original, before-hand opinion of it has remained the same — it's dull. Give it time, don't give up. Once you've mastered all the quirpy rules and the graceful talent of sliding the "stones" around the board, you'll gradually absorb a strategy, all your own. It's somewhat like the subplot of a soap opera. You pick out what seem to be minor details and make them work to your advantage for a victorious end result.

Backgammon's a classic as it's game that'll never go out of style. Unlike the mini-skirt or the Monkees, you'll never throw it away, you'll just keep playing it, and playing it, and playing it...

THE NEW GAMES BOOK
edited by Andrew Fluegelman

reviewed by Rich Pioli

On Thursday, January 27 in the S.U.B. 350 people rediscovered the idea that playing is for adults as well as children with a little help from Pamela Kekich and Matt Weinstein of Playfair. It was an evening which most of us can only regret we didn't attend — an evening of activity, cooperation and more importantly love.

However, there is something you can do in order to experience some of the exhilaration that went around the other night. You can establish your own Playfair with the help of the New Games Foundation's The New Games Book — Play Hard, Play Fair, Nobody Hurt.

Burton Naiditch, New Games Foundations Executive Director explains the concept of New Games best:

> "New Games is not a list of suggested forms and structures. Nor is it a foundation dedicated to perpetuating itself. New Games is an attitude that encourages people to play together. To learn only the form and not grasp the essence would be to miss the life line that gives rise to that attitude. The purpose of the New Games Foundation is to serve as a focal point for fostering and communicating this concept."

Can there be anything better than getting together to experience and enjoy the fun and skill of games without the sense of loss which usually accompanies grinding competition? The foundation believes that humans did not evolve only through competition with nature and other humans; rather that such negative competitive instincts are learned. This brings us to the games themselves where only the positive is emphasized in our abilities and we can celebrate them, where we can enjoy playing rather than strive to win.

The first selection of games (and remember, no one is exempt — families, friends, older people can play) is Games for Two wherein all games fall under very active, active and moderate subtitles. The same categories are used for all other game sections. Schmerltz, a very active game for two, consists of throwing a cotton tube sock with a rubber ball inside it to your partner who must catch it by the tail with one hand. In Vampire, a moderate game for two dozen, everyone mills around, eyes closed until the designated vampire snatches one of the innocents and lets out a blood-curdling scream. People Pass, a game for The More the Better, is exactly what it sounds like — passing people down over your head to the back of the line.

In all the 60 games included the body is constantly active, " he prize is play itself, a life fully experienced."

Also included is a Recipe for a New Games Tournament based on the First Tournament held at Gerbode Preserve, North of the Golden Gate Bridge, where 6,000 people attended in October, 1973. With that kind of atmosphere looming who wouldn't participate?

In fact, perhaps a start would be to hold more New Games Tournaments on a weekly basis at the S.U.B. or C.C. where, in time our whole campus would see and experience the beauty in these activities. We can meet, enjoy each other, and celebrate being alive. With this much to gain who cares about winning? Simply Play Hard — Play Fair — Nobody Hurt. Take a look around for this book and share it.

Better Than The Blue Wall

...and speaking of games...Ever consider reading The Penguin Book of Sunday Times Crosswords? Don't. Just flip through it and enjoy the thrill of mastering the art of crossword puzzle-mania. The compilers who constructed the work handily included a guide in order to solve these sometimes eternal enigmas along with humorous comments that will keep you chuckling all the way to your pencil sharpener. None of the games are too complicated for a Umie to successfully conquer so live dangerously and do them up in pen...maybe even a bic banana. Do consider this literary alternative to the Blue Wall.

Dance

Winnipeg Ballet

By Margaret R. Chase

When I walked into the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall last Friday night I was filled with the excitment and anticipation I always feel before seeing a ballet company and this production did not disappoint me. The Royal Winnepeg Ballet of Canada impressed me with their exuberance, versatility, and professionalism.

Friday night's program opened with a piece choreographed by Benjamen Harkarvey called "Grand Pas Espagnol," a dance for three couples in the ornate, classical Spanish style, popularized by the Russians in the 19th century. The piece was an effective program opener for it certainly expressed the timelessness of this lovely style of dance, and allowed the dancers to show their ability in the classical technique. There were divertisments for the men and women, as well as enthralling pas de deux for each couple, ending with the traditional grand finale and a striking pose. The only thing I noticed was a lot of tension in the dancers' arms and necks which occasionally marred the ease and grace of the choreography, along with a lack of eye contact.

After a short intermission, we were presented with "Pas de Deux Romantique" choreographed by Jack Carter, a duet danced in the Romantic style following the conventional pattern of a pas de deux. The dance was accented with playful mime and was obviously enjoyed by both the dancers and the audience.

"Family Scenes," choreographed by Oscar Ariaz departs from classical ballet and moves into the style of theatrical modern dance; depicting and exploring dramatic relationships within a Victorian family. The piece relied heavily on gesture and tableaus to explore the diverse array of emotions shared and experienced by the members of this family as they related with each other. The piece was very effective and I'm sure everybody in the audience found something or somebody they could identify with. At times it got a little melodramatic and I found the choreography somewhat repetitious in places, but neither of those things served to disturb the overall effect of this piece.

The company concluded with a very clever and lively piece in 7 sections called "The Hands," choreographed by Paddy Stone. The first section was danced to a poem by Denise Levertov, recited by Paul Scofield, and was danced by the entire company. It introduced and explored the possibilities of movement initiated with the hands — what kind of shapes they could make, what they could convey enotionally including a multi-appendaged idol madly waving all six arms and legs in every direction.

More amusing was a lively "knock-em-dead" pas de deux to "La Ci Darem la Mano" ("There We Will Take Each Other's Hand") from Mozart's opera Don Giovanni, in which each dancer tried his or her best to upstage the other. The ballerina madly fluttered her fan in her partner's face, while he was none too careful about throwing around his cape (which eventually ended over her head!)

Another section made use of a beautiful lyrical version of "I Want to Hold Your Hand" employing clever lighting techniques. The dancers made shadow figures of spiders and butterflies against a huge screen so it seemed as if the shadows actually danced across the stage.

The last section in the piece was danced to the rousing gospel tune, "He's Got the Whole World in His Hands," and although I think Mr. Stone (the choreographer) might have relied a bit too much on special effects and humor, and not enough on dancing. He still succeeded in infusing in the audience a lively spirit by the end of the evening.

The Royal Winnepeg Ballet is a company that I'm sure will always present a program that will entertain, touch, and dazzle you to see them time and time again.

CHICK COREA
My Spanish Heart
(Polyder)

Chick Corea, inspired by his recent trip to Spain, has put together a two-record set in which he combines his own unique keyboard style with the rythmic music of Spain and Latin America. The result is an uneven, but extremely interesting album.

The combination of progressive jazz and Spanish Flamenco patterns seems to work best when Mr. Corea sticks to acoustic piano. The assorted moogs and organs don't seem to blend as well; they cover up lines and, on occasion, sound like electronic ping-pong games. However, when the Latin flavor is evident and Mr. Corea is his usual accomplished self on piano, the match is extraordinary. Such is the case on most of side two and parts of the other three. With both strings and horns in the background, old friend Stanley Clarke on acoustic bass, and the under-rated Steve Gadd on drums, the music is, at the very least, executed skillfully. Mr. Corea even uses some Flamenco hand-clapping to spice up the atmosphere. The solos by both Mr. Corea and Mr. Clarke are always brief and tasteful. That Chick Corea has been around vinyl for a long time and has learned what is pleasant for the listener is obvious. He has composed, arranged, and produced every cut.

It is nearly impossible to pick high spots on any good double album, but my favorite cut on My Spanish Heart is 'Armanda's Rhumba', in which the incredible violinist Jean Luc-Ponty cameos and, with Mr. Corea, performs an impressive duet.

My Spanish Heart is also significant in that it is a venture by an established artist into new forms, a far too scarce undertaking and producer of even scarcer successes.

ABBA
(Atlantic)

At no time do the idiots who make up the majority of rock "critics" expose themselves more plainly than when they are attempting to review ABBA. They tend to lump all their work together and condescendingly describe it as "irresistible garbage." How can something that they find so enjoyable be worthless? Their answer: Abba's lyrics are "trivial." How assinine. Why are artists whose words are supposedly more "meaningful" but whose music is far less memorable accorded much higher status? To be consistent, these cretins should consider instrumental music (such as practically all of their precious jazz) the worst of all.

The fact is that ABBA have given us some of the finest rock'n'roll of all time: "Waterloo", "S.O.S.", and "So Long" rank up there with the best of anyone. Don't listen to those fools in quest of respectability whose idea of a good time is analyzing Joni Mitchell's neurotic warblings, or those snobs who insist that anything with an immediately pleasurable melody has to be hopelessly hackneyed. Go get any of ABBA's previous albums and enjoy yourself. But don't get this one.

Unfortunately, ABBA's best work seems to be already behind them. In pursuit of ever-broader appeal, they have in the past year or so been moving farther and farther away from rock toward novelties and MOR. Their new stuff isn't that bad, just unnecessary, and it's such a shame to see so much talent being wasted. I hate to have to acknowledge it, but ABBA have followed in the footsteps of Slate (ever hear of them, poor deprived souls?), going all too quickly from having the most exciting sound around to being entirely dispensible. Arrival is recommended only to Carpenters fans who want to upgrade their tastes.

FILM \ The Oscars

By John Matthew

Oscars anyone?...Every time this year Hollywood prepares to arouse itself via the Academy Awards. The spectacle, the last touch with the golden years of the star system,continue to be the most grandiose event conceivable.

The Academy, which casts the ballots that determine the 'envelopes please', sustains its arrogant existence as each year its 'members' arrive at an elegant Hollywood party, drink themselves drunk, then drop their vote which credits the talent of the industry.

The importance of these awards to the film companies is obvious. Copping the glamour stimulates biz and with $100 million in B.O. gross awaiting the winners, the push approaches obsession.

It's not the existence of such awards, but rather the method of determining the winners and the production for television that boarders on perversion.

To think that a performer's career reaches its height with such recognition, one wishes the Academy would display the same humility as is expected of the receiving artists. Their individual 'moment of triumph' appears lost in the spectacle as the Awards honor the industry rather than the performer.

Hollywood is the ultimate dehumanizing machine. One is not a person but a 'bankable' or 'unbankable' commodity. As stated, the rewards for success are great which leads to the question Hollywood performers continually ask themselves; Does anyone out here really care about me, or are they just fondling my genitals?

Most learn to live with this insincerity, but for those who don't, the Academy will offer the 'Nicolas Ray Award'. This year's winner, Freddie Prinze. He earned it, and you can be sure he got it.

ZZ TOP
Tejas
(London)

ZZ Top, America's No. 1 hard rockin' trio, composed of Billy Gibbons, Dusty Hill and Frank Beard, have always been unabashedly proud of their Texas homeland. It was their fellow Texans who originally took to them like a cactus takes to desert and thereby initiated their catapultation to the higher echelons of fame and fortune. Even today, one can drive anywhere throughout Texas and marvel at the phenomenally large number of vehicles adorned wiih ZZ Top bumper stickers. The band obviously has not forgotten their beginnings, as the title of their new album and the cover artwork (a lazing longhorn surveying the mountainous landscape of a moonlight night deep in the heart of Texas) will attest. Moreover, these new tunes still reflect the quality of life as it is lived in a great percentage of Texas' small, dull, agrarianistic communities. This repetitious lifestyle is best brought forward in such songs here as "Arrested For Driving While Blind," "El Diablo," "Pan Am Highway Blues," "Avalon Hideaway," and "She's A Heartbreaker."

From a musical standpoint, Tejas differs little if any from its predecessor of well over a year ago, the ever-popular Fandango, with the ever-popular hit single "Tush." The music is basic and elementally simple: vocals, guitar, bass, and percussion, with no keyboard instruments and no electronic gadgetry anywhere. It's hard rock with a boogie backbeat. Gibbons is the true leader of the trio and his biting guitar carries the majority of cuts as it roars and soars in perfect time with the funky rhythm section of bassist Hill and percussionist Beard. The best illustration of this concurrent blending is to be found via the opening songs to each side, "It's Only Love" on side one and "Ten Dollar Man" on side two. Both are excellent.

From first groove to last, one can virtually feel the level of intensity present which is usually only to be experienced at a live concert (of which these guys put on one of the best). It seems safe to say that ZZ Top have struck oil with Tejas. Give it a "that lil' ol' band from Texas rides again" A.

—Ross Nerenberg

THE TRAMMPS
DISCO INFERNO
(Atlantic)

I've always said: "What the world needs today is a good Trammps LP." They have proven me right twice in the past with such cuts as "Love Epidemic" and "Where Do WE Go From Here" and with their latest LP entitled "Where The Happy People Go" which I feel is one of the best disco sides of all times.

They're doing it for me again with their latest LP "Disco Inferno." If you'll pardon the pun it's a real smoker. It's another Baker Harris Young effort and I must say it's a good one. The Trammps have a wide range of vocal qualities and they use them well, the best example of this is the title cut: "Disco Inferno." On this cut the voice of Jimmy Ellis is the key element in the steady rise in intensity for the whole 10:54 of the [illegible] t to the climax which is all of a sudden upon you.

"Body Contact Contract" is the sexy song on the LP and will probably be the first single from the LP. It has the immediate appeal that people will take a liking to and sing along with on the radio.

On their last album, "Soul Searchin' Time" was the message cut, on this one it's "Don't Burn No Bridges". The message is to be nice to the folks you meet on the way up because they're the same ones you'll meet on the way down.

By no means are the Trammps a one shot act so this LP will be a factor for some time to come in the discos and R&B radio. When played it packs the dance floor and when not played it's requested. It's well worth your precious music money.

—Mario Barros

GARY WRIGHT
The Light of Smiles
(Warners)

With his initial solo album, The Dream Weaver, firmly establishing him as one of contemporary music's newest stars, ex-Spooky Toother Gary Wright has returned with an album comprised of similar material. Just as he did with Dream Weaver, so he does with The Light Of Smiles; all sounds (excepting strings, vocals, and percussion) produced via keyboard instruments played by Wright, David Foster and Pete Reilich. The mix of sentimental ballads and ripping rockers provide for a number of tunes which should be agreeable to almost anyone's moods and tastes. The most pleasing selections from the rockin' category include "I'm Alright" and "Are You Weepin'." Among the more romantic ballads, both "Time Machine" and "Empty Inside" stand out. The overriding nature of Wright's spaced personality is best revealed by the mere listing of some of this disc's song titles. We get "Water Sign," "Time Machine," "I Am The Sky," "Phantom Writer" and "Child Of Light," among others. Yet, this album's lone negative feature lies in the fact that, despite all of the spacey framework (titles, lyrics, instruments), many of the cuts become overly predictable and some of the impactually biting techniques lose appeal. Alas, I suppose that this is the price one must pay if he wants his music to be heard over the majority of America's radio stations, as Wright surely does. All things considered, though, The Light Of Smiles is about as fine a second effort as we could have hoped for; if you liked Dream Weaver, you'll like the follow-up, too. This time 'round, I give Gary a "Wright does little wrong." B+.

Budget proposal denounced

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

SGA Co-Presidents Paul M. Cronin and Jay A. Martus last night said a proposed $62 million budget for UMass for fiscal 1978 would lead to a devastating reduction in the quality of education at UMass.

"It's clear right now that we're in a terrible slide," said Martus. "Generally, it takes five years for an educational institution to be completely destroyed. The third year is when the blood begins to flow. This is the third year."

Cronin and Martus called for a "massive mobilization" against Governor Michael S. Dukakis' "level funding" budget of $62 million, saying it amounted to a budget cut, because it does not include cost-of-living and other increases.

The University budget of $76 million proposed by UMass President Robert C. Wood is necessary to keep services and programs running at a "sustinance level", said Cronin.

SGA Acting Communications Director Bryan Harvey said in a telephone interview last night he was doubtful the governor's budget would be adequate.

"They're trying to stretch services over from the deficit budgets of the last two years. If this whole thing goes through 15,000 students will be able to get an adequate education, not 30,000", he said.

Dukakis and State Secretary of Education Paul Parks are expected to visit the UMass campus next Tuesday to survey school conditions. Cronin said a pre-tour conference with Dukakis is being planned.

"We're going to try to paint an honest picture of what's going on to show the Governor that additional funding is desperately needed" Cronin said. "We're glad to see he's coming."

A budget of $62 million would have a wide range of adverse effects on the University, said Martus, including a reduction in courses, the abolishment of several departments, shortages of laboratory materials, a freeze on accepting transfer students and the loss of up to 600 jobs.

In addition, Cronin said the University library could lose accreditation if a specified number of books were not purchased next year.

"What we're calling for is a recommitment by the state to low-cost, high-quality public education. Instead of losing a tremendous investment by not providing adequate funding the state should try to develop the University as a valuable asset", said Martus.

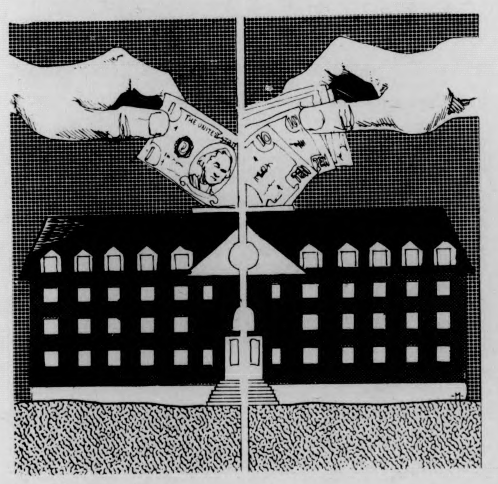
Martus and Cronin said the most effective way to increase the University's budget is through a large-scale educational program for students, parents and the 50,000 UMass alumni in Massachusetts.

We're going to wake up a sleeping giant" said Martus.

They proposed the widespread distribution of budget fact sheets and the establishment of a town meeting to confront the issues. Once the public is better-informed of the situation, said Cronin, they can intelligently approach state legislators with feasible solutions.

SGA Treasurer Thomas Kerrins said last night, "Dukakis' visit is a token symbol, like throwing a scrap of bread to the birds."

Jon Hite, SGA Commuter Senator said he felt the visit is "a wonderful political publicity stunt" and urged students and parents to voice their opposition of "level spending" by writing state legislators.



Election affects Fac-sen

By MARY ELLEN LOWNEY
Collegian Staff

The faculty senate will be affected by the election of the Massachusetts Teachers Association (MTA) as the collective bargaining agent for faculty and some staff, according to Terrence Burke, secretary of the senate.

At last night's meeting, Burke urged that past practices between the administration and the senate "should continue until new arrangements have been negotiated."

The workings of the Academic Policy Committee, the Grievance Committee, and the Program and Budget Council are most likely to be affected by the union. In particular, the cost of living pay raises for faculty will be postponed until the administration meets with the union.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery told senate members that "there are going to be changes in the relationship between the administration and the senate," but, until these changes come about, the administration will "continue working with the faculty senate where it is legally appropriate."

Secretary Burke said once the union begins, "the faculty senate may converse with the union but the administration is prohibited from negotiating on contract-related matters with any faculty group other than the union."

Larry S. Roberts, president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP), represented the union, calling it a "final recourse" due to "no apparent alternative to the continued deterioration and decline of the major public educational resource of Massachusetts."

The first union meeting, said Roberts, will be held on March first. The meeting will amend the faculty constitution to include collective bargaining and set up a negotiations committee. Memberships can also be taken out at this time.

In other action, a motion was passed to change the title of the Department of Air Science to the Department of Aerospace Studies.

Where is SU bear lair?

By TERESA M. HANAFIN
S.U. Bear Staff

An anonymous note giving an alleged location of the UMass Student Union bear is the latest development in the search for the elusive statue, missing since last semester.

An unidentified UMass fraternity was fingered by the writer of the note as the location of the wood carving. The note said two pledges of the fraternity allegedly spirited away the bear as part of an initiation rite.

A subsequent search of the fraternity in question did not uncover any trace of the statue.

Saul S. Chafin, assistant director of the UMass Dept. of Public Safety, said yesterday other fraternities in the area would be checked out "in case the statue was passed from one to another."

Check protest hits Whitmore

By M.B. ALLEN
Collegian Staff

The Revolutionary Student Brigade (R.S.B.) staged a march yesterday from the Campus Center (CC) to Whitmore Administration Building in protest of the announced abolishment of check cashing services in the Student Union.

The RSB has collected about 2400 signatures in the past three days on a petition that expressed a desire for check cashing services to continue at "the present level."

The petition was presented to John L. DeNyce, Director of Personnel and Financial Services when the procession of 15 reached the administration building. The doors were blocked when the group reached Whitmore, but RSB members were admitted to talk with DeNyce.

The RSB sees check cashing as a vital student service, according to RSB member Peter Kracht. "We don't see this as an isolated thing. There are more cuts (in student services) to come. We're going to draw the line here and start fighting from here on in."

RSB member Joel Weissman said, "We asked him (DeNyce) what would make him change his mind (about ceasing the check cashing service) and we mentioned we had a vote of support from the Student Senate."

Weissman said he hoped the Senate, as the main bargaining organization students have, would be an important element in maintaining service.

"We all understand their concerns," said DeNyce. "It is a very simple matter of economics. If there's not enough money, we'll have to start cutting."

When asked if the check cashing in Whitmore would also be closed after this semester, DeNyce said, "It looks like we're going down that road."

There has been much administration speculation about the possibility of installing a bank on campus.

Kracht said, "There's nothing wrong with having a bank, if it could provide student services. But I have my doubts about that."

The RSB members reiterated their position that they are opposed to installing a bank in the music listening room across from the Blue Wall, one of the proposed sites for a bank.

DeNyce said he thought it was likely that if a bank was opened on campus, there would be specifications in the bid documents concerning student check cashing. "We would make very strong specifications in that area," he said.

Fifteen more people joined the group at the bottom of the ramp that leads up to Whitmore.

DeNyce added, "I was pleased in the orderly way it (the demonstration) was conducted.

Town on Martha's Vineyard wants out of Massachusetts

CHILMARK, Mass. (AP) — Residents of pastoral Martha's Vineyard island, angered by the prospect of losing their only delegate to the state legislature, are trying to secede from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

And there is talk of seceding from the entire nation to become eligible for U.S. foreign aid.

Louis King, a Chilmark selectman who voted against secession, said, "The purpose of all this is publicity."

Selectmen on the island, a summer spa and a paradise for fishing and yachting, cast their 10-2 vote for secession at a meeting Wednesday night. One secessionist said he would try to convince the island's neighbor, Nantucket, to do the same.

In Colonial times, the political leanings of Nantucket were toward England. Martha's Vineyard, a little less Tory, was considered almost neutral in the Revolutionary War. And it is still common for Nantucket residents, when journeying to the mainland, to say, "I'm going to America."

Massachusetts is trying to trim its legislature from 240 to 160 members. That would lump Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket into a district with several communities from Cape Cod. The Cape Cod towns have greater year-round populations than both islands combined.

"We'll be disenfranchised," said state Rep. Terrence P. McCarthy, an independent from the Vineyard town of Oak Bluffs.

The secession was McCarthy's idea. He said he is unclear on the procedure for pulling out. But he said a proclamation will be sent to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis listing the island's grievances and its desire to secede.

Daniel Taylor, legal aide to Dukakis, said it would take considerable research to determine whether the island could secede from the state. "Give me six months and aske me then," he said.

"We're stuck out in the middle of the Atlantic. No one really knows our problems except us," said Joseph E. Sollitto Jr., chairman of the All-Island Selectmen's Association on Martha's Vineyard.

McCarthy said he may ask the congressman in whose district the island is located, Rep. Gerry Studds, to file federal legislation to make Martha's Vineyard a separate state. On the other hand, he said, "Maybe we should secede from the country. That way we'd get all sorts of foreign aid."

The islands have had their own state representatives since the commonwealth was founded in 1780.

Martha's Vineyard is within sight of the Cape Cod mainland five miles away.

NEAG seeks rep.

By ED PORTER
Collegian Staff

Northeast Area Government (NEAG) is still looking for a Student Senate representative, it was reported at last night's meeting. Senate meetings are held on Wednesday nights, and anyone interested should contact Beth Tibbetts, NEAG President, at 318 Dwight.

NEAG voted to allocate $200 to help support International Women's Week, which will be held in March. Also, $25 was allotted to help support a recycling program in Northeast and Sylvan. This money will be used to help pay a recycling coordinator to set up and oversee the program.

A band for the area's Spring semi-formal is needed. Any band or anyone knowing of an appropriate band should get in touch with Beth Tibbetts by February 28. The semi-formal will be held at the Campus Center on Friday, April 22.

Area residents are needed to help plan and form Quad Day, to be held in May. Anyone with ideas or interest should talk to their area representative.

The area pottery room, located in Dwight basement, should open up by next week. Also, NEAG will be publishing its first newsletter this week. Any resident who wishes to make an announcement should contact Beth Tibbetts.

NEAG will meet next Tuesday night in Thatcher at 6:30.

Check cashing ends in Spring

By JEAN CONLEY
Collegian Staff

Check cashing in the Student Union will probably cease during the week of Spring break, March 20-26, according to assistant Campus Center (CC) Director Bud Wilkes.

During that week, internal cash handling in the building will move to its new, safer location in room 155 of the Campus Center. Internal cash handling is not check cashing.

In respose to the proposed move, the Board of Governors (BOG) last night voted to oppose such action until the administration makes a commitment "insuring the allocation of space necessary for refurnishing or refurbishing" of a check cashing facility somewhere centrally located on campus "in addition to the facility now existing in Whitmore Administration Building, and other than those services offered by a branch of a commercial bank".

Wilkes said that regardless of the board's decision, plans will go ahead on the internal cash handling move. BOG by-laws say no move should occur without approval from the board.

BOG member Steven Latter said at the meeting that "this kind of action from the administration makes the BOG a rubber stamp, with no real power in setting policy and allocating space" in the Campus Center, as its constitution states.

Where will check cashing go, then? Bursar Robert R. Mishol, contacted last night, reiterated his claim that the Bursar's office cannot take on the additional load after check cashing ceases in the Student Union.

He said that developments in the past few days point to decreased feasibility of moving the Bursar's operation into Goodell Library after it is renovated. Goodell was supposed to be renovated for all student services in the original plans, Mlshol said.

"But now we're seeing that it may be too expensive to move the operation over there," he said.

In other business, two BOG members will travel to the State Education Commission in Boston next Friday (February 25) to testify in favor of the Collins Bill, a bill submitted by Representative James G. Collins, D-Amherst, to the legislature this session that would shift payment of Campus Center bonds to Massachusetts taxpayers.

Space request applications are due February 25 for groups wanting office space in the Campus Center Student Union complex.

Vice Chancellor's job to be filled

By JIM KASSNER
Collegian Staff

A Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance is expected to be named within a month, UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said yesterday.

Bromery has been acting in the capacity of Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance since Thomas Campion, the last person to hold the office, left campus three years ago.

Under the direct control of the position are service and financial management functions which currently are grouped into four subdivisions:

—Division of Campus operations. Includes grounds maintenance, physical plant, and the parking office.

—Division of Financial Services. Includes accounting, purchasing, and the Bursar's office.

—Division of Personnel and Employee Services. Recruiting and testing, payroll, labor relations, and wage and salary administration fall under this category.

—Division of Auxiliary Enterprises and Administrative Services. Services such as campus publications, communications, and mail fall within this category.

Dining Commons and Residence Hall management is expected to remain under the control of the Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, Bromery said.

Bromery said one of the purposes of the appointment is to reduce the number of staff functions which now report directly to the Chancellor's office.

"I believe that one of the key things in administration is the manager's span of control," Bromery said. "When too many offices report to one person, something slips between the students."

According to Bromery, a search committee reviewed over 400 applications for the position of Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance.

The Committee then interviewed seven candidates on campus before recommending three names to the Chancellor's office.

Bromery said he will meet on campus with each of the three applicants during the next two weeks before making a final choice. Bromery said that UMass President Robert C. Wood's "concurrence" is needed, but added that many of the applicants have already met with Wood.

Once the selection is made, the new Vice Chancellor coul begin work as early as July 1, pending availability of funds, Bromery said.

Although there will be no major reorganization within Whitmore, Bromery said the new Vice Chancellor may opt to reorganize the individual service and management functions falling under his control.

SAREO completes UMass financial profile

By CAROL COULTAS
Collegian Staff

A financial profile of the UMass Amherst student body has been compiled and released by Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office (SAREO) under the direction of L.G. Benedict.

The report, a survey of over 1000 UMass undergraduates and graduates, began in November 1976 and the results were released this semester.

The purpose for this extensive and detailed survey was, according to Dan Fitzpatrick, Director of Student Services, to provide information for Federal scholarship applications, to determine scholarship needs, to organize budget requests to the Legislature, and as an early indicator of the adherence to the Title IX Code.

The survey which had a better than expected return rate of about 50 per cent listed many indicators of the UMass student's financial status. Among these for Undergraduates:

1. The mean expense for attending UMass for this academic year is $2,978.
2. 64 per cent of the undergraduates receive some support from their parents; the mean amount received is $1,569.
3. Almost half (48.2 per cent) reported no educational debts.
4. Over half (60 per cent) did not apply for financial aid this year.
5. It costs more to live off-campus, with room, board and transportation accounting for the difference.
6. The off-campus students as a group receive their income from different sources than the on-group. For example, the off-group receives less from parents, more from self-spouse, and more from working during the academic year. The off-group also tends to work more hours per week during the school year. Finally, more of the off-group receive food stamps than the on-group.

For Graduates:

1. The mean expense for attending UMass for this academic year is $3,562.
2. 80.3 per cent receive no funds for their parents.
3. 81.2 per cent did not apply for financial aid this year.
4. 38.2 per cent reported a teaching assistant waiver; 2.5 per cent a veteran's tuition waiver; and 5.9 per cent a financial waiver.
5. Some 16 per cent receive food stamps.

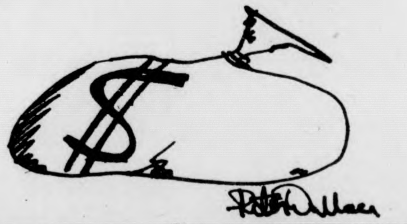
An interesting note in the income bracket is the modal parental income was $25,000, the median response falling in the $15,000-$17,999 category for undergraduates.

The modal parental income for graduates was $25,000 and above with the median falling the $12,000 - $14,999 category.

Although this seems to indicate the average UMass student's family can afford higher education here, Fitzpatrick contends much more extensive research needs to be done to concisely determine the practical expense of this school. This information will be important once the issue of tuition increases comes up again in the State Legislature.

The report is considered by SAREO and Fitzpatrick to be very good and they feel it is justified in its conclusions. Most of the findings correlate very closely to those found independently by the Financial Aid Office.

Fitzpatrick maintains the report has met the severe tests of research and cautions against hasty conclusions. He is especially satisfied that the financial report has finally been completed and now can be used as a valuable reference. Anyone interested in the findings of this survey or he methodology used may obtain information from Whitmore 229.



Students discuss faculty union

By JIM ALVES
Collegian Staff

Co-president Martus stated, "There has been co-operation on the student's part with the faculty up to this point."

He went on however, to note several possible conflicts of interest between the students and faculty unionization.

Martus stated that faculty unionization may have "negative effects" on the cost of education for students in that faculty gains in fringe benefits and wages may be passed on to the students, in lieu of proposed budget cuts, as increased costs.

Martus also mentioned the possible curtailment of student teacher evaluation forms and fewer classroom hours for instructors as possible factors that could have adverse effects on the quality of education at UMass.

Birmingham noted that "de facto recognition by the faculty" of a student union would be a major step towards resolving these possible conflicts of interest.

"We will ask them to enter into negotiations with us prior to negotiating with the administration," she said.

Birmingham also cited the need for "organization of the constituency" for student unionization to become possible.

"Through the organization of dorm councils and department councils we can make unionization seem vital and real to the people," she said.

Members of the Student Organizing Project (SOP), Student Center For Educational Research, and SGA (Student Government Association) co-presidents Jay A. Martus and Paul J. Cronin met in the campus center last night and discussed student response to faculty unionization.

SOP member Susan Birmingham stated, "Faculty unionization has further exposed the myth that there is a commonality of interest here on campus. Students, in being an interest group here on campus, have to be able to negotiate from the same position of power."

CDC to probe V. Meter South

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

The Community Development Center (CDC) committee investigating the tension existing in the all woman Van Meter South dormitory met for the first time yesterday before launching its ten day probe.

Sally Freeman, the director of CDC, organized the committee after the sensitive situation was referred to her by dorm president Beverly Garside and Central Area Associate Director William Taylor at two different meetings during the last three days.

Problems apparently surfaced in the dorm last October when Elizabeth Williams, the head of residence, fired floor counselor Donna Tomkiewicz. Melanie Johnson, another RA, resigned two days later. Early this semester, three more resident assistants, Marcia the committee.

Carlson, Sharon Parenteau, and Lee Yates, quit their posts on the same night. Carlson, the only woman to offer a statement concerning her action, explained to the Collegian in a Wednesday story that her resignation was the result of unworkable conditions with Williams.

The CDC appointed committee is composed of four members: a head of residence and two students — all three from outside the Orchard Hill-Central Area — and a representative from the International Programs Office in Whitmore.

Freeman said the committee will be taking the most positive approach to find a resolution of the issue and understand it clearly. She estimated the committee will have a clear sense of the situation after the ten day period, with a thorough assessment and recommendations. The students, at Van Meter South, Freeman added, are very aware of

Tension in Central Dorm, vital information missing

This past Wednesday, Feb. 16, Joe Quinlan wrote an article on the front page of the Collegian entitled, "Tension in Central dorm to be studied." The article was about the problems that exist in Van Meter South, an all women's dorm in Central Area that culminated in a petition requesting the resignation of Elizabeth Williams, the head of resident.

"Unworkable conditions" were cited as the cause of the present tension between Williams, her resident assistants, and other students in the dorm. No where in the article was information given as to the nature of these "tensions" or problems.

The essential elements that are necessary in writing any article was missing from the one written by Quinlan. What is the problem, when and how did it develop, and why did it develop.

No where was it mentioned that Williams, the head of residence is black, nor did it mention any possible racial overtones in the situation. Also important but not mentioned, is whether any of the tensions that now exist are problems that have been carried over from previous years.

In all fairness I feel that the entire situation warrants more information so that readers can be accurately informed about what has been happening.

Federal receivership continues at S. Boston high

BOSTON (UPI) — Federal receivership of South Boston High School will not be terminated at least until the end of this school year, U.S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity Jr. said Thursday.

Receivership, imposed by Garrity in late 1975 because of racial unrest at the school, "only will be ended at the end, or the beginning or midway through a school year" to maintain "stability", Garrity said.

Garrity postponed until April a hearing on a request by the Boston School Committee, a five-member panel charged with setting educational policy, that the receivership be ended March 1.

He said first he wanted the high school to become "a school that children will want to attend."

South Boston High had been the scene of racial confrontation from the first days of Boston's school desegregation program which began in 1974.

"As far as the question of receivership, of course it will end," Garrity said. "The when is as soon as conditions for its terms can be clearly understood and worked out."

Garrity, who ordered the city's schools desegregated, issued his receivership order Dec. 9, 1975, and named school Supt. Marion Fahey court receiver, removing the committee's power over management of the school.

"There is no prospect of termination immediately," Garrity said. "Educational programs are the aspect that will make or break desegregation at South Boston High School."

He said the controlling factors for determination will be based on "tangibles... desegregating the high school with a minimum of turmoil or racial strife."

In January, the U.S. Supreme Court refused to review Garrity's decision on receivership. Garrity then ordered Boston Mayor Kevin White, the School Committee and a group of black parents that triggered the original desegregation order, to prepare for a meeting on the receivership's merits Thursday.

The request for a postponement of the hearing was made by lawyers representing black parents' who want the receivership to continue.

No violence in Soweto

Black Affairs

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (UPI) — Black students streamed back to schools Thursday in the black township of Soweto in the face of warnings that police would be tough on youths wandering the streets during school hours.

Early morning attendance was low at the township, 16 miles southwest of Johannesburg, but by mid-morning about 90 per cent of some 200,000 enrolled students were present, a Department of Education spokesman said.

No violence occured during the night and the situation in the township continued calm on Thursday, according to Deputy Police Commissioner Maj. Gen. Dawie Kriel.

Kriel said there would be "no general policy of arresting students who do not attend school" and said police in Soweto would carry on with ordinary duties to safeguard law and order.

On Wednesday, Soweto Police chief Brig. Jan Visser said any youths found in the streets during school hours would "feel the full might of the law."

News in Brief

Carter supports human rights

MOSCOW [AP] — A personal letter from President Carter was delivered yesterday to dissident leader Andrei D. Sakharov in an unprecedented gesture of support that could escalate the U.S.-Kremlin conflict over human rights in the Soviet Union.

The letter, which Sakharov said was the first he had ever received from the U.S. government, reaffirmed Carter's commitment to support human rights and closed with the sentence, "I am always glad to hear from you, and I wish you well."

Newport woman paralyzed by Pill

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI] — A pharmaceutical manufacturer agreed yesterday to a $500,000 out-of-court settlement in a suit by a Newport woman who claimed use of a birth control pill caused a 1970 stroke and resulting paralysis.

Mrs. Nancy Remka, 29, of Newport, claimed the stroke was caused directly be use of Ovral, an oral contraceptives made by Wyeth Laboratories Inc., of Philadelphia.

Settlement came after eight days of testimony in a civil trial in U.S. District Court.

Liquor price increases in NH

CONCORD, N.H. [UPI] — The money-short New Hampshire Legislature approved a series of bills yesterday aimed at increasing the sale of liquor by the bottle or by the drink.

Opponents of the bills argued New Hampshire was getting a bad name elsewhere in the nation and might as well legalize prostitution if it didn't care how it made its money.

But the prevailing sentiment was to keep gaining revenue through state liquor sales.

The House voted 193-163 to kill a bill which would bar the liquor commission from advertising New Hampshire's cheapest - in - the - nation prices. Stores in Massachusetts, which provides many of New Hampshire's customers, recently began advertising cut-rate special prices and the Liquor Commission said it had to fight back.

Bombs not to be sold to Israel

CAIRO, Egypt [UPI] — President Anwar Sadat told Secretary of State Cyrus Vance Thursday the United States' refusal of a controversial Israeli weapons request was "a very positive step" toward Middle East peace.

"With the help of the United States in every step and stage, we can establish peace in the area," Sadat said after a three-hour evening meeting with Vance at the Barrages guest house on the Nile outside Cairo.

Coffee shortage may be fallacy

NEW YORK [UPI] — Congressional hearings next week into record high coffee prices should prove to the American consumer the world is not facing a coffee shortage and Brazil is underestimating its production, two New York congressmen said yesterday.

Rep. Benjamin S. Rosenthal, chairman of the government operations Subcommittee on commerce, consumer and monetary Affairs, and Rep. Fred Richmond, head of the agriculture subcommittee on domestic marketing, consumer relations and nutrition, said their joint hearings Feb. 22 and 23 "will provide substantial evidence that there is no actual coffee shortage, only a temporary decline in world reserves."

Kissinger signs contract with NBC

NEW YORK (UPI) — Former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger signed a five-year contract with NBC — estimated to be worth several million dollars — to appear on documentaries and interview shows and act as the network's special consultant on foreign affairs, it was announced yesterday.

Tax rebate and cut approved by House

WASHINGTON [AP] — A tax rebate of $50 for almost every American who earned $25,000 or less last year and a permanent tax cut for 45 million persons or families who use the standard deduction was approved yesterday by the House Ways and Means.

The rebate, a variation of one proposed by President Carter as the center-piece of his economic-stimulus program, would be a one-time-only deal, payable to most recipients in May or June. The permanent tax cut, averaging $90 a year, would become effective on May 1 by lowering the amount withheld from paychecks.

At the same time, the panel agreed to extend through 1978 the existing $35-per-person tax credit and special credit for the working poor.

The committee continued work on business tax-cut sections of the plan that Carter has proposed in an effort to spur the economy. Chairman Al Ullman, D-Ore., planned to finish the bill Thursday evening. The vote on the rebate was close. The committee voted 20 to 17 against a Republican effort to kill the rebate. An effort to delete the higher standard deduction failed, 24 to 10.

Here are elements of the individual tax cuts approved by the panel:

—Almost every American who earned $25,000 or less in 1976 would get a $50 rebate check. Persons who earned $25,000 to $30,000 would get less than $50. Those at $30,000 income or more would get nothing. The panel attempted to ensure that nobody gets more than one $50 check.

—The current system of minimum and maximum standard deductions for taxpayers who do not itemize deductions would be replaced by a flat deduction. For single persons, the deduction would be $2,400; for couples filing a joint return, $3,000.

The committee rejected Carter's plan for a $2,200 standard deduction for single persons, since that would have resulted in a tax increase averaging $52 for 2.1 million persons.

Thank Goddess it's Friday

By PAUL LOGUE JR.

THANK GODDESS IT'S FRIDAY. Today was named after the Scandinavian Venus, Goddess of Peace, Fertility and Love. Her name was Friga and was the wife of Thor. Tonight you can see the planet Venus in the evening, just south of Due West near the horizon. The moon is in its New phase which happens to be lucky for the weather. Likewise a Friday moon is unlucky for weather.

Friday is considered unlucky anytime by people in Spain, Buddhists and Brahmins. Most people reading this might tend to disagree. This Friday kicks off the start of a long weekend, celebrating the birthday bash of Abe Lincoln and George Washington. The feds have magically given us a day free from routine, for most of us that is. The Sun is about to enter the sign of Pisces, and out of the Aquarius sign.

On this day in 1492, Columbus set sail for the New World and found himself hopelessly lost. Somewhat like the feeling of driving around Boston at night. Also on this day in history Jefferson Davis was sworn into office as President of the Confederate States of America. In his Inaugural speech he said, "All we ask is to be left alone."

In 1930, the planet Pluto was discovered by astronomer Clyde W. Tombaugh at the Lowell Observatory, Flagstaff, Arizona. In 1954 Senator Joseph R. McCarthy (R. Wis) tells Brigadier General Ralph W. Zwicker he is "not fit to wear a uniform" and "should be removed from any command", during Senate hearings on Un-American activity. Zwicker refused to divulge any names which the Senator pressed for, under orders from the Secretary of the Army. In 1975, Dr. Kenneth Edelin, from Boston, was convicted of manslaughter of a male fetus during a legal abortion and is given a one year's probationary sentence.

So some important events have occured in the past on this day of the month. With the change in astrological signs, the new moon and the visable Venus are on the evening horizon to guide you to some peaceful and loving destination. Who knows what the average person will find in their rovings? So as the masses depart from the campus and this copy of the Collegian reaches parts unknown, remember, Thank Goddess its Friday. Shalom.

Possible aid to Vietnam oppression?

To the Editor:

On Wednesday, Feb. 16, Ms. Cora Weiss of the Friendshipment organization spoke to a group of students in Mahar auditorium on the present relationship between the U.S. and Viet Nam. The efforts that Ms. Weiss and her organization are making to pressure the gov't into instituting foreign aid programs designed to reconstruct Viet Nam are commendable. It is with a sense of ingratitude, then, that I feel compelled to accuse Ms. Weiss of being narrow minded and bourgeois in her rational.

Ms. Weiss contends that not only would America maintain its "strong moral tradition" by giving aid and re-instituting diplomatic ties with Viet Nam, but adds that a further incentive for doing so would be to free the economic assets of American Multi-national corporations which were abandoned and remain inaccessible since American withdrawal from Saigon. She also adds that the prodigious supplies of raw materials which Viet Nam possesses, such as oil and tungsten, will remain unavailable for American consumption so long as diplomatic relations are broken down.

This kind of dull witted logic portrays a gross insensitivity of the Vietnamese culture, not unlike that of the administrative officials who thought that they could beat the Vietnamese into submission. The Viet Nam war precipitated from Western imperialism; re-establishing that imperialism will not heal the wounds of war.

I might also suggest that before Ms. Weiss continues her crusade to maintain America's "strong moral tradition", she should try to become aware of what history tells us that tradition has been. She can look at the U.S. role in Chile in recent years, at C.I.A. assassination plots, or, to stay within the realm of her expertise, at the employment of fetus deforming chemical warfare in Viet Nam. It is not unlikely that she would find the "moral tradition" that she so highly regards has an apropos synonym: OPPRESSION.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

Time to start swimming

"It'll soon shake your windows and rattle your walls,
For the times, they are a changing."

Those glorious sixties. Everyone seems to be writing and talking about them these days. You remember: the world was going to change tomorrow, and only because we had decided it would. It was a time of experimentation, romance, excitement, and danger; the youth of this country was higher than a kite on drugs, philosophy, music, politics, and the awesome "experience of life."

I was in the seventh grade when the hell broke loose on Columbia's campus. Indeed, I had actually been there two days prior to the outburst. I had stood on the steps of the library, and watched a street theatre parody the Vietnam war.

I really didn't understand then what was happening outside, but I knew that it was more important than the newswriting seminar that I was supposed to have attended that afternoon. Most important, I felt as though I was part of something.

Our heroes were those who dared to criticize, dream; those who dared to create a new lifestyle and system of beliefs. We listened to the music of Dylan, Simon, Baez; cried when the Kennedy's and Martin Luther King, Jr. were taken from us; joined in every protest movement. We sang all 7 zillion verses of "Alice's Restaurant" from memory.

We sat up until dawn and tried to define ourselves and to analyze and understand the world around us. We fought bitterly with our parents over their little revolving gilt-etched world; we refused to stop asking questions when our teachers ran out of answers. We felt a special kinship among ourselves as the torch-bearers of a new world: not perfect, but somehow better.

And now — where have we landed?

The magic of the sixties is gone. The bonds and the communication have dissipated, even among our own generation. We climb alone, separate from each other as we try to "beat the system". Did it ever occur to you that one person beating his-her head against the wall only yields one sore head?

Was the Vietnam war the rallying point? Did the great expansion in technology and communication, particularly mass media, bring people in closer contact with other cultures and even in our countries? These mediums still persist; why now do we turn our backs?

Obviously the economic slump and the rapidly increasing competition for jobs have contributed to the alienation that we suffer. Money and due bills are cold, cruel facts of life. Individually, we grope along, chasing after the elusive and mighty "financial security."

Or perhaps, the rapid change scared us; our heritage has been built on incrementalism, not radical turnovers. Frightened of the uncertain future, watching the old institutions and mores crumble and fall, we stepped back and turned our energies inward.

But, for we romantics who still hang on, and sigh wistfully when we hear Dylan ballads or find a notebook with "Make Love Not War" emblazened across the front cover, the dream is still there. Now, however, we must lay aside our dreams of the past and deal with the problems that confront us in our present society. We need to start talking to each other, sharing our experiences and feelings, and to try to build a new dream out of the shattered individual ones.

A collective dream, with a collective effort. But a collective effort means we have to start to communicate with and understand each other. We have to let down those nice neat secure walls we've all built around us; it means we have to honestly evaluate ourselves as well as the world around us. It may not be easy, and probably won't be pleasant at times.

"Now gather 'round people wheever you go
And admit that the waters around you have grown
And accept it that soon you'll be drenched to the bone
If the time to you is worth saving.
So you'd better start swimming
Oer you'll sink like a stone
For the times they are a changing."

Asks respect of individuals' rights

To the Editor:

The courage of Ms. Lisa Melilli in confronting that which is painful and personal, combined with the insight, intelligence, and technical skill she utilizes in expressing herself, are qualities I've only recently begun to appreciate. I find her writing powerful and moving, and normally I'm affected more or less positively. My reactions to her thoughts on the male ego however, were at best ambivalent.

The article is, of course, reeking with truth; while oversimplified and somewhat naive, I found it irrefutable. I was, nevertheless, left with a resentful feeling of my own. Behind the power and lucidity of her writing hides the source of my objection: The article is wholly and inevitably one-sided, distinctively peculiarly female.

In usurping the authority to give advice, which Ms. Melilli seems to take for granted, I hope I won't be thought too patronizing. For I, too, am compelled by rage when I say: Your perspective is recognized; your anger and frustration are real and justified; but listen, I am the only one who could ever be able to know who I am. As a woman conscious of an individual's rights, you must understand that no one, man or woman, likes to be told what or how to be.

Secret to sanity

In the course of day to day events, in the midst of the molasses mire of mid-week melancholy, there are certain...inconsistencies in the little world of UMass that one begins to notice. It might be just a strange state of mind that overtakes us and makes us ponder inconsequential questions like what the volume of styrofoam used annually by the Campus Center is, but it's thoughts like these that serve as the buffer of absurdity against reality's constant onslaught. And we don't want Reality in our lives right not, do we?

We all have our own gas-filled thought balloons to drift off in when escape from life becomes necessary to survival. Here are a few of the conceptual tangents that have kept me marginally sane in the past six months. Use them at your convenience; —What is happening with the research at the Carcinogenic Chicken Coop behind the Engineering buildings? Are the rumors true about the CIA using them to destroy leftist poultry in Venezuela?

—Was the architect of The FAC truly insane with a fixation on making public buildings resemble subways?

—Why is the leftist political stance equated with vegetables and the rightists with meat? And would frankfurters be considered liberal or conservative in that framework?

—How do certain people at this University graduate without every typing a paper? And how do these same people get through winter wearing sneakers instead of boots?

—Why doesn't the UMass computer compute the number of miles that an average undergraduate walks in four years here? Is the administration afraid to tell us or are we afraid to know?

—If Shakti Shoes and Kalso Earth Shoes are examples, can we assume that people are becoming more spiritually and politically aware of their feet? What is Jack Purcell's opinion on this matter?

—Why does the Carter Administration oppose doughnut price fixing?

—Are the rumors true about an upcoming world shortage of goose down due to a boom year in parkas?

—How much does the Salada Tea Company pay its staff of seers, clairvoyants and wise men who affix the little "fortune" on every single tea bag?

—Do people actually believe what they read in Contact and Alumni, the two University propaganda publications?

—What use will be made of Alumni Stadium when the football team is chopped out of the UMass budget by Governor Dukakis? A lecture hall, a parking garage, a discotheque?

—Why does a gallon of apple juice cost more than a gallon of high test gasoline?

—Is there enough job market demand for a Soothsaying major? What department would you put it in?

—Can dogs be considered a natural resource?

—How is it economically possible for UMass and the Five College System to provide us with free transportation when the same service would cost a small daily fortune in Boston?

—Is the individual who controls the selection of music in the Campus Center the most influential single person on campus?

—Since the coffee, raisin, citrus and chocolate prices have risen due to "bad years" in their growing seasons, do you seriously think that prices will go down in the "good years" to come?

—Is it the natural tendency of all students to be late or is it a disease restricted to UMass?

Guilt by association

When I read the letter is last Friday's Collegian from the anonymous assault victim complaining about three black attackers, it reminded me of a similar incident which three black males perpetrated against me last semester at the Southwest bus stop. While I was waiting for a bus, these individuals, possibly the same ones who attacked last week's letter writer, set off a cherry bomb next to me. I got up, faced one of them, and asked what was the matter with him.

He replied, "We're crazy. We're waiting for the bus to Belchertown." He added smilingly, "Are you going to beat us up?"

Well no, I wasn't. Instead, I walked and waited about a hundred yards down the road for my bus.

Why does a trivial incident involving three slobs, or four, if you count myself, deserve newspaper space? The reason is that in any interracial incident, whether the perpetrators are black or white, the attackers reflect not only upon themselves but also upon whatever group they come from. In other words, if three white individuals had attacked a fourth, the victim would address his rage simply at three men. But now, if it's three black men, then the victim could say it was three black men, and associate all blacks with the three in particular. And it works in reverse. Anytime some white males molest black females — and it has happened here in recent years — it's not merely immature men; it's immature white men. All whites then suffer from the actions of a few.

As my regular readers know, I drive a cab in New York City. For those who don't know, New York City cabbies have a reputation for refusing to pick up black passengers. While I do not refuse black passengers, I know many drivers who do, and I can understand how they feel.

I have picked up several thousand black fares in my career. As a result of this history, I have experienced a small number of incidents, ranging from fares running out without paying, to stoning of the cab, to attempted robbery. (No one has succeeded in robbery attempts, but if anyone is interested, I can furnish such a person with a detailed summary of all incidents.)

Though it hasn't happened in my case, I know many examples of white drivers who as a result of one or two single incidents will thereafter refuse any blacks. So what then happens is that any future black fare who gets refused is being inconvenienced for the sake of the original perpetrator. Since thousands of blacks could eventually be turned down, thousands of blacks would therefore suffer for the actions of one.

Again, it works both ways. Anytime a white commits an act against a black, whether or not the motives are racist, future interaction with any white can be poisoned by the memory of a single abusive incident. Again, many whites can suffer for the actions of one.

The black community at UMass is a very cohesive group. I hope they find the three who assaulted last week's victim and then beat their butts in. Those fools are harming all black people at UMass.

Minorities:
Check out your roots

I'm afraid.

I'm afraid of the future.

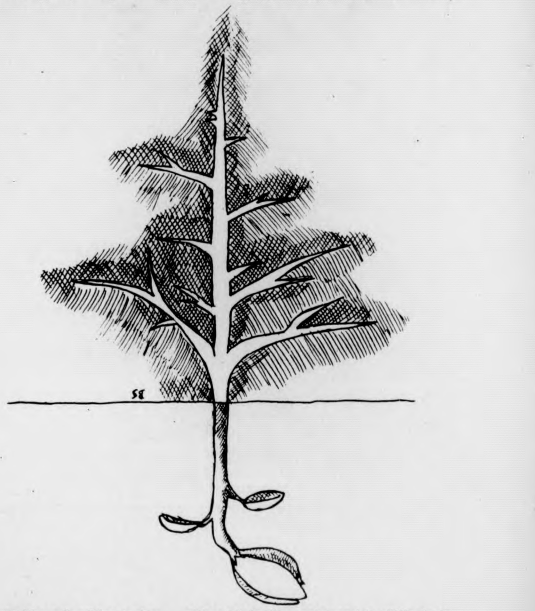
I see Blacks and other minorities of today and ask, "Why are our brothers and sisters still struggling? Why are our brothers and sisters still struggling to attain the same basic freedoms and opportunities enjoyed by the majority?

Those who feel the Black Struggle or any minority struggle ended with the Emancipation Proclamation or the Civil Rights Act should examine minority history over the past 100 years. One does not have to dig too deep in contemporary history to realize that minority struggles continue today.

As a sapling tries to push its way through larger and thicker vegetation for the sun's sustenance and the rains nourishment, minorities today are trying to find their identity among choking weeds. Yes, I compliment the Collegian's Black Affairs people for quoting Kahil Gibran. "If a tree were to write its own autobiography, it would be very much like that of a race."

Although I will never be able to empathize with the minority struggle, I can try to understand it — I can try to make it less painful. For one must have the courage to believe that (s)he is right amidst a people who are not sensitive to the needs and concerns of all the people.

Great leaders are not puppets, controlled by thousands of hands and jerked at every pull of a string. Great leaders are persons with strong, moral backbones, directed by clear, commanding consciences.



It surely doesn't help for me to feel guilty of the atrocities still experienced by minorities today — although feeling ashamed is difficult to avoid.

And, yes, I would probably accomplish less if I were to look into my past, partly because of what I might find there, and partly because I refuse to live in the past.

For me, it is imperative that I think of the future. Although many minorities look to the future with cautious anticipation and great expectation, I look to the future with much fear. Freedom for all, however, cannot be compromised. And the oppressors cannot force values and institutions upon those who have been raised in a completely different environment — an environment that may have "conflicting" values with the so-called "normal" or "melted down" person's values.

Just as it is wrong to even suggest that what America believes is the best way to strengthen developing nations, it is wrong to say that "our" way of doing things is the way American minorities should do things.

So, why am I afraid? Because I ask myself how many tears must flow, how many feelings hurt, how many hearts broken, how many homes divided, how much blood shed before this inalienable right is obtained.

Are we naive enough to believe that "things will work out" — just like things worked out in ending slavery, just like things worked out with court-ordered busing in Boston? And there are countless other examples unmentioned in most school text books.

Until people withhold defensiveness, until people push aside self-centeredness, until people remain open and forthright in dealing with racism, no prorgress can be made in healing racial wounds.

And the longer such fallacies as "reverse discrimination" exist, the longer it will take America to wake up to disgusting, dehumanizing racism. If an individual does not discriminate, how can there be reverse discrimination? Again, naivete.

Yes, the minority saga continues. It is a plant missing a few leaves, a plant with some strangled pods, a plant with some slashed arteries. But it is a healthy plant because it has strong roots.

Someday, hopefully soon, the plant will outstretch its lush leaves in jubilation. It will spread its stem, as an eagle spreads its wings in freedom, high above its oppressors.

My dream is this: That all minorities today check their roots to make sure they haven't been watered down. Maybe there's something there (around all that dirt) that your ancestors wanted you to do to find happiness sooner. Their dream must no longer be just a dream, it must be a living reality that means eternal happiness for them and you.

Minorities must not become footloose. Minorities must take root here. Please, stay put (Kizzy) and search for your freedom now.

Actresses sought for spring production

The Amherst Feminist Repertory Company is looking for women interested in working on a Spring production. Actresses, set designers, tech people, etc. are needed. There will be a meeting Sunday night in Campus Center 905-909 at 7 p.m. Everyone interested in performing should come prepared to read. For further information contact Eileen Stewart at 256-8397 after 5 p.m.

General meeting of GSEU today

The Graduate Student Employe Union (GSEU) will hold a general membership meeting today at noon in Campus Center 805. The agenda will be the state of union finances and further clarification of our demand to the University that there be no cuts in teacher assistant (TA) salaries or the number of TA positions available to graduate students. There will also be a report on how graduate students will be affected by the faculty vote to unionize.

Last day to buy art portfolio chances

Today is the final day to purchase a chance to win part of a 17-piece portfolio by the UMass Art Dept. faculty. Tickets are available for $1 on the Campus Center concourse until 5 p.m.

Proceeds of the raffle will go towards art scholarships, to be determined by the Art Dept.'s Scholarship Committee. The money will be used to match Ford Foundation grants and for students in design and art education, who are not eligible for such grants.

The portfolio consists of works by 17 faculty, and was exhibited at the University Gallery last year. Copies of the portfolio have been sold complete for $1500 to aid the scholarship fund.

Winners will be announced at the "Beaux Arts Ball" Feb. 26 at 8 p.m. at the Fine Arts Center. Tickets are also available on the concourse.

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

Friday, February 18 — Born today, you are one of those persons whose interest in others knows no bounds. Generous, completely unselfish, kind-hearted and sympathetic, you approach your relationships with others as you would approach something sacred and delicate, yet something that with care will last a lifetime. Because you make a genuine effort to understand other people within the framework of their own situations and circumstances, you have little difficulty coming to terms with differences of behavior, intent and so on. Your ability to put yourself in another's place makes it possible for you to accept others without at the same time compromising your own principles, your own standards.

A proud and at the same time modest individual, you prefer your own independence to a dependent wealth or success. You would rather be your own man or woman, even if it means that you will have a row to hoe that is harder than most. You are clever when it comes to money making -- but you are also absolutely honest, so that some of the ideas that are feasible in the sense of workable are not at all feasible in terms of your own conscience. Thus it is that though you may know how to make money, you may not wish to do so.

Saturday, February 19

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — A fondness for life's luxuries may cause you to overspend today. Have a care for the burden you place on others at day's end.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — If you are aware of your own weaknesses as well as your own strengths, you stand an excellent chance of success today.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Make the right decision early in the day and you will be on the way to a new and brighter future. Listen to the inner voice of conscience.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — If you neglect your own needs and desires, you may regret it before the day is out. Make an effort to serve yourself early in the day.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Focus your attention on a goal near at hand. Long-term goals may only serve to confuse the issue if dwelt upon at this time.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — You should benefit considerably from a new project -- if you attack it from the standpoint of reason. Refuse to become emotional about a "kick-off."

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — There's no time like the present for demonstrating a new found ability to create the image you desire. Take care, however, not to try to fool yourself.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Take care that you don't cut off your nose in a hasty effort to spite your face. Be reasonable regardless of provocation to be emotional.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — If you submit to feelings of resentment against one whose success is greater than yours, you will only set your own cause back even more.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Make an effort to articulate your views without help from another. Strike out independently toward a new and interesting goal.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Personal and professional needs must be met early in the day if you would know the kind of advances at evening you've been planning for.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Cooperation is necessary to your success today. Don't allow false pride -- or false modesty -- to stand in your way.

JV rimwomen face SConn

By MEL WEBSTER
Collegian Staff

The UMass JV women's basketball team will be hoping to rebound against the Southern Connecticut JV's tomorrow at 5:30 p.m. at the Cage.

The Minutewomen lost their third game of the season Wednesday afternoon to UNH, 82-77, as Susan Duffy scored 33 points for the Wildcats.

UNH took a 9-2 lead over the first five minutes, as the Minutewomen committed numerous turnovers. But led by the hot shooting of Toby Mead, the women regained their poise, and the lead, 14-12. They continued their hot shooting, and UMass held a 39-28 advantage at the half. Mead had 14 points and Elaine Howle had eight in the first 20 minutes of play.

The Minutewomen started off the second half like they were going to blow the Wildcats out of the building. Chris Kelley made three steals, and hit four straight shots in two minutes to put UMass up by 15 points. But that's when Duffy and the UNH defense began their act.

The Wildcats held the Minutewomen scoreless for four minutes, as they ran in 15 straight points to tie the score at 55, with ten minutes left.

The game was tight in the final minutes, but Duffy made the difference for UNH. She scored 18 of her team's final 27 points, including a stretch of 10 straight. Even when she was double-teamed, she managed to get loose and hit a hoop. Beth O'Connell scored eight points in the last three minutes for UMass, but it wasn't enough.

"We played an excellent first half, but we just stood around in the second half," said UMass coach Pam Rietschel. She also said that the officiating didn't help her team.

Elaine Howle led the JV's with 18 points. Toby Mead had 16 and Beth O'Connell had 12, despite seeing limited action due to early foul trouble.

Aquamen travel to Storrs...

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

Trying to salvage what's left of its season, the UMass men's swim team travel to Storrs today to face the swimmers of UConn in a 4 p.m. contest.

The Minutemen, near the end of their season with only one meet remaining after today, are 3-6 and have already sealed up a sub .55 season.

And, as if that isn't enough, the mermen have been hit by a wave of illnesses that have hampered several of their top performers in the recent week. The most serious caused senior Dave Boucher and junior Russ Yarworth to miss a great deal of action.

Today's meet shouldn't be any different as the Huskies have a powerful team this year and have always been a natural rival for the Minutemen. They are expected to do well against UMass and it is within the realm of possibility to suspect that some of the Minutemen are already looking forward to the New England Tournament and may be saving themselves a little.

The final regular season meet for UMass will be this Monday when it hosts the Blue Devils of Central Connecticut at 4:00 p.m.

That tournament will be held in the Springfield College Natatorium on March 3, 4, and 5 with some of the stiffest competition from the entire New England area in attendance. Expected to perform well there are Ben Crooker, Boucher, and Yarworth.

The UMass women's swim team left for the University of Rhode Island pool Thursday afternoon to compete in the New England Championships.

A field of 13 swimmers, aided by their two coaches, Eve Atkinson and Doug Forsyth, will participate in the two-day meet which starts this morning at 10:00. The team has been tapering for the championships and will be doing its best times of the season. The New Englands feature top caliber teams from all over this area.

Besides competing in the championships, four swimmers from the team will be competing in the Easterns in early March pending athletic department financial approval. Those selected were Mary Ellen Butler from Wantagh, N.Y., Lise Hembrough from Medford, Rachel Mack from Amherst, and freshman Deb Schwartz from Wayland. Atkinson is looking forward to the Easterns and feels the four should do well.

Pucksters face Boston St., UNH, in weekend contests

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

What a difference a year has made for the UMass hockey team.

A year ago the Minutemen got hot down the stretch and won eight out of their last 10 games, including six straight Division II contests as they barely missed qualifying for the playoffs. This season has been another story, however, as the puckmen would have to win their four remaining games just to come close to equaling last year's division record of 12-8.

UMass is 7-8-1 in the division this season and would like nothing better than to pick up a couple of victories this weekend when they play New Haven Friday night at 7:30 at the Milford Ice Pavilion in Connecticut and Boston State Saturday afternoon in a 3:00 game at Orr Rink.

New Haven has slight hopes of making the playoffs with a division record of 6-4, so tonight's game is an important one for the Chargers. Bob Salvatore leads a balanced New Haven scoring attack with 23 points, followed by Tom Westervelt and Roger Lawler with 20 points each. Lawler leads the Chargers in goals scored with 10.

Sophomore goalie Jim McWade was ranked fourth in Division II last week with a goals against average of 2.94 and a .896 save percentage.

Third-year coach Steve Lane's recruiting has helped the Chargers this year, as they have received good play from four freshmen. Matt Dyroff has scored four goals and registered two assists in his last two games, while fellow winger George DeMello had one goal and four assists in that same span. Center Doug Scudder and Bob Langevin have also played well during their rookie years. Scudder, Dyroff, and DeMello make up the Chargers first line.

The Minutemen faced Boston State back on January 22, and won a 6-3 decision. However, since that contest, the puckmen have not scored more than three goals in a single game, averaging less then two goals per outing.

"You can't win when you play like that; not the way hockey's played today, anyway," said UMass mentor Jack Canniff. "Since the Boston State game the puck just hasn't bounced our way."

Gymwomen duel Springfield in their traditional rivalry...

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

It's been billed as the 'best traditional rivalry in New England Gymnastics.' The big double dual meet with Springfield College at the Springfield Civic Center has finally arrived. In the past Springfield has dominated the women's gymnastics scene, but in the last two years the Chiefs have been losing ground to the Minutewomen.

Springfield is currently ranked fifth in the east behind third ranked UMass. In a recent meet against sixth-ranked Townson, Springfield pulled through, 136.60-135.15. The UMass gymwomen have been averaging around 140 in their five meets this season.

Patti Kural, an All-American vaulter, leads the Chiefs' attack. Her all-around score against Townson was 34.10. Wendie Hayes and Linda Thompson are also steady Springfield College performers who have been scoring in the mid-30 range.

UMass will go with its 'regular' lineup at the Civic Center. Jill Heggie, Stephanie Jones, and Susan Cantwell will be the performers in the all-around competition. Karen Hemberger's ankle injury is still on the mend and it is unknown whether or not she will be the fourth all-arounder. Cheryl Morrier is the other possibility.

Tickets for the double — dual gymnastics meet are on sale today at the Boyden Ticket Office and are also available at the Springfield Civic Center Box Office. Prices are $3.00, $2.00, and $1.00 for the 2 p.m. Sunday action.

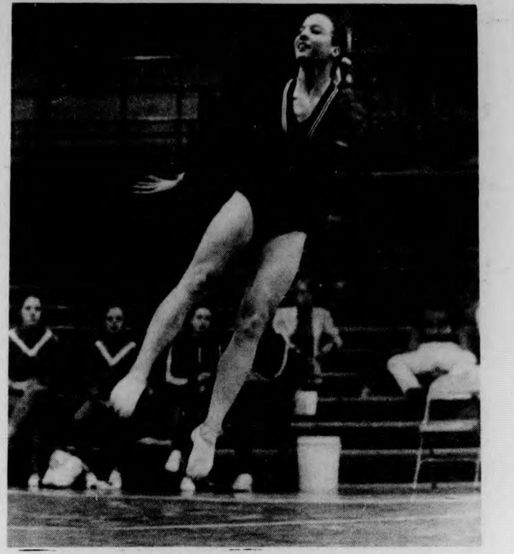
"It's not really a question of whether we wili beat them," said coach Virginia Evans. "I'm really looking for the team to go down and see how well they hit in the Civic Center environment.

"It's good experience in preparing for Easterns," Evans added.

The meet will give New Englanders a chance to see some top-notch gymnastics. Evans feels this is one of the strongest teams she has ever fielded.

Captain Jill Heggie scored 37.25 total points in the all-around competition against Temple last Saturday to record the highest individual score ever for a UMass gymnast. The team score of 143.25 was also a record breaker.

But Heggie is not the lone standout gymnast Stephanie Jones is right behind Heggie, having a season high of 36.45 against Temple. All-American Susan Cantwell is not to be discounted even though she is yet to have a 'perfect' day. Evans feels that Diane Laurenson is the best dancer on the floor she has seen. Cheryl Morrier has also made noteworthy improvement this season. Perhaps it won't be 'the best traditional rivalry' but an excellent display of gymnastics talent is guaranteed.



UMass captain Jill Heggie and her teammates will try to keep their fine season going strong Sunday in the Civic Center. (Staff photo by Rob Carlin)

...while gymmen do same at Civic Center

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

The first gymnastics meet ever to be held in the Springfield Civic Center takes place this Sunday afternoon at 2 p.m. when the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team takes part in a double dual meet against Springfield College.

The Minutemen, 5-3 on the year and 2-2 in the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League, will have their hands full when they go up against the Chiefs, who are currently the top ranked men's gymnastics team in Division Two.

Springfield brings into the meet a 3-4 season record, but all of its losses have been against top Division One teams.

Two members of the Springfield College team are presently top-ranked in Division Two statistics. Kent Anderson is number one in the country in the all-around, averaging 49.75 points each meet.

Tony Hall, an All-American parallel bar performer, averages 8.95 in the event each meet. Anderson is also second in the country in parallel bars, averaging 8.75 and in the horizontal bar with an average score of 9.2.

The Minutemen have been averaging in the 190's as team, but will have to score in the 200's to defeat the stronger Chiefs.

Physically, the Minutemen should return to top form, as John Forshay, one of the top performers in the floor exercise, is expected to return after sitting out a month with a leg injury.

The Minutemen are led by co-captains Angelo Scuderi and Steve Marks, who are the teams top performers in the all-around for Swetman. Both men have been averaging in the high 40's for the Minutemen.

Dave Kulakoff is the team's leader in the side horse, averaging around 9.0, while freshman Bob Donohue has been steadily improving his all-around performances for the Minutemen.

"John has been working out with the team occasionally," coach Dick Swetman said, "and he should be in good shape for the meet. Hopefully he'll be in top shape because we will need everybody we can have to face Springfield."

Ovalteam faces rivals for YanCon crown

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

The dual meets are over and it's time for the UMass men's track team to find out just how good it is as the Minutemen travel to the University of Maine for the Yankee Conference Championship tomorrow.

For the first time all season, coach Ken O'Brien's men are healthy. Thirty-two tracksters are making the journey in search of the Yankee Conference crown which UMass last won in 1975.

Even though the team's record is 1-7, O'Brien is optimistic.

"During the entire season, we didn't have all of our runners together at the same time, due to key injuries to key people. However, we have been registering best performances consistently all year, and our depth is extremely strong. We are the best 1-7 team in New England," said O'Brien.

He added that it would probably turn out to be a two-way race for first place between UMass and UConn.

The Yankee Conference consists of seven teams. Besides UMass, UConn, UNH, UMaine, URI, Vermont, and Boston University will compete in the championship meet.

In the past 10 years, the meet has been won by either the MInutemen or the Huskies. "It seems that every other year, either team wins it and the other team takes second. The next year, the positions are reversed," O'Brien said.

O'Brien expects the battle for first place to be an extremely close one. He said in a championship meet of this quality, the fourth and fifth place points are critical.

"There are 15 key matchups where we go head to head with UConn. I think each of those events will be separated by inches and 10ths of seconds. Each of those 15 matchups means two-three points for a total of 30-40 points up for grabs. The teams that grabs the most will win it," said O'Brien.

In the long jump, UMass's Ken Adamson, with a personal best of 23; will be pitted against Pat Augeri of the Huskies whose best is 22'4. Co-captain Adamson, however, is nursing a ligament problem in his left leg.

In the high jump, Augeri leads

Hoopmen set for 'capital' clash

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

All right, enough said about the triple overtime game the UMass basketball team blew to UNH on Tuesday night. What's past is past.

Time marches on and for the UMass basketball team, and now it's time to pick up the pieces of the UNH loss and begin to worry about a very tough George Washington University basketball team, which the Minutemen will meet tomorrow night at 8 p.m. at the Smith Center in Washington, D.C.

The game against the Colonials is of significant importance for UMass fortunes because if the Minutemen win, they will move up to third spot in the ECBL Eastern Division standings. A third place finish for UMass in the ECBL would probably seed it against second place Rutgers in the league's playoffs beginning March 2.

Like the Minutemen, George Washington has had an up and down season so far. Currently 12-9 overall, the Colonials have reached high peaks when they defeated top-ranked Maryland and West Virginia, but they have also reached some lows when then were defeated by Connecticut, a team UMass has beaten twice, and they also lost to Rutgers by 22 points, a team which the Minutemen beat by two.

So, it's a little difficult to try to predict the George Washington basketball team. Just when the Colonials begin to look like the top team in the ECBL, they go and lose to teams that they shouldn't, something UMass knows a little about itself.

The Colonials, who are third in the ECBL in scoring, are led by 6'1" southpaw guard John Hollaran. Hollaran is averaging 20.4 points per game and is among the league's leaders in field goal percentage.

In the front court for George Washington, Les Anderson, a 6'4" junior forward, averages 15 points and 10 rebounds a game. The Colonials also have a 7'2" center in senior Kevin Hall, but he has not been that much of a factor for the Colonials in the scoring or rebounding departments, averaging only eight points and six rebounds a game.

Other players to look for on George Washington are 6'7" freshman forward Tom Glenn, and 6'4" guard Bucky Roman.

Basically, the Colonials are a fast-breaking team and they have the height to complement such a game. Also, they like to use a lot of zone defense, something the Minutemen have been having fits with all year.

As for the Minutemen, who walk into tomorrow night's game with a 14-8 season record, they will once again by without starting forward Mike Pyatt. Pyatt, who injured his hip last week against URI is expected to be back in action some time next week, according to UMass coach Jack Leaman.

With Pyatt out, UMass is weak depth-wise. Leaman will probably use swingman Brad Johnson in Pyatt's spot, but after that, it leaves him with an inconsistent scoring bench.

Hoopwomen host SC

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's basketball team hopes to firmly establish itself as one of the top teams in the East tomorrow night when it hosts Southern Connecticut in a 7:30 p.m. game at the Cage.

Coached by Don Perrelli, Southern is 8-3 on the year. But two of those losses have come against two of the top ten in the country, Immaculata and Texas.

Included among the wins are a 12-point decision over Queens and a 25-point laugher over Rhode Island, a team which defeated UMass.

Southern is ranked 14th in the national itself, and is shooting for an unprecedented eighth straight national tournament berth.

UMass coach Mary Ann Ozdarski knows what it will take to beat her team's impressive foe.

"We've got to play team ball. We can't get rattled because they're Southern, but if we play the best ball we know how to play, we'll win," she said.

And the Minutewomen's chances received a healthy shot in the arm when it was learned that Southern's leading scorer and rebounder, Marnie Dacko, will be unable play.

Dacko, a monstrous 6'1" junior center, has an injured back and will be forced to adopt the role of spectator.

Her place in the lineup will be taken by another 6'1" forecourter, Jody Rajcula. The sophomore is shifting over from her normal starting forward spot.

The rest of Southern's starting five couldn't exactly be termed lilliputian, either. The backcourt consists of 5'9" sophomore Joan Van Ness and 5'8" senior captain Liz Gleason.

Up front, 5'9" sophomore Mary Jane Pruzinsky will team with either of two freshmen, 5'10" Cathy Inglese or 5'8" Loretta McDonald.

A standout on the bench is 6' Diane Beauchamp, one of two freshman on Southern who played last year for Brockton High, the Massachusetts Division I champion. Beauchamp is backing up Rajcula at the center slot.

"They run, they gun, and they hustle," Ozdarski said in reference to Southern. "They're a pressing ballclub and they're quick, yet they have the height. They run but they're disciplined."

UMass comes into the game with a two-game win streak and a 13-3 record. But despite a big win over New Hampshire on Wednesday, Ozdarski was a bit concerned about tomorrow's game.

"We've got to get our timing back. We've proved we could play highly competitive ball in the Queens and Bridgewater games," she said. "We're up for this one, that's for sure."

And just what would a UMass win do?

"It would prove to these kids that they have the capabilities of representing the Northeast in the Nationals," Ozdarski replied.

Concerned for western Mass. economy

Selectmen discuss budget

By JAMES DALTON
Collegian Staff

In a special meeting held Saturday morning in Amherst Town Hall, members of the Hampshire County Selectmen's Association discussed areas of mutual local concern with Western Massachusetts State legislators.

The selectmen, led by Nancy Eddy, chairperson of the Amherst Board of Selectmen, were especially concerned with the effects the proposed Umass budget cuts will have on Hampshire County communities.

Eddy urged that the legislators consider both the educational and economic repercussions of the cutbacks. The estimated two million dollar cut in the Amherst campus's 1976 budget would necessitate the laying off of approximately 700 people, which would be a severe blow to the local economy. The current UMass weekly payroll brings in close to 1.4 million dollars, 654,000 of which goes to Amherst-Pelham residents.

Eddy called for other Hampshire County boards to adopt the Amherst resolution, passed last week, which informs Governor Dukakis of "what the proposed budget does to the University, to Amherst, to Western Massachusetts, and to the Commonwealth."

Gary Whitlock, Belchertown Selectman, stated that the general feeling among the towns is that "everyone will support it (the Amherst resolution)." On the Governor's proposed budget, he "doesn't see how they can justify it, the same number of students will be there."

One cutback in the budget Whitlock felt was necessary is the relocation of President Robert Wood's offices, the feeling being that they "want him to move to one campus or the other."

In other areas, the Association expressed their disapproval with three other state policies that have adverse fiscal effects on the towns in Hampshire County. The reimbursing of Chapter 766, special education expenditures, with Chapter 70, regular educational assistance funds, is resulting in greater educational costs being assumed by the towns.

Also opposed is the continuation of binding arbitration with public employe unions, such as the Police and Fire departments, which has led to union victories in a 2:1 ratio. Recent changes in State funding of highway projects also met the selectmen's disapproval, as the towns feel they will end up with less state assistance.

MSP to select bargaining committee

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP), elected to represent UMass faculty in collective bargaining Feb. 8 and 9, is expected to choose a negotiations committee March 1 to draw up a package which the MSP will bring to the negotiating table later this spring.

MSP President Larry S. Roberts yesterday said the MSP's five member committee will work in conjunction with a similar group from UMass' Boston campus in negotiating faculty demands.

The Amherst and Boston campuses are considered one bargaining unit by the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission. Faculty groups from both campuses are affiliated with the Massachusetts Teacher's Association.

Roberts, in a telephone interview, said the committee will work out a mechanism to solicit faculty, staff and student opinion before beginning negotiations with the University.

UMass President Robert C. Wood has said all negotiations will be conducted through his office in Boston.

Roberts said that as far as salaries are concerned, his group is ready to sit down at the negotiating table as soon as possible.

In a press release sent out last week, Roberts stated the MSP's election "will in no way" affect cost-of-living increases passed by the University trustees for non-union employees at the trustees February meeting.

Last night Roberts said it is up to the administration if the faculty will receive this increase in light of the election results. Wood has indicated the raised will be delayed if a union was elected.

Discussing the Faculty Senate, Roberts said the union will have no immediate effect on the structure of that group.

He said the MSP has arranged to send observers to certain Faculty Senate committee meetings which deal with working conditions. The MSP hopes to work with committee members to negotiate the best contract possible for UMass faculty, Roberts said.

The MSP has also taken part in the formation of a faculty Higher Education Coalition, a group of faculty leaders and union presidents from around Massachusetts.

Roberts said the group was formed to act as a lobbying organization for higher education and to draw attention to the need for funding higher education in the state.

Duke here tomorrow

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis will visit campus tomorrow and stay overnight in a coed dormitory, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury said yesterday.

Secretary of Educational Affairs Paul Parks and his Assistant Secretary will join Dukakis in his visit.

The trio will go in three different directions in an attempt to gain a feeling of University life, according to Woodbury.

"I suspect it will be a rather informal visit," Woodbury said. "They want to talk to people and just learn about what's going on in the University."

Details of Dukakis' visit are unavailable, but he does intend to hold a press conference here Thursday, Woodbury said.

Legislature set to raise salaries

BOSTON (AP) — A move to give legislators and the state's non-elected leaders a quick pay raise is under way today with all the fanfare of private ceremony.

A legislative committee is expected to give prompt approval to the $4.7 million pay package that eventually would provide $850 for each of 6,700 state employes not covered by a union.

Legislators will get their share, as will judges, agency heads, government managers and UMass professors — all the way down to a relative handful of office clerks.

The legislation was filed by the Dukakis administration, based on the pay settlement reached with the unionized state workers last year. The governor decided to give the decision-makers the same raises as accepted by the rank and file.

The legislation before the Public Service Committee today is not expected to spur debate. The $4.7 million is the official state cost for the rest of the fiscal year, which ends June 30.

Legislators and the others actually will get $650 at first, but the full $850 by the end of 1977. The increase may seem a small sum for top-paid state judges and agency heads. But also covered by the plan are office employes of the state, constitutional officers and employees of UMass and Bridgewater State College. Most state colleges have their to negotiate pay contract, but UMass and Bridgewater originally rejected unionization.

UMass professors recently voted to affiliate with a union.

Legislators already have protected themselves. In approving the current fiscal year's budget, the leadership included a one time pay raise plan as a special section.

This procedure ruled out any roll call on the pay raise itself.

In addition, the budget included special language putting legislators in the state personnel classification system. That apparently will entitle members to whatever pay raises the state employes negotiate this year and in the future.

The other non-union state officials, meanwhile, also are expected to be given whatever the unionized workers negotiate in the future.

The pay raise for legislators will mean that their base salary has jumped by about $2,000 in less than a year. The 1976 base was $2,688, which became $13,749 on Jan. 1. The new raise would make it nearly $14,600 by the end of 1977.

About the only state worker of any sort who is left out is Gov. Michael S. Dukakis himself. Dukakis said he is satisfied with his $40,000 annual salary and told legislators he would veto a pay raise bill for the governor if they approved one.

OHAG questions liquor policy

By ANN TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG) voted last night to send a letter to Dean William Field and his attorney asking for the removal of the University liquor policy stating that the person signing a liquor license application is liable for all accidents occuring at or from that party.

University policy currently maintains that if someone driving home from a party gets in a car accident, the person who signed the liquor license application for that party is responsible for that accident.

Bill Taylor, Associate Director of Orchard Hill-Central, who used to sign liquor license applications for Orchard Hill parties stated that he will not sign any more applications until he receives word he will not be held liable for accidents.

OHAG also unanimously voted to endorse the move toward student unionization on campus. Susan Hoffman, a Student Organizing Project member, came before the group to ask for their support in getting the faculty and administration to recognize students and their right to collectively bargain. The Student Senate endorsed this motion last week.

Orchard Hill Area Government's elections will be held March 15th and 16th. Nominations for president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer need 120 signatures to get on the ballot and must have petitions turned into the OHAG office by March 10. The polls will be in Franklin and Worcester Dining Commons.

As a result of recent reorganizing of Amherst's town precincts, Orchard Hill belongs to Precinct No. 3. Thirty town meeting seats are available to students willing to run.

The play "2000 Black", sponsored by the Orchard Hill Third World Center, is being performed Saturday, February 26th at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Tickets are on sale in the campus center through Friday. Admission is $2.00.

OHAG was expecting Earl Brown and Craeman Gethers last night but their appearance was cancelled due to Brown's being sick. They are scheduled to appear at the next OHAG meeting.

Sylvan government votes salaries

By JANIS FINSTEIN

Sylvan Area Government members finally settled on a salary distribution for outgoing and ingoing officers as well as heads of the area projects last night.

SAG will be dividing a total of $1200 for the year among the officers.

SAG also proposed to form a committee to further the ties between area projects such as: WSYL radio and TV, the craft shop, the Subway and the Cultural Society.

Cashin Head of Residence, James LaMacchia presented the idea of establishing a Men's Center which would include a small library. LaMacchia said he will make a concrete proposal for next Sunday's meeting.

Plans for the "Big Bad Boogie" will soon be underway now that a committee has been formed.

Last night's meeting was the first meeting with its newly elected officers. Among these was the SAG's President Timothy Bernard.

Monday night an election will be held to elect an area representative from Brown.

Greenia cannot tell a lie; he's George

By STEVE TETREAULT
Collegian Staff

On any ordinary Monday Jim Greenia of Bernardston would be dressed in street clothes and managing his Sunoco station in Northfield.

But yesterday he took an hour to dress in colors and frills, and appeared in Northampton dressed in apparel he has worn "to just about every event in the past year."

Greenia is a professional "George Washington". Although Washington's birthday is legally today, officially Greenia celebrated it yesterday by giving out candy to children as part of Northampton's Winter Carnival.

Greenia was accompanied by Joe DeMaria of Northfield, who portrayed "Uncle Sam" down to his cardboard top hat and fluffy white cotton goatee.

"It got started as something to do for the Bicentennial, and we've gone everywhere since," said DeMaria. "We've marched in all the parades and been to all the banquets."

"It started out that Jim was George Washington and I was Abraham Lincoln, but I decided I'd like to change to Uncle Sam," DeMaria said.

The red, white, and blue costumes including all the frills, buckles, lace, gold buttons and blond wigs were designed by the pair's wives.

"They have costumes of their own, and usually come with us," Greenia said.

Chauffered by the WHMP mobile unit which blared martial music, George Washington and Uncle Sam toured the city, stopping at various places to visit local merchants and hand out, most appropriately, cherry candies.

Due to the 27 degree temperature and swirling winds, the streets were empty in places and the colorful twosome stood out against the snowy background.

"All the attention we get by wearing the costumes doesn't bother us," said Greenia. "We do it because we like to get dressed."

The duo's appearance was just a part of Northampton's Winter Carnival this week. The Carnival drew national attention last week when it received fifty bushels of snow from Buffalo. The new snow was dumped on the lawn of the Hampshire County Courthouse. Ironically, the Buffalo snow was lost amidst the three inches of powder that fell over the weekend.

Grad union top priority for Federow

By D. PETERSON
Collegian Staff

"My major concern right now is getting the union," said Graduate Student Senate (GSS) president Michael Federow in an interview Thursday.

"The Graduate Student Employees Union (GSEU) would benefit just about all the grad students," Federow added.

Federow states that 1600 graduate students would be able to come under the Union, including T.A. and R.A. positions.

There are approximately 3800 graduate students at UMass Amherst.

"Hopefully this union could function as something more than a 'bread and butter' union," said Federow.

"I would hope that it would look at larger issues than monetary issues," he added.

Federow pointed to the history of unionization attempts within the S.G.A., stating that the effort was bogged down and organization lost because the union tried to go through the SGA.

"A lot of the senators are concerned about student unionization, but there are a lot who are not," said Federow.

"As long as I'm president I'm going to do all I can to give the GSEU money but to keep them out of the senate," he said.

The graduate Student Senate has been trying to encourage grad student departmental organization, according to Federow. He said they shouldn't rely on the people in the Senate to take care of them all the time. They should watch out for themselves when they can, he said.

Discussing the administration, Federow said, "Students get bought off on input. It is the most fake issue that the administration dreamed up."

"You are continually fighting to get an administrator's ear, but as long as your energy is focused on that one administrator, your energies are not focused on helping yourself," he said.

"It's a shell game, guaranteed that you'll never pick the right shell," Federow said.

Federow believes that some of the low level administrators do have the concerns of the students at heart, but farther up the ladder, with exceptions, the more the administrators are concerned with staying in power, he said.

"Our problems at UMass, are, of course, only reflective of larger social struggles. If we want a decent education, and interesting, fulfilling work on the outside, we must be willing to transform our social relationships at the University. And we must cooperate with movements of people with whom we have a community of interest."

Concerning budget cuts, Federow urged that students stand together or everyone will be hurt by the proposed budget cuts.

There will be a community meeting in Mahar Auditorium on Wednesday evening to discuss budget cuts. Federow asked that all university students attend.

"After Governor Dukakis visits, concern should be really peaking," said Federow.

New frat established

Pike builds on leaders

By JO STEWART
Collegian Staff

Pi Kappa Alpha is the 16th fraternity to colonize at Mass bringing the total number of chapters in the Greek Area to 26.

Pi Kappa Alpha (Pike) is a national fraternity which boasts 170 active chapters in the United States. The newest one forming here.

The colonization of Pike began in January 1976 with 14 members from several dorms on campus. Pike's membership increased to 34 members over one year and they now live at 374 N. Pleasant St.

According to President Brian E. Erwin, he and fellow members of Pike were looking for a cheaper and better way to live off campus.

Erwin, together with Richard H. Flashman and Cary M. Benjamin, talked to Greek Area Director Edward M. Bowe who assisted them in getting in touch with field advisors from Pi Kappa Alpha National. Pike National was looking for men to help colonize a chapter here at UMass at the time.

"I wanted to join and work with the Greek system," Erwin explained, "because it isn't as bad as it's written up to be."

Erwin said, "My conception of a fraternity is a group of men living, working, playing and studying together, in which you make a fraternal bond that's there forever; a bond of brotherhood. It's the whole 'definition' of brotherhood that we're trying to establish here."

Describing life at Pike, Erwin said, "Everybody does everything together for the good of the house here. Everybody works toward progressing."

Visiting chapter consultant Jerry W. Askew agreed with Erwin's idea of the fraternity, and said he expects the Pike chapter here to be installed by the end of the semester.

"I'm extremely impressed," said Askew. "I'm impressed with the quality of membership here. They (Pikes) are going for campus leaders, not just the people that hang in there. They're looking for gentlemen. All the sorority members that I've talked to held a good image of them. They're starting out on the right foot with the sororities."

With the support of the Greek Council, and the strength of their own unity, Pi Kappa Alpha is trying to restore faith in the Greek system.

Student governance runs UMass by SGA, BOG, area governments

Editor's Note: Each day this week Alan Levin will be examining a facet of the relationship between the student governance units here and the administration and Board of Trustees. Today's article surveys the various student governance units and their lines of authority.

By ALAN LEVIN
Collegian Staff

In any bureaucracy there must be a system which delegates power and authority from the highest to the lowest levels. Student government at UMass is no different.

From Board of Trustee decisions affecting student concerns to the price of beer in the Blue Wall, the Student Government Association (SGA) has a procedure that defines who makes decisions and what decides weight they have.

Beginning with the Student Senate, the SGA tree of government branches into a number of intertwined organizations which collectively help make the University run.

One of the more curious of these branches is University Governance. This process attempts to give students a voice in the administrative decisions of the University. Through the Senate, all of SGA is allowed to bring concerns about student related Trustee actions before the Trustees themselves.

The following are some major components of student Government:

— The Student Senate is the "supreme representative assembly of the student body," according to the Constitution and General Laws of the SGA. It has voting members. The Senate's more important duties include taxing the undergraduates it represents, and allocating that money, establishing a judicial system, participating in academic policy formulation, and providing for area and resident hall governments. The Senate also has the responsibility for filing a governance motion to the Trustees.

— Area Governments represent all residence hall areas, the Greek residence system, and commuter students. Each Area Government must submit a constitution to the Senate who must then sanction the new Area Government. They receive money from SATF and have the right to gather extra money, provided the funds are not gained through taxation. Their responsibilities are to develop academic programs within their areas and to enhance the quality of life. If they so choose, an Area Government can "withdraw support" of any academic action or decision making body within their boundries. The Senate must then follow suit.

— Individual Residence halls are also able to form a government sanctioned by the Student Senate. They may collect dues and obtain Registered Student Organization (RSO) funds. These bodies set regulations on internal matters such as visitation policies.

— The Campus Center-Student Union Board of Governors was established to set all policies for the Campus Center-Student Union buildings. The 28 graduates and undergraduate student members vote on such things as drink prices at the campus bars.

In a sense, University Governance ties all these areas of student government together. If, for instance, students in a dorm government wish to change the mandatory dorm requirements, they can go before the Student Senate and persuade the latter body to file a Governance request to the trustees.

Asparagus spreading culture in society

By LISA MASSIMIANO
Collegian Staff

Combine a high school Latin teacher, a Ringling Brothers Barnum and Baileys Clown College graduate and an Amherst College graduate, and you have the Asparagus Valley Cultural Society; a bizarre trio determined to keep you in stitches with an insane evening of magic and juggling, chock full of comedy.

Penn Gillette, juggling since he was 12 years old, will juggle 23 inch steel knives blindfolded. Teller the Magician will swallow one hundred embroidery needles and bring them back up threaded.

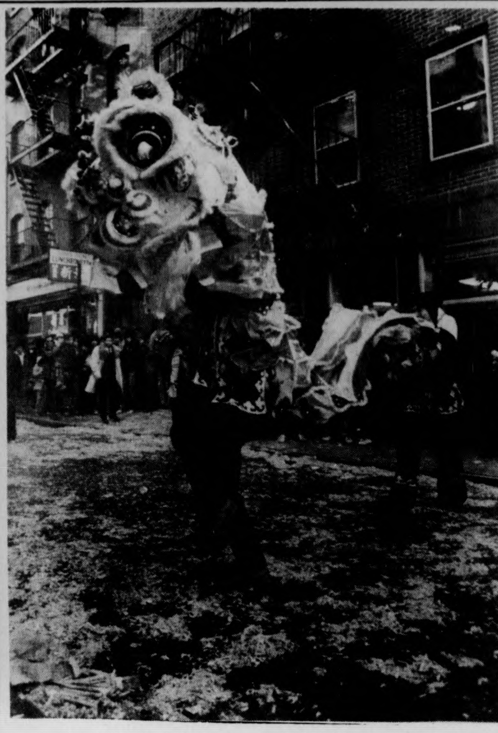
The group recently finished a month at the Walnut Street Theater in Philadelphia, the oldest continuously run theater in the U.S. The Philadelphia papers gave them rave reviews and as a result, they were spotted by a TV talent scout. Consequently, they will make their television debut on the Mike Douglas Show March 10th.

Although they do most of their performing in the Philadelphia area, the trio previously played at the Lazy River in Northampton and at Mount Holyoke College.

The UMass performance is being sponsored by Gamma Sigma Sigma, a national service sorority on campus. Lynne Miskewich, coordinator for the group's performance here explained that the trio was excited about playing at UMass.

"They are originally from this area, the Asparagus Valley, and are looking forward to bringing the act back here," said Miskewich.

The group will be performing February 25 at 8:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. Tickets are $2.00 in advance, and $2.50 at the door and may be purchased in room 304 of the Student Union.



"I don't hear anything yet. Sure we're going in the right direction?"

Just then a sound like gunfire reaches our ears.

"Yeah, we're going the right way."

We criss-crossed the streets, following the ever-growing sound of explosions: machine-gun riffs interspersed with sporadic thunderings of much heavier artillery.

"Why do we keep cutting back and forth across the street... just to avoid the people on the sidewalks?"

Our not-very-fearless guide to the wilds of the New York City streets muttered something about survival instinct, suspicion, and the fact that he is still alive. We continued to follow him.

As we reached the heart of the city, people were running everywhere, dodging detonations, ducking into buildings, clinging to friends. Soon we could not even yell above the din of thunder; the echo caused by the narrow streets didn't help any. It was literally raining fire, and the noise was just barely tolerable. The danger level grew, until an explosive went off in the face of one of our group. It was then, when he came away a little frightened but unscathed, that we realized these explosives were nothing to be afraid of. In fact, if this scene were so almighty dangerous, why were most of the people laughing? Indeed, this was not war, but rather the Chinese New Year, as celebrated in New York City's Chinatown. The explosives were not bombs but firecrackers.

Friday's celebration ushered in the Chinese year 4675, The Year Of The Snake, which falls between the years of the Dragon and the Horse in the Chinese animal zodiac. The Snake, however, is not a very welcome animal, according to UMass sophomore Mimie Li.

"Generally it's a bad year," said Li. "I think that's because Snakes symbolize laziness."

Li cited the example of marriage during the Year of the Snake: "If they could, would postpone it (the marriage) to the next year or have it earlier."

"It's not we who planned this thing out," said Li of Asian descent. "It's our ancestors or some astrological thing."

Even with all the celebrating, bright colors and gaiety, another side of Chinatown occasionally showed through. On one sidewalk, deep in a rough nest of rags and cardboard boxes an elderly Chinese man made his home. A look of unbeaten pride still glowed on his face. Our photographer took his picture and then slipped some change into the old man's pocket. As we walked away, the man fished out the money from his pocket, saw what it was and hurled it into the street.

By the time things began to calm down around 4 p.m., dinner-time to the Chinatown residents, there was scarcely a square foot of ground in the section uncovered by scraps of burnt paper. Besides the standard Fourth-of-July firecrackers there were bottlerockets, ashcans and M-80's. Celebrants with cotton in their ears, to protect against the awful cacophony were commonplace. Everyone joined in the cracker throwing, from little kids to old men and women. Nobody, except for a few of the younger participants, seemed especially scared by the light and-or noise of the crackers, which were exploding everywhere. And the rare policeman did nothing; there was nothing he could do.

Although the firecrackers were the most outstanding and most memorable feature of the afternoon, they weren't the only thing going on. There was a fascinating martial arts exhibit. And during the course of any given 15 minute period, one could witness any one of small parades; some merely color guards, with an American flag always leading the way, but most small groups of young men, in identical clothing, carrying sticks to barricade the onlookers from the paraders. Behind these men was a small percussion band, dressed in clothes identical to those of the first group. At the center of each parade was the lion, its head held by one man, its tail carried by another a few feet behind. The lion would dance wildly with great agility, while observers would throw packs of lit firecrackers at its feet, which made the lion dance even more furiously. In front of the lion was a "teaser", who wore sneakers and a mask of a man's or woman's face, which acted as both decoration and protection. The teaser carried a fan which both brushed away errant firecrackers and randomly choreographed the dragon's moves. The parades moved slowly but surely down the narrow streets, followed by a gallery of observers.

Robert Ong, a senior at Amherst College and part-time local Kung-Fu instructor, who took part in the martial arts exhibit, says "most of the noise is to scare the evil spirits away. The lion comes out and does a violent dance and the people beat on drums and cymbals, also to scare away the spirits. Everything is geared for good luck."

All in all, it was a thoroughly exciting, fascinating, colorful and inspiring afternoon. And it made these observers wonder why we can't celebrate New Year's like the Chinese.

Labor refuses to cooperate

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — AFL-CIO President George Meany said yesterday organized labor not only opposes President Carter's proposal for prior notification of wage and price increases, but would refuse to cooperate even if such a policy was adopted.

"We will not accept guidelines, notification or anything else," Meany declared. "We are absolutely, completely opposed to it, even if Billy Carter the President's brother wanted it."

In his economic message to congress on Feb. 1, the President said the Council on Wage and Price Stability would soon announce a system of voluntary prior notice of important wage and price increases. He said he thought both business and labor would cooperate in the anti-inflation effort.

But Meany, at a news conference following the opening session of the AFL-CIO Executive Council's winter meeting, made labor's position clear. He said such a program would destroy "our flexibility at the bargaining table."

Voluntary prenotification, he said, is "just a foot in the door" before the government imposes guidelines "and the first thing you know — wage and price controls."

While the administration hasn't taken a firm position, he said "these are little trial balloons that they're throwing up. "There are some people in the Carter administration who I think would like to go this route," he added. "A fella by the name of Alan Greenspan, he's still over there, but he's changed his name to Charlie Schultze."

Schultze took over as chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, the job Greenspan held during the Nixon and Ford administrations.

The 82-year-old labor chief also reiterated his criticism of Carter's economic stimulus program, saying it wouldn't go far enough in making jobs and puts too much emphasis on tax relief. "I don't see why the upper brackets should get back $50 to flip at the first headwaiter they see," he quipped in reference to Carter's tax rebate plan.

Despite these differences with the new administration, Meany said a good over-all relationship existed. He called the President's cabinet appointments "by and large... good" even though some of labor's suggestions were ignored. He predicted Ray Marshall will make a good labor secretary.

Trudeau is in US

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau came to the United States yesterday for talks with President Carter over joint concerns and without any "long list" of grievances.

Trudeau arrived in Washington shortly before meeting Carter for the first of two White House discussions. The Carters were hosting a Monday night state dinner for him, and Trudeau planned an address to a joint session of Congress today.

Trudeau is the second foreign leader to be welcomed by Carter since he became President, the first being Mexico's Jose Lopez Portillo last week. Carter had said the visits of the Mexican and Canadian heads were "an indication of the importance that we attach in our own country to our neighbors."

Trudeau didn't come to Washington with any "long list of complaints of matters that we feel must be attended to by the United States," a Canadian source said, nor was there any indication the United States had "any such catalog."

Picariello gets ten years

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — Richard J. Picariello, described as "violent" and a "threat to society," yesterday was given a 10-year prison sentence for interstate transportation of explosives.

U.S. District Judge Edward T. Gignoux imposed the maximum sentence after listening to arguments from U.S. Atty. Peter Mills and defense lawyer Lewis Gurwitz.

Mills termed Picariello's arrest record "a monumentous criminal activity" over a year period. The prosecutor cited charges of car theft, armed robbery, escape, and assault with a dangerous weapon.

Referring to testimony that Picariello was a non-violent person dedicated to prison reform, Mills said, "Far from being the folk hero, the Paul Bunyan ... he has all the characteristics of a violent dangerous individual, who's a danger to society."

When Judge Gignoux described Picariello as "violent, vicious, anti-social and a threat to society," the defendant interrupted, saying, "that's a lie."

After a three-week trial, Picariello was convicted earlier this month of a charge alleging intent to bomb the Polaroid Corp. headquarters in Cambridge, Mass., and the A & P regional warehouse in Boston.

The 28-year-old Portland man was found innocent of a second count of transporting explosives used in bombings which damaged a National Guard truck, a jetliner and a courthouse in Massachusetts.

Immediately prior to sentencing, Gignoux denied a defense motion to overturn the jury verdict or call for a new trial.

Gurwitz said it was inconsistent for the jury to acquit Picariello on one count and convict him on another. The defense attorney said that on the count linked to the three bombings which did take place, the only incriminating testimony came from alleged accomplice and government witness Joseph Aceto.

Gurwitz said Aceto's testimony was "discredited" by the jury and that it should also have been overlooked in regard to the second count.

Picariello interrupted court proceedings several times after Mills and Gignoux cited his arrest records.

When permitted to speak on his own behalf, Picariello said: "I'm not a criminal. The only thing I've committed is helping the poor."

He requested leniency, saying prisons were "schools of crime. Those places don't reform ... They teach people to be criminals."

Criminals may shoot computer

DETROIT (UPI) — Criminals seeking revenge for a stiff sentence in Detroit Recorder's Court may have to shoot a computer.

The city's main court for criminal cases has received a $229,920 grant from the federal Law Enforcement Assistance Administration to develop a pilot computer program to recommend sentences in felony cases.

Judge Robert Evans promised, however, that the machine won't substitute the human factor in deciding how long a crook should stay in jail.

"It will merely increase the judge's knowledge of what the sentence ought to be," Evans said. "The age of technology is here, so we might as well use it to help judges make decisions.

"But it does not mean the judge would be obligated to give that sentence. The computer is not a substitute for the judge's own judgment."

Carter riles Georgia with dam project

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter, under fire for trying to eliminate 18 water and dam projects across the country, riled his home state supporters yesterday by proposing that a 19th be abandoned — a massive reservoir in Georgia.

The White House said the Richard B. Russell project on the Savannah River between Georgia and South Carolina should be added to a list of water projects the President wanted stopped.

"My God!" said former Georgia Supreme Court Justice Peyton Hawes, head of group of Elberton, Ga., residents who had pushed for construction of the $231 million project. "That's just hard for me to believe.

"I know Jimmy pretty well and I got word from the White House last week that we didn't have anything to worry about," Hawes said in Elberton. "Jimmy has been here many times and he's told me personally he supports it."

White House Press Secretary Jody Powell, who was Carter's press secretary in Georgia, said he couldn't recall Carter ever taking a stand on the issue while governor.

However, R.L. Williford, publisher of the Elberton Star, told UPI that "Gov. Carter signed the agreement for the state saying the state would pay half the acquisition costs."

"He came here and spoke at our chamber dinner in 1972 and wholeheartedly endorsed it," Williford said. "The only precinct in Georgia which voted 100 per cent for Carter was here in Elberton where the dam is going."

Carter defended the water project cuts in a Cabinet meeting. "We're moving in the right direction," he said, "though it's going to be controversial."

Word leaked out during the weekend that Carter would ask Congress in his budget revision message today to eliminate funds for 18 water projects, most of them in the West, and top officials of Western states expressed shock and anger.

Powell announced in a yesterday briefing that Carter wants 19 projects eliminated because they "now appear unsupportable on economic, environmental and-or safety grounds."

Powell said the 19th project was the Russell dam. "The one project was inadvertently left off," Powell said.

The printed budget message which goes to Congress today mentions only 18 projects — none of them by name — and says cutting them would save $268 million in fiscal 1978 alone.

The White House said elimination of the Russell project, named in memory of Georgia's longtime U.S. senator, would bring the savings to $289 million. The Ford Administration, which drafted the 1978 budget, had asked for $21 million to be spent during the year on the project.

Construction of the Russell project is still in an early phase, limited to dredging of diversion channels with no concrete yet poured.

Both Georgia senators said they opposed Carter's action. A spokesman said Sen. Herman Talmadge, D-Ga., "regrets it very much." Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., said he was "disappointed."

Carter ordered a review of all the nation's water and dam projects, saying only those which are "economically and environmentally sound" will survive the scrutiny.

US doesn't protect research

DENVER (AP) — A law professor told a group of scientists yesterday that the U.S. Constitution does not protect their right to engage in experimental research and therefore governments are free to regulate such controversial projects as recombinant DNA research.

Critics say research on recombinant DNA could pose biological hazards. Prof. Harold P. Green told the American Association for the Advancement of Science that local, state and national governments are free to pass laws regulating it without having to prove the constitutionality of the laws.

The discussion was part of a daylong session, dealing with scientific freedom and responsibility, at the 143rd annual meeting of the AAAS.

DNA — deoxyribonucleic acid — is the basic chemical of heredity. Recombinant DNA research involves the new technology of artificially transferring genetic material from one species to another, and recombining it to produce new inherited traits.

Some argue that it can be beneficial, such as in correcting genetic errors or producing new drugs. Critics say new and virulent forms of life could be created and perhaps escape to the community.

There have been a number of efforts around the country by community organizations and states to regulate recombinant DNA research, most notably by Cambridge, Mass., in the case of Harvard University. New York State will consider such laws and a U.S. Senate hearing will be held soon.

Green, of the National Law Center at George Washington University, has been closely involved in the national recombinant DNA debate and is an adviser to the National Institutes of Health, which has issued guidelines for the research.

Green said that constitutionally the right of scientific inquiry can have no greater protection than freedom of speech, and that the critical distinction is between speech and action.

"Surely a scientist has the freedom to think, to do calculations, to write, to speak and to publish," he explained.

"When, however, the scientist leaves the area of such abstractions and turns to experimentation, he moves within the range of action that may enjoy only some, or perhaps very little or no, constitutional protection."

"Speech emanating from the vocal cords is generally fully protected, but amplified speech is not; one is constitutionally protected in cursing the flag or a draft card, but he is not protected when he rips or tears it."

The student's right to information

To the Editor:

I am writing to inform the students of an incident which, as they say, provoked me to write the letter I never thought I'd write. You need not have an interest or even a vague curiosity about Student government to understand the road down which parts of our student government are leading we the students. The implications are too serious to ignore.

At the Rents and Fees committee meeting Monday evening, February 14, the speaker of the student senate, Mr. Brian DeLima, presented his rationale as to why the student activities tax fund should be raised seven dollars. I speak as an undecided member of the Rents and Fees committee, and am nonetheless adamant as to what occurred at that meeting. The members of the committee were met with cynicism, condescension and impatience when posing their questions to Mr. DeLima. When asked why the students should not be allowed to vote as to whether or not they feel a fee hike is necessary, Mr. DeLima replied that the students did not have the facts. When asked why the students couldn't read the few papers he referred to throughout his proposal in the Collegian, Mr. DeLima replied that there was not enough time.

Do you, the students, feel ignorant enough to be denied these facts for the twenty days we had left at that time to inform the students? Mr. DeLima felt that a hopefully responsible representation of the student population should speak for the people and make their decisions for them. There are a considerable number of vacancies in the Student Senate, too large a percentage to ignore.

Is denouncing one committee member's proposal as "bullshit," spouting forth a soliloquy on the philosophies of Marx and Engels, lecturing on "sound political theories," and fist pounding as Mr. DeLima did, responsible representation? Mr. DeLima capped off the evening by suddenly leaving the room without an explanation whatsoever. Is this the responsible representation he mentioned that we should strive for?

Regardless of the outcome of this fee hike proposal we, the students, need to be informed. Students most certainly are entitled to that right and should demand it if necessary. Can we sit idly by while these irrational bursts of superiority cloud our perspectives? I'm not urging any radical action — I myself admit to being ignorant and uninformed, but damn it, I don't want to be taken for granted. If that occurs, every student attending this University will find themselves in the same situation.

Students' needs vs. banks needs

To the Editor:

Last Thursday, February 17, at 12 o'clock, there was a demonstration of 30 students called by the RSB, at Whitmore, in protest of the up and coming closing of the Check Cashing Service in the Student Union. Although the demonstration was small in numbers, it represented the sentiments of the more than 2500 students who signed the petition and Check demanding, "No Cuts IN Check Cashing Service".

The demo was met by John L. DeNyce, Director of Personnel and Financial Services, speaking for the administration. He thoroughly exposed where the administration stands when he refused to sign the Check or petition saying he couldn't agree with it despite the 2500 signatures. When asked why it is that when we confront the administration about fee and tuition increases they can't do anything but when banks go to them they are more than cooperative, he shrugged his shoulders. We also asked why it is that our fees are going up yet our services are being cut! He could not answer. The angry crowd dispersed after warning, We'll be Back!

It is quite clear where the administration stands when it comes to our needs vs. the banks needs. We can sum-up this demo as the first step forward for UMass students in fighting the increases and cuts.

Support Brown

To the Editor:

It was my dubious honor on Friday, February 11, 1977 to sit in the Superior Court of Northampton and witness American Justice in action. The business taking place was the hearing petition for a new trial for Robert Earl Brown.

I would like to make clear at this time, that previous to this hearing, I had not been too familiar with the case, nor was it my practice to espouse causes. I had read articles concerning this case in the Collegian and, being a skeptic by nature, took the information rather casually. I do have an interest in criminal procedure and thus, when invited, I did attend the hearing.

It did not take a genius to realize, less than five minutes into the hearing, that the judge, one Paul Tamburello, was extremely biased. His voice was one of extreme annoyance that he had to venture out of Boston to conduct these hearings. His tone of voice, attitude and cutting remarks set the tone of the hearings. I must say that Mr. Brown has some fine lawyers for this hearing, to bear up under such adverse conditions. It was not at all surprising that time after time, motions made by the defense as well as requests, were turned down by the bench. I could not understand why, when documents pertinent to their case were requested, a denial was rendered with no emotion what so ever. It was Daniel in the Lion's Den with his hands and feet tied together.

It is my understanding that in the first hearing, the week previous, Mr. Brown's first attorney admitted that he gave Mr. Brown anything but an adequate defense, saying that he conducted the case with the attitude that he (the attorney) had a loser to begin with. This fact alone should have been sufficient to warrant a new trial but it was not the case.

I will not go into the testimony brought out at this hearing, but it is safe to say that from the information given, the guilty verdict brought forth at Mr. Brown's second trial gave support to the belief that either he had an inadequate defense or the court proceedings were extremely biased from the start.

On Friday, February 25, 1977 at 9:00 a.m., the hearing will continue. I urge every reader of the Collegian, all friends and supporters of Mr. Brown and all those interested in true justice being served, to attend this hearing. It will be a demonstration to the judiciary that games will not be tolerated when it deals with peoples lives and future. Apathy will not help Robert Earl Brown, but support will. One does not have to be vocal in the courtroom, but I can assure everyone that the presence of a large number of supporters will have a great influence on the conduct and ultimate decision being made.

See you on Friday, February 25th, in court.

Katherine Martin

A personal protest

To the Editor:

I've had it. Within a month, my two favorite past times have been taken from me. I tried to save one from dissappearing but to no avail and now I'm trying on the other. This deals with the fact that the list price for new albums went up from 6.98 to 7.98. Queen's "A Day at the Races" was the first, and Fleetwood Mac's new album are two new albums which have the outrageously high list price. There is no relief in sight either.

If Queen's album didn't sell, then it is likely that the list price would've stayed the same. But the album went over big, so the change was made. The record companies have got us where they want us.

In personal protest, I am not buying Fleetwood Mac's new album; no matter how good it sounds. (Queen and Pink Floyd don't excite me anyway.) I want that album, but it cuts me to think what I'd be paying for it.

I am hoping for some support from those here at UMass and in the Amherst area. Don't buy these albums, or write letters to the record companies saying how you feel. Their addresses are most likely on the back cover somewhere. Get mad. After all, it is your money they're after.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

The choice to unionize or not

To the Editor:

Jan van Tol's editorial opposing the idea of unionization was somewhat refreshing for someone who has been skeptical of the idea and fearful that there was growing unanimity in support of it despite its apparent futility and more importantly its inadvisability.

Why is it a bad idea? The strike would not and should not be an effective threat. Its only effectiveness is propagandistic and if it is held out year after year as the basis of negotiation in the form of a verbalized threat as it is in labor negotiations I think it would lose that force. Furthermore in the eyes of the people of the state, as well as prospective serious students (our most important resource), we look like punks if we're devoting excessive time and effort to what are mundane issues. For similar reasons most students would not participate in strikes.

Mundane! you say. Let me explain. First, they are mundane in comparison to the tasks of learning at least on the undergraduate level which is a temporary, unworldly pursuit. It is a time of concentrated, narrow and inconclusive effort. All other interests are secondary. The issues are not mundane because cheap, quality education are unimportant goals, but — and here we move to the crucial question — because they, unlike higher wages for workers, are agreed upon by all parties concerned. If this is discovered not to be the case the proper reaction should be surprise and outrage, not cynicism.

It is only by assuming that administrators and faculty are delegated with this sacred responsibility that they will maintain some sense of it. Cooperation is a higher form of social relationship than competition and it ought to be fostered where it is still possible.

This is not to say that those purposes should not be continuously specified and the extend their realization examined. However to cease to assume the highest ideals will ultimately degrade them and is I think merely a submission to the unfortunate burden of our bigness.

Lastly the presence of a faculty union is now pointed to as justification for a student union. However it is hard to believe that, where there is conflict, among faculty, administration and legislature at least one party would not be representing the students' interests.

The choice over whether or not to unionize, because of the ineffectiveness of the strike, has more symbolic than practical significance. It is chiefly a choice of the style of relationships that we wish to promote.

Notice of withdrawal

Once upon a time there was a bank. It was a new bank in that town. It was a little bank. But this little bank said to itself that if it tried really hard and was really good, it would grow up to be a big bank and everyone in the town would love it.

So the little bank set about making friends. It gave out free t-shirts when anyone started an account. It gave away jam at Christmas for starting a Christmas account.

But the little bank thought that it had to do more if it wanted to be a big bank, "I'll give pretty, free checks, prettier than any other bank. And I'll give free check books too. And because I want to be such a good bank, I'll give interest on these checking accounts."

Not only did the little bank do these things, but it made each draft free and decided to have no monthly service charge either. It gave all of these things a lot of advertising space in all the "hip" places to advertise, because after all, it wanted everyone to know how hard it was trying to be their friend.

Now, the people in this town did not trust most banks. A lot of them were students and socialists and anarchists, besides. To them, banks were symbols of everything evil in the society that surrounded them. Money and money games left their aura around banks and this frightened the people. Money and people who had money had done awful things to these people and they did not want that to happen again.

But the little bank tried hard to reach these people and let them know that it wanted to be their friend, that it wasn't like other banks. It was a good, little, bank. It didn't do the kinds of things big bad banks did. It never hurt the people and just wanted to be their friend. It was an honest bank.

The bank decided to make a Gesture. It had to reach the students where no other bank had even attempted to reach them. The Gesture had to be on their level and it had to be good. The Gesture became a concert. It wasn't an ordinary concert, it was a concert in connection with the Black community, a concert with the best, a tribute to the best.

Well, this did it. The people started to support the bank. Everyone was putting money in the little bank and saying how good it was, how different it was from all the rest. Everyone was wearing the little bank's t-shirts. Everyone was pointing out how hard the bank was trying to be their friend.

This wonderful friendship lasted for about two years. Everyone seemed to be benefiting from the arrangement. Nobody seemed to want things to change.

But then it happened. It happened with no warning. It happened so fast that no one could do anything about it. Nothing was ever explained. It just happened.

The little bank cut its wonderful hours, saying that it was trying to save energy. The little bank started charging for its pretty checks. But people said that prices were going up and the little bank had to survive, and they let it go. Not many people were left who remembered the really good days.

Then the little bank sent out little green notes to all the people. "We're doing you a really big favor," the bank said, "And now you have to pay for it." The note said that it was going to charge for each check (unless it was cashed in the bank, during the few hours it was open).

"Oh, no!" the people gasped.

The bank added to the note another horror. "If you don't have enough money in our bank, you will have to pay a service charge," the bank continued. You could almost hear the evil snicker in the background. The number that the little bank gave was higher than any student could afford to put in the bank, in any bank.

"No more t-shirts," the people cried, "and now no money either. Where is our friend?"

But there was no answer, only a big bank in a little bank's clothing. The people had been tricked and now they had to pay for believing in the little bank. The people had no place else to go. They were trapped and the bank knew it.

You could almost hear the evil laugh through the whole valley. The good little bank was gone.

It's cut that budget time

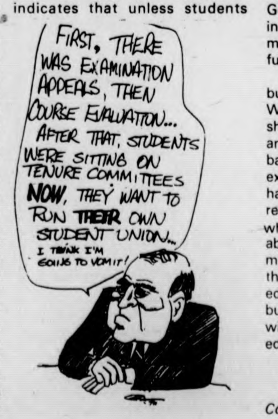
By WILLIAM BLUESTEIN

Well it's almost springtime Umies and you know what that means! That's right. It's cut that budget time. This year's budget cutting session brings back those perennial foes Governor Michael Dukakis and UMass President Robert Wood. Supporting roles include the State legislature, the faculty union, and a cast of thousands. To be specific, thousands of students whose education will suffer as the result of massive budget cuts. It seems that the Governor is convinced that Bob Wood will be the major threat to his securing the Democratic gubernatorial nomination in 1978. A feature article in the Real Paper last fall on Robert Wood and his gubernatorial aspirations made a convincing case indeed. If you were Governor and had the chance via the state budget to keep your competitor's power base from thriving, prospering — or as cynics like me think — existing, what would you do?

Although the Duke clings to his "anti-politician" role one cannot ignore the fact that people don't get elected Governor unless they're politicians. If eliminating UMass as an institution of high quality public education is the price that the Governor must pay to eliminate his competitor and maintain his political power then that's the price that will be paid. At least Robert Wood has to fight for the University to maintain his power base. This is not to say that his budget priorities are the same as the students', but we can discuss that later.

How do these political realities get translated into the current budget proposal? First there is the size of the budget. The Governor's proposal is for level funding. This means that the University receives the same gross amount of money as last year. Second there is the provision that each state agency must absorb all wage and salary increases to its employees. There are the tools by which the Governor seeks to get re-elected. Let's look at them a little closer.

Level funding gives the University the same amount of money as last year. Does last year's dollar buy as much as this year's? With an inflation rate in the neighborhood of 7 per cent this appears unlikely. The 108 million dollars the University received last year should be increased by the rate of inflation in order for the university to keep pace with rising costs and prices. The Governor's proposal does the opposite. It says the University must absorb the rate of inflation with its present budget level. This translates into a budget cut of 6 million dollars. How is the university to function with this reduction in its purchasing power? Although one can't be sure, past experience indicates that unless students organize themselves politically both locally and in the legislature, it is student services and programs that are the first to get chopped.



FIRST, THERE WAS EXAMINATION APPEALS, THEN COURSE EVALUATION... AFTER THAT, STUDENTS WERE SITTING ON TENURE COMMITTEES NOW, THEY WANT TO RUN THEIR OWN STUDENT UNION...
I THINK I'M GOING TO VOMIT!

The Governor also wants the University to absorb pay hikes given to its personnel. This affects the University budget situation in two ways. First, state workers (excluding faculty) struck last summer for high wages. That means that the money for their wage settlement must come out of this coming year's budget. Second, the faculty has wisely unionized in order to protect their interests. If you were a professor who has not received a cost of living increase in the past three years while the cost of living has increased by about 25 per cent what would your union be negotiating for? A professor's real income has fallen by almost a quarter. That means that if you make 15 grand as most assistant professors do your real income is now 11 grand. According to the Governor's proposals the salary increase the MSP will negotiate for must be absorbed by the level funded budget.

It is clear that the University budget situation is indeed grave. What's a poor student to do? We should follow the faculty's example and unionize. Academic collective bargaining is now a reality. The existing governance bodies have had whatever power they had removed by this development. Only when students unionize will we be able to negotiate with the administration and the faculty over the cost and quality of our education. Until then when the budget gets cut our tuition and fees will skyrocket as the quality of our education plummets.

Columbo visits the field marshal

"United Press International said that Radio Uganda reported yesterday that the secret burial of Archbishop Luwam and two senior cabinet ministers was performed at the request of their families, but the report only fueled world suspicion that the three men were not killed in a car accident but murdered."

The Boston Globe 2-21-77

Secretary — Lieutenant Columbo to see you sir.

Field Marshall Amin — Send him in. Hello Lieutenant. What can I do for you?

Columbo — Good morning sir. I'm sorry to disturb you when you must feel yourself under such stress. I just have a few questions about the deaths of your associates.

Amin — Ah yes, most unfortunate. But it seems pretty clear-cut to me, killed in an auto mishap.

Columbo — That's what the officials report says sir. Still, I've got a feeling in my gut about this thing. I don't know, maybe it was just the wife's meal last night. Liver doesn't set well with me. How about yourself?

Amin — I love it, Lieutenant. I think it is best after its donor has just been boiled.

Columbo — Sounds good, do you think you could give the little woman the recipe? She'll try anything.

Amin — Yes, yes Lieutenant. Enough of this gay banter. I am a busy man. What is it you want?

Columbo — Just a minute of your time to answer some questions sir. But before I start do you mind if I ask you who your tailor is? That cassock you're wearing seems to be a pretty tight fit. The miter looks good on you though.

Amin — You like it? Why thank you very much. I once thought of entering the Church but the presidency beckoned me. It is my calling. Now what is it about this case that bothers you?

Columbo — You say the archbishop was killed in a car accident. Well the boys in the lab ran tests on his clothes and they found marks on his body indicating that he was run over by a steam shovel and then shot.

Amin — They're marvelous fun. Have you ever operated one? I can sell you an operating license for heavy-duty vehicles if you like. It is good for driving steam shovels, bulldozers, GMC pick-ups, hearses and Tonker toys. It'll only cost you 500 dollars.

Columbo — Well you know I'm pretty happy with the Chevy. Now let's say you're in my place Field Marshall. Supposing this accident was a murder. Who would your prime suspect be?

Amin — Uh, the Cardinal.

Columbo — Now that's what I would have thought, only the cardinal disappeared six months ago.

Amin — Someone in the family possibly.

Columbo — Well that's funny. You see his son was an airport control operator at Entebbe up until a few months ago and his wife sympathized with the Israelies in the '73 Yom Kippur war. It seems no one has heard from them since.

Amin — Life is a bizarre creature, Lieutenant.

Columbo — That's so true sir. Oh by the way where were you when the archbiship met his death?

Amin — Oh, I was out hunting elephants with my sub-machine gun. Have to have something for dinner. The service around the palace is very slow since my kitchen staff departed last month. Rest their souls.

Columbo — Well sir I know it may sound preposterous to you but I believe you killed the archbishop.

Amin — Very good Lieutenant. I will cooperate fully with you in the investigation. Let me have one of my guards escort you out. Ripper, would you show the Lieutenant the way out?

Columbo — Very good sir.

Amin — Hope to hear from you soon Lieutenant. Oh Columbo.

Columbo — Yes?

Amin — Who loves ya?

The Auto Experience

The van

By MELANIE JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

It looked harmless enough, from the outside at least. The exterior was metallic blue, and there were no windows save those at the front and back doors. The back doors were curtained with burlap curtains, adding a tone of secrecy to the on-goings within.

Inside, however, it was a different story. Suddenly a simple looking van was transformed into a mobile home, a moving nightclub, or a haven when we wanted to escape the boredom of a small New England town.

In the front section were two bucket seats, a tachometer, a stereo tape deck, and CB radio. The steering wheel was covered with velour so that the driver's hands would not be cold when he climbed into the van at 6 a.m. on winter mornings. The front seats were separated from the rear by a burlap curtain that matched those at the back and both sections were covered with orange shag carpeting.

The back section made one parent comment that "this vehicle was a traveling sin bin on wheels." Tucked into the corner was an ice chest that always held at least one 6-pack of beer on ice, as well as a few Cokes. In the center was a large mattress covered with an abandoned bedspread, and two large pillows. Apart from the obvious advantages that this bed offered, it was also a great place to curl up and sleep on long trips back and forth from the racetrack, concerts, etc.

The back section also contained benches on the sides, and a bean bag chair that I usually claimed, and pulled upfront between the buckets seats so I could see where we were going.

This was my "home away from home" during my senior year of high school and to some extent during my freshman year here at UMass. On weekends especially a large group of us would take off for each other's schools or to concerts in other cities; one weekend we took a dozen people down to New Haven for an Allman Brother's Concert. Another weekend we went to an RPI hockey game in the pouring rain, and still made it back in time for my parents' 1 a.m. curfew. To this day they think I went bowling that night.

The van also was a place to escape to when we felt we didn't want to cope with our families, friends, jobs, or school. I have shed more tears and loosed more invectives at those paneled walls than in any other place. Often we would park the van in the driveway and talk until 3 or 4 a.m. until we had solved all the problems of the world for that evening.

We also had a good time confusing people with the van. Several times we would go up to McDonald's and buy two Cokes, and then go sit out in the van and eat the pizza that we had bought at the pizzeria down the street. We parked at Mac's because 1) several of us worked there and our friends could come out and talk during their breaks and 2) we knew that the police wouldn't bother us, because EVERYONE hung out at Mac's those days.

We sold the van two years ago, when the cost of gas started to skyrocket and we wanted to try a new sort of transportation. Jeeps and Broncos were in style then, but ours didn't last too long once the weather got cold. It was fun in the summers with the top off or blazing through the state parks. Besides, those trips to New Haven with 10 people were too crowded in the Bronco.

Last year we bought a new van; this one is smaller, and is metallic bronze. Although money is more restricted, slowly we have added the brown shag carpeting, the paneling, the 8 track and CB, the built-in bar and storage space, and put up the "Keep on Trucking Poster" in the back. The curtains are almost finished, but they aren't as crucial since this van has the kind of windows that let you look out but no one can look in. It's already been halfway across the country and back again several times, and will probably make some trips up this way in the near future.

I guess van-living is contagious; the van has become one of the family. Weekends center around washing and repairing the van. Life without the van is almost unimaginable; it gave me some of my fondest high school memories, and witnessed most of my growing pains. I, for one, will forever be "trucking".

Fond memories

By STEVE LESSER

In the spring of 73, May to be exact, I finally realized a lifelong dream; I became the proud owner of a Mass. driver's license. When the examiner told me I had passed on that 4th day of May, I was up on cloud nine.

The first thing I did to celebrate was to take my father's car to New Hampshire on a camping trip with a bunch of people. Among these "people" were several of my closest friends and all I heard that weekend and for weeks after was what a lousy driver I was and how the white lines on the road were to stay between, not to sway between. But for that auspicious start nonetheless my driving career was underway.

For the first year I was forced to borrow my parent's cars whenever I wanted to go somewhere because my father didn't want me to own a car at such a tender age; looking back I can see the point that he had.

But this circumstance led to experiences like borrowing my best friend's Ralph's car to go out on my first real dates with girls (at that age they were still called girls). This would have been all well and good except for the fact that Ralph had a standard transmission and I only knew how to drive a car with an automatic transmission.

This led to many embarrassing moments such as when I stopped for traffic lights on hills and then could not get the car into first gear. The car would roll into the guy in back of me, adding insult to injury, and not doing very much to impress the girl I was with. Fortunately for Ralph's car and my ego, I did not have to go through this rigamarole very often.

In the summer of 74, just before the start of my college career my dream came true, my father, rather than listen to my threats to buy my own car, gave me his. A 1965 red Oldsmobile Cutlass might not sound like much but to me it was as good as a Cadillac. To top it off this dream machine was a convertible which made it ideal for "cruising" which is what we did in it most of the time. The car had a 350 engine with eight cylinders and it really could move when it wanted to.

It also had an automatic stick shift on the floor which meant that I could almost make believe that it was a race car. Of course this was sort of a pain in the ass (literally) at the drive-in, but no matter it was fun anyway. Besides it was bright red and had genuine wire rim hub caps, which, combined with the fact that it was a convertible, was more than enough to impress any girl. Or so I thought.

What a great time that night was but it was shortlived. When I got home that night and put the top back up, there was a gaping hole where the plastic rear window was supposed to be. The window had cracked from the extreme cold after the top was down. Needless to say my father had a few choice words for me the next day and that was the last time that we used the convertible top out of season.

The car being 10 years young and only having 100,000 miles on it, I figured it would last forever and with that in mind, me and my friends proceeded to beat the hell out of it. One cold wintry evening during the Christmas season about nine of us hopped into the red bomber and headed off to some housing for the elderly projects to sing Christmas carols. Being infested with the holiday spirit I took it upon myself to put the top down and we drove around in sub-freezing weather like a bunch of nuts from an insane asylum.

But that wasn't the end of the fun in that car. The next summer was the year of the chase as everybody was hip on movies with car chase scenes such as the French Connection. To cash in on this action scene my friends and I staged our own chases. Played like hide and seek one of us (invariably myself) would hide and the other guy would try to find me. Usually I was pitted against my friend Josh who could get a little crazy in a car. Such things as near accidents were very common and the better part of a summer was spent on such harmless diversions as playing our own form of demolition derby.

But all good things must come to an end and in June of 75 a deal came up that I just couldn't pass on. It was a 1968 white Plymouth Valiant with low mileage and boy, was it a dream. I promptly got rid of that old decrepit Olds. And let me tell you have we had some good times in this car......

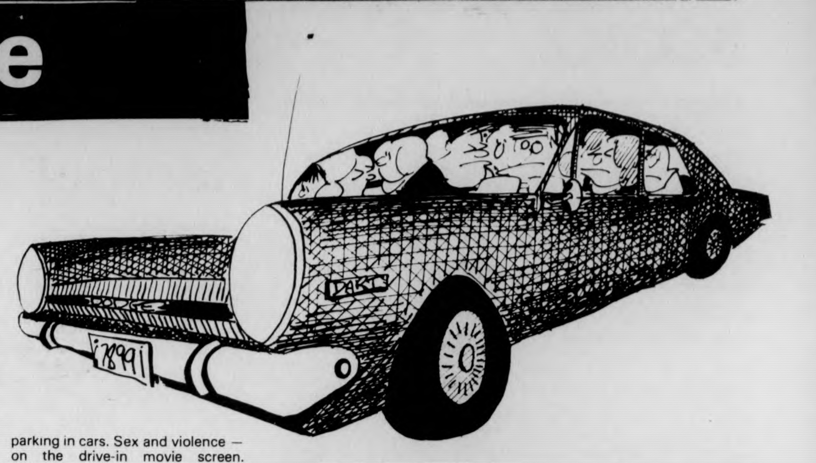
Driving away from home

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff



Coming down Route 91 back to school after three days at home, I had this weird idea. You see, I started thinking back to about two years ago and realized how much I've changed. It seems as if I've become separated from home, become an independent person without really noticing it. I've been driving away from home without even realizing it.

It all began one morning standing by the door waiting. I barely reached the doorknob and peeked out the bottom of the storm door window to see when my ride would come.

"The woman says she drives a blue stationwagon," my mother yelled from the kitchen making my sandwich for lunch. "You know, like ours, only blue."

It was such a long time ago that I can't really remember how scared or how excited I felt on this first morning of kindergarten. I'm sure it was a mixture. This was the first time I'd be going in a car, driving away from my mother and home in my whole life.

The car drove up and a woman came out leaving a car load of little boys and girls. I didn't like this strange lady coming up and holding me by the hand, leading me to the car and then driving me away from home with all these giggling kids, sniffling kids, just as scared as I for the smell of a strange car and a new experience. But it was the first step.

You all know what I'm talking about. It's like the first steps you take out of your property onto the road, then you're allowed all the way down the street, then a few blocks down. The feeling of independence is gradual, growing as you least expect that it's something growing until one day you find yourself thinking and acting for yourself. It's like a car trip: gazing at the scenery, listening to the music — you forget time and your journey and suddenly you find yourself at destination point.

Grammar school: St. Teresa's grammar school meant a bus, a long yellow bus with back seats where only seniors sat. We had patrol boys with orange harnesses and gold medals that said "patrol boy". We had to keep relatively quiet, which we never did. One nun even told us we should say prayers all the way home. We never listened. I guess that's one lesson you learn on a school bus — how not to listen to stupid rules and learn the lesson that rules are meant to be broken. We didn't like taking the bus all that much.

By eighth grade, we didn't mind taking the bus home because then we could sit in the last seat of the bus. I'll never forget the last day, the very last day of school riding home, crying, laughing, all three of us reminiscing old times in St. Teresa's Grammar School, talking about the new things we would be doing in high school and all the new freedoms our parents would have to give us in this new grown-up world.

After that, I went to an all girls' Catholic High in the next town over.

My father had to drive me there every morning and my brother had to pick me up at night.

The Car Pool. Girls crowding into cars. What could be more synonomous to my high school days than this! Car pools to the Saturday afternoon football games. Car pools on Friday nites to dances at the town's boys' prep school. Car pools on Saturday nites to dances at our brother's school, Notre Dame Boy's. Car pools to get together on Sundays to gossip about Friday and Saturday's events.

Then we all got our license — girls in an all-girls' high. Cruising. You think only guys do it? You're wrong. Just ask any girl from Notre Dame. It was our sport. Cat calls out the window — from us. The music on high. Auto races with some guys driving up alongside us.

These moments of freedom, craziness, recklessness, independence. We didn't think too hard about it then, but we knew we were growing up, getting older. It felt good like the wind blowing in from open windows as we cruised.

I had two loves in high school both named Dan and both car driving freaks. The first Dan drove a Volkswagen, a tan Volkswagen. Everytime I see a tan Volkswagen I get a pang of remembrance for Norwalk beach, thick steaks and getting lost at his house, driving up the long driveway to his house, driving on the parkway to his house, and quick spins to New York City at 12 p.m. in his little tan bug.

The second had a tan Maverick. What I remember are free golf lessons and grand tours of Connecticut, all of Connecticut, and free rides home from school.

Parking lots full of cars and parking in cars. Sex and violence — on the drive-in movie screen. Hiding beer bottles underneath the seat. Having policemen knocking at the car window to interrupt "intense conversations."

By Senior year, I was driving myself to school. College applications and career decisions. All of a sudden I had to make decisions, quick decisions. Was I going to stay home and go to school, or go away? Mom said stay home. I said go away. The battle was on and the beginning of independence.

My brother and his girl friend drove me to UMass in August. I sat in the back seat, my suitcase next to me ready for this three day adventure called Freshperson orientation. Freshperson? Then a month later it was the beginning of UMass for four years.

At first it was homesickness and then living out of a suitcase whenever I was home for weekends in Southern Connecticut ... the feeling began to disappear, the dependency got lost in the shuffle.

Cars do it. It's all cars fault shuffling people, families around, making travel easier, making separation easier. It seemed like all of a sudden this thing called independence, but it's been coming all along. Moving away from home, farther and farther until you cross the state line and stay there for a while.

But they're accepting it back there at home. They're finally seeing my life away from theirs and theirs away from mine. It's a good feeling, sometimes scary, but the feeling like yes, you're actually growing up, you're actually becoming an adult. And it's nice to know there's a car somewhere close, or a bus, or a train to carry you back to mom and dad when the going gets rough or when loneliness eats you're heart. And you go home and taste mom's cooking again. And it's still good, even in this new life of independence.

BOOKS

Review of Mauve Gloves & Madmen, Clutter & Vine
by Tom Wolfe
$8.95 at Univ. Bookstore

by Don Aucoin

When I was in high school, I had a teacher who attempted to use his students' clothing as some sort of living metaphor for the general breakdown of society. "To illustrate my point," he said, continuing his discourse on decadence, "I looked out over you today, and of the 25 pupils in this class, 21 were wearing dungarees!"

Tom Wolfe does much the same thing (though he emphatically believes that our land is not going down the tubes, and woe to him that says it is). He doesn't put his finger on the pulse of America; instead, he feels the fabric of their clothes, he sees what they are into.

Wolfe was pilloried in print a few years back by ye olde literary lion, Dwight MacDonald, something which, while not a gilt-edged certificate of merit, certainly puts Wolfe on the side of the angels. Other, gentler people have used Wolfe's writing as a critical touchstone to discern the New Journalism wheat from the chaff. This method is doomed to failure, however Wolfe's style is so singular and so wildly pretentious that only he can get away (just barely) with it. Imitations shrivel and die in his shadow. Now, however, twelve years after the publication of the The Kandy-Kolored Tangerine-Flake Streamline Baby, the novelty has worn off, and the substance of Wolfe's work needs a closer look.

Generally, Wolfe's verbal pyrotechnics are so entertaining that they divert one's attention away from what the man is saying. He is famous for his "Wolfe-isms", and Mauve Gloves has its obligatory share of new ones: Funky Chic, Adjectival Catch-Up, Happiness Explosion. This makes for better reading than much of the antiseptic prose being peddled about these days, but it also provides Wolfe with a means for dismissing all those he disagrees with, or burying a complex movement beneath a catchy phrase.

The best piece in the book is probably "The Me Decade and the Third Great Awakening." Improbably enough, Wolfe links an advertising slogan of the early sixties ("If I have but one life, let me live it as a blonde!") to such Seventies affairs of the soul as Arica, Scientology, Primal Therapy, the Jesus Movement, and the Esalen Institute. Other articles include a look at New York City street fighting, the lifestyle of an American writer, and the prevalence of what Wolfe calls "pornoviolence" in the media. Mauve Gloves also contains a short story, ostensibly about the making of a T.V. commercial, but really a comment on the difficulty and absurdity of most race relations.

Wolfe seems to clutch each new fad to his bosom, but it is a poison embrace. Never has a man whose writing depended on such shrieks and whoops seemed so detached and so cynical. Barely a drop of social conscience intrudes on his examination of the wealthy or radical; his writing is rather bloodless, despite all the exclamation points. One can't help but wonder if Wolfe is too caught up in the study of manners and mores to see the meat of a situation.

One segment of the book that is irritating (infuriating is a better word) is "The Truest Sport; Jousting With Sam and Charlie." The "sport" in question is the bombing of North Vietnam in 1967. Sam is SAM, or surface-to-air missiles. Charlie is the Vietcong. The heroes are a pair of carrier pilots. Now, I really didn't want to indulge in a political criticism of Wolfe; nothing could be more tiresome, or less to the point, which is that he is often an absolute gas to read. However...

Wolfe barely stops short of canonizing his two pilots. They are mythologized to his satisfaction: perfect gentlemen, Yale boys, aristocrats of the air, chivalric knights involved in an amusing joust with the Vietnamese. We never get the viewpoint of those on the ground on whom bombs are being dropped. Wolfe looks only at officers and "gentlemen"; we see nothing of the grunts and common soldiers on the ground. That would be...declasse.

The bombs are dropped, the target explodes, the pilots dodge bullets and missiles, and the whole Vietnam venture comes to be seen as a bit of a lark. Anti-war protesters back home are seen as treacherous folk betraying the selfless, dedicated men trying to keep the world safe for leisure suits.

Wolfe writes, "the aviator was he who lived in the very eye of the firestorm", thinking not at all of the firestorm below. Confronted with a munan dilemna, he chooses to dwell on the cut of man's suit or his rolling gait.

This kind of moral obtuseness pervades even the best of Wolfe's writing. He has the handle on what minorities want, he feels. A big piece of that American Pie, a snappy-looking outfit, and a megaphone to contribute to the "Happiness Explosion."

Tom Wolfe can't be ignored, obviously. He is too witty, too perceptive, and above all, too influential for that. For Mauve Gloves, then, a recommendation, with a truckload of reservations.

A Below The Salt ADDITIVE

Rampal at F.A.C.

By MARK LECCESE

One of the most gratifying things about a true virtuoso is that even though we come to expect their brilliance, we remain amazed and impressed each time we see them perform. This is particularly true of both Jean-Pierre Rampal, perhaps the world's greatest flautist, and harpsichordist-pianist Robert Veyron-Lacroix, who performed together at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall last Friday evening.

In fact, they are virtuosity to the second power. Playing together for twenty-five years, they have developed a rare musical interaction.

Their touring program spotlights their broad repetoire. The opening piece was "The Fourth Concert Royale" by Couperin, with harpsichord and flute realization by Veyron-Lacroix. The next pieces were two early Mozart sonatas, K. 14 and K. 15, which were written before Mozart was twelve. They ended the first section of the program with a wonderful performance of the J.S. Bach "Flute Sonata in B minor."

The second half of the program proved to be the Romantic half, starting off with Gaetano Donizetti's "Sonata in C major." The last two pieces were the standouts of the program. Rampal and Veyron-Lacroix, switching from harpsichord to piano for the second half of the program, gave a feeling performance of Schumann's "Three Romances". The final piece on the program was Beethoven's "Duo Serenade in D Major, Op. 41". This piece runs through several different musical textures, and the duo handled every one of them with both technical mastery and creative intelligence. Although Beethoven's Romanticiam is often movingly obvious, the great musicians can delicately bring out a wealth of stunning subtlety. Beethoven's chamber music pieces may not be as well known as his famous symphonies, but this duo went over very well with the audience, which filled the hall to capacity.

Rampal was applauded back for three encores, although many in the audience were used to Rampal's triple encore program and were indeed, expecting three encores.

The encores were, of course, even better than the program, and showed even more the musical diversity of the duo. The second encore, the piece that seemed to impress the audience the most, was by 20th century composer Maurice Ravel. It was the most modernistic Rampal and Veyron-Lacroix ventured, and it was performed with the same understanding and gentle brilliance as the Bach and the Couperin were.

As if to prove that they were the masters of any style of compsition, the duo finished with a movement from a sonata of J. Christian Bach.

Rampal and Veyron-Lacroix had played a concert that had progressed chronologically from Couperin and J.S. Bach to Ravel. At the end they went back to Bach. Their repetoire, talents and intelligence remain amazing and impressive, and, if the music world is lucky, they'll play together another twenty-five years.

There will be an open meeting of the Earl Brown-Craeman Gethers Defense Committee tonight at 7:30 at the New Africa House. Brown will speak about the case, a short film about Brown and Gethers will be shown and a discussion laying plans to free Brown and Gethers will take place.

Women's suffrage libretto presented

The University Ensemble Theater, Department of Theater at UMass, presents "The Mother of Us All," libretto by Gertrude Stein with music by Virgil Thomson. Centered around Susan B. Anthony and her struggle for women's suffrage, the opera freely blends American political and musical history with the country's original feminist movement. The play begins in the Frank Prentice Rand Theater of the Fine Arts Center at 8 p.m. Tickets are $3.50 (Students and Senior Citizens with I.D.'s $2.50). The box office is open 1:00 to 5:00 p.m. Monday through Friday, and through intermission on nights of performance. Phone: 545-3511.

'Mrs. Dally' dates

Last week's Below the Salt inadvertently left out the running dates for the production of the play "Mrs. Dally" at City Studio Theatre in Northampton. The play will be running Feb. 24 to 27 and March 3 to 6, with Sunday nights being dollar nights.

Tax tips

'Gross Income' includes all which compensates for services

By PAUL D. BODINIZZO

Due to space limitations, the Collegian regrets it will not be able to continue what was originally planned as a 10-part series designed to assist readers in completing their income tax forms. This was the series' third article.

Basically, all income which compensates you for services must be included in "gross income". This encompasses wages, salaries, tips and fees — even wages earned under work-study programs. Interest from savings accounts, NOW accounts, certificates of deposit, and bonds is taxable, although you may defer reporting from Series E Bonds until you cash them. To the extent that they exceed $100 to $200 for a married couple — most dividends are taxable. Rental income, pensions and annuities do not escape taxation; neither do profits from the sale of personal or intestment property.

Income which is not in the form of cash must be converted to dollar amounts using current value. Contest prizes and awards are taxable if accepted, and gross winnings from lotteries and other gambling activities, whether legal or not, must be included. Among the items which are not considered income and therefore need not be reported, are gifts, veterans' benefits, social security payments, workmen's compensation, federal tax refunds and "courtesy" discounts given to employes.

In addition, scholarships and fellowship grants are excluded from gross income. However, payments for services rendered, such as teaching-research assistantships, are taxable unless such services are required of all candidates for a particular degree. Thus, a Ph.D. candidate, unlike his Masters counterpart, at the UMass School of Business may exclude his salary for teaching the required two semesters. (A third semester's salary is fully taxable, though, because it's not required for the degree.)

Various adjustments such as moving expenses and employe business expenses are subtracted from gross income to arrive at "adjusted gross income". This year, taxpayers must go one step further by computing their deductions and exemptions which are subtracted from A.G.I. to reach "taxable income."

You are allowed personal exemptions ($750 apiece) for yourself, your spouse (when filing jointly), and each dependent. Additional exemptions are provided for taxpayers, but not dependents, who are blind or 65-and-older on Dec. 31, 1976.

A dependent is a person to whom you have contributed more than 50 per cent of his support. In general, this person must be a relative or a member of your household for the entire year. You may not claim a person as a dependent who had a gross income of $750 or more for the year; however, this rule does not apply to your children who are either under 19 or who are full-time students during five calendar months of the year. In most cases, the dependent must be a U.S. citizen or a resident of North America, and cannot have filed a joint return. Pets are not considered dependents for tax purposes.

Paul Bodinizzo, a UMass graduate business student, is a partner at Professional Tax Associates in Amherst.

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

Tuesday, February 22 — Born today, you have been gifted with a talent for words that will stand you in good stead throughout your days. Whether speaking, writing or understanding, you will be able to deal with abstract or concrete notions in such a way that they become comprehensible to all whose object it is to gain a fundamental knowledge of such things. Through you, children can be brought to terms with their surroundings and the demands made upon them by their own situations and circumstances; through you, adults can learn to accept what they must and to change what they can. Your ability to relate information and to transfer understanding is not to be underestimated or undervalued; it serves many besides yourself.

Although you have an interest in the occult and a definite leaning toward the mysterious, you are a practical individual. One who never trusts to the shortcut any journey that has already proven itself well adapted to the long way around, you are quite willing to do the same old thing in the same old way -- so long as the safe old way continues to be beneficial both to your pocketbook and to your health, whether physical or emotional.

Wednesday, February 23

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — An idea from another time and another place seems to take hold of your mind today and send you off in new -- and profitable -- directions.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Take care not to leave details undone until the last minute. You may find that it is too late to accomplish them well if you do.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Solve old problems with new tricks. You can make up for lost time and take a giant step forward. New goals come into view.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — A new phase of your work should suggest itself at this time. Don't be surprised to find yourself without competition -- for the moment.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Benefits should accrue quickly once you establish yourself in new habits. Don't expect gains before effectiveness, however.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — There is little you can do at this time to improve your standing in the community. Be willing to bide your time!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Where your work is concerned, keep your best foot forward. You may be able to fool all of the peoplle all of the time -- for a while.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Enemies may try to put you on the spot today. Avoid coming in contact with those you know will try to embarrass you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Profit may be strictly along the lines of intangible progress today. Personal satisfaction goes a long way toward bringing you happiness.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Don't worry about what the other fellow is doing. Keep your mind on your own efforts; work toward your own goals.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Put your time and effort into the planning stages of the next phase of your work. The actual work will come easier then.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Take a firm grip on yourself early in the day. You may well over-react to the day's events, especially as they involve children.

Ivy poison to grapplers

By BOB HASKELL

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — The Yale University wrestling team defeated the UMass matmen, 26-15, Saturday afternoon in a match that was marred by a succession of nosebleeds and injuries to the host Bulldogs.

Despite the final score, the Minutemen seemed to have overcome the letdown that plagued them in their losing effort against Mass. Maritime Academy at Boyden Gym last Wednesday night.

Coach Dave Amato thought the Yale team used some sloppy officiating to their advantage.

"They constantly jumped out of bounds, and seemed to come up with all kinds of injuries in order to stop play," said the young coach. "I thought the officials let things get out of hand."

UMass got some strong performances from the usual places. Larry Otsuka (134 lbs.) continued to impress people with his ability to produce results. The sophomore import from New Jersey raised his season's record to 12-2 by disposing of his ivy-league opponent by a score of 9-2.

Steve Jabaut beat his man at 142 lbs. by a wide margin, 12-2. Jabaut seems to have found a home in his new weight class, remaining undefeated since his switch from 150 lbs.

Mike Riley looked good but had to settle for a draw in his match at 177 lbs. The score was 6-6.

Heavyweight Dennis Fenton took another step in his inexorable journey to a fourth New England championship. The big senior team captain from Springfield won his match in an incredible two seconds, when his adversary carelessly broke his nose.

Tonight at 7:30 the Minutemen will host the University of Connecticut wrestlers at Boyden Gym. The match will feature the return of former UMass star, and 1974 New England champion at 158 lbs., Steve Benson, now the coach of the Huskies.

The Minutemen will not be at full strength for this one. Tim Fallon (150 lbs.) injured his ankle and may be lost for the remainder of the season, and Jabaut will sit this one out. He needs a rest from the rigors of maintaining his new weight, and Amato wants him ready for the upcoming URI match and the New England championships.

The important Rhode Island encounter is slated for Friday night at 7:30 in Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

Mermen dip again

Swimming against one of the top powers in New England, the UMass men's swim team was easily defeated by the Huskies of UConn at Storrs on Friday afternoon. The meet was not as close as the final 46-35 score indicates as UConn did not swim its best swimmers in all the events, realizing that it could easily beat UMass.

The loss saw the Minutemen's record drop to 3-7 with only one regular season meet remaining, that being today when they host Central Connecticut at 4:00 p.m.

In the UConn meet, UMass was able to win only four events with the only double winners being Russ Yarworth and Dennis Buss. Yarworth, a junior, won the 200-yard butterfly event with a time of 2:09.0 and was a member of the winniner 400-yard freestyle relay team which finished with a time of 3:37.0. The other double winner for UMass, Buss, was also a member of the freestyle relay quartet along with Ben Crooker and Tom Bondaruk and garnered first in the 100-yard freestyle with a time of 55.3. Also contributing to the UMass effort was Harry Fulford, who won the 200-yard breaststroke event with a time of 2:34.5.

In today's meet at Boyden Pool, UMass will be swimming against a Central Connecticut team that is about equal to the Minutemen.

"They have lost several good swimmers to graduation and are hurting for swimmers like us" said UMass coach Bei Melamed. "Today's meet should be very close and could come down to the last event, the 400-yard freestyle relay".

Looking past today's meet, the mermen are currently preparing for the New England Tournament to be held March 3, 4, and 5 at the Art Linkletter Natatorium on the campus of Springfield College. It will be the last collegiate competition for seniors Ben Crooker and Dave Boucher, who have both served four years on the team.

21 seconds left, O'Neil was called for a double-dribble, and this wild game was essentially over.

But the fact that the battle was even extended past 40 minutes was due to Southern's resiliency and two important factors: Lu-Ann Fletcher's foul trouble and Sue Peters fouling out.

With 1:33 on the clock, SC called time as UMass had a 69-64 lead. Southern then got the ball inside to Rajcula, who put in a jumper over a helpless Fletcher.

Peters then threw a pass away, and Van Ness came downcourt and was fouled by Peters. After some confusion, Peters was forced to sit down as it was determined that it was her fifth foul.

Anyway, Van Ness sank one of her tries, and Umass brought the ball back the other way. Henry's shot with two seconds showing on the 30-second clock rimmed around and out, and then Rajcula did her thing.

The Minutewomen did have one more chance to win it, though, but Henry missed the front end of a one-and-one with eight seconds left and O'Neil traveled with the rebound.

But UMass did itself proud against the vaunted Southern five. Keyed by an amazing shooting display by Henry, who also had six assists and played her finest game this season, the Minutewomen held a 41-32 halftime lead. The freshman guard quarterbacked UMass with authority and also sizzled the nets to the tune of 12 first half points.

The lead was 19 with 3:13 left before intermission when Carey completed a three point play, but SC scored the last 10 points before the break as UMass suddenly turned as cold as an ice cube.

In the second half, Southern kept whittling the lead down, and finally drew even for the first time all night on Rajcula's short pop.

UMass grabbed control from minute one, due mainly to Henry's and Peters' exploits. The other frosh backcourter added 21 points and six rebounds to the Minutewomen's column.

Fletcher, meanwhile, got into foul trouble which hurt immensely. She scored 12 points in all, but 10 came in the first half. And of course, her liability neutralized her usual aggressiveness and allowed Rajcula to go absolutely bonkers. Fletcher grabbed nine rebounds.

Van Ness and Inglese added 13 points to SC's cause. Van Ness, in particular, kept Southern close in the first half with eight points.

Although UMass lost this one, it proved to one and all that the Minutewomen are, indeed, a high-octane crew. As coach Mary Ann Ozdarski put it, "They played one helluva game."

And no one can dispute that.

SOUTHERN CONNECTICUT (81) — Rajcula 16-5-37, Van Ness 6-1-13, Inglese 5-3-13, Gleason 4-0-8, McDonald 3-0-6, Pruzinsky 1-0-2; Gemmell 1-0-2. Totals: 36-9-81.

Tracksters strut their stuff; second in YanCon meet

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

ORONO, ME. — A few weeks ago after UMass lost by four points to Dartmouth in a dual track meet, coach Ken O'Brien said, "We are really a better track team that our 1-7 record shows."

O'Brien's statement had much truth to it as his squad placed second in the Yankee Conference Championships held this weekend at UMaine's Memorial Field House.

Before an estimated 200 onlookers, UConn, led by Bruce Clark in the distances and Pat Augeri in the field events, took the YanCon crown with 71.5 points. UMass produced 50 points for second with Boston University taking the third spot with 31.4 points. UNH, URI, Maine and Vermont followed in that order.

UConn's 20-point margin over UMass wasn't as easy as it indicates. UConn, leading UMass after seven events, 42-15, had to withstand a furious UMass comeback in the distance events to finish with a victory.

The Huskies accomplished the win by having excellent depth. UConn came into the meet with a 10-2 record. The only event it was shut out in was the mile relay in which the second 'leg' pulled a muscle and had to withdraw from the race.

Personnel-wise, all of the UMass participants who placed, registered their best peformances. UMass broke two school records and four Memorial Field House records.

The two mile relay of Steve McDougall, Francis O'Keefe, Chris Farmer, and Mark Healy, with a time of 7:41.4, now hold the UMass record which was previously set in 1974.

Not to be outdone, the mile relay of Billy Conant, John Richards, Richard Thompson, and Joe Martens broke the former UMass record of 3:20.4 with a second place timing of 3:19.5. Probably the highlight of the meet was the amazing 'leg' of junior Joe Martens who holds the school record in the 440 and high jump.

With his team behind by 30 yards, Martens, running anchor, posted a scorching 47.6 quarter and narrowly missed beating the Maine runner by two yards.

Besides the two relays, the long and triple jumpers and the distant events scored notably. Freshman Bruce Parsons was the leading scorer for UMass as he amassed six points between the long and triple jump. Parsons scored fifth in the long jump with a jump of 22' and came back with a jump of 46'5 ¼".

Sophomore John Slepetz subbing for Ken Adamson, the injured Yankee Conference leading long jumper scored a personal best with a first place 22'5 ¼" long jump. Slepetz' previous best jump was below 21'11".

Chris Farmer and Frank Carroll put up a struggle with UConn's premier distance runner Bruce Clark before finishing second and third respectively with times of 4:09.5 and 4:09.9. In addition to winning the 1000 with a time of 2:12.1, Clark won the mile with a field house record with a time of 4:06.2.

Pucksters let two slip away

By TOM CROWLEY
AND FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

The UMass hockey team dropped two close games this past weekend as New Haven edged the puckmen, 3-1, Friday night in Milford, Connecticut and Boston State overcame a three-goal deficit to win a 6-4 decision Saturday afternoon at Orr Rink.

In both games the Minutemen's opponent scored an empty-net goal to ice things.

"We played well last night against New Haven, but I can't say that about the team today," commented UMass coach Jack Canniff after Saturday's contest. "We gave the game away," he added. "It was like Christmas in February."

The empty net goal made the 3-1 loss to New Haven College seem worse than it actually was. The score was 1-1 for close to a period before the chargers' George DeMello flicked a Doug Scudder rebound over a sprawled Dana Redmond at 13:14 of the second period. It then stayed a one-goal game until three seconds left in the contest after Canniff pulled Redmond for a sixth skater.

The open net goal reflected the frustration the hockey team has had in the recent stretch of games. UMass out shot New Haven 19-11 in the third period and most of those came during the time the sixth skater was on the ice. The team just couldn't put the disc in the net despite the swarming tactics of the Minutemen attackers.

"Counting tonight, in the last 10 games we've only scored 21 goals. That's a hell of a slump," Canniff said after the game.

The only skater to get on the board was Bob White when he scored a shorthanded goal at 14:27 of the first period. John Peters took the puck into the corner to the left of New Haven goalie Jim McWade and passed to White in the front of the net.

The other New Haven goals were scored by Doug Scudder (first period) and Bob Macchi (third period-open net).

The Minutemen came out flying in the first period of Saturday's game to take a three-goal lead over Boston State on goals by Carl Burns, Frank Snow and Bob Jefferson. It was one of the team's best opening period performances of the season.

Paul Conley and George Hooper scored in the second period for Boston State to close the gap to 3-2, before Jefferson got his second goal of the afternoon when he fired a long slap shot from the point that beat Paul Tuccelli.

Bill Curley made it 4-3 at 8:50 on a two-on-one break with Don Harrington. Tim Morrill got an unassisted tally at 10:22 on a shot that just dribbled by Redmond.

A costly mistake by Jefferson enabled Mike Hebert to get the winning goal at 14:26. The senior defensemaa missed Conley's centering pass in front of the net. The puck went right past him and ended up on Hebert's stick and past Redmond. It was the first time Boston State led in the game.

shots at crucial stages of the game, and when that happens we get burned."

UMass still needs one more win to guarantee it a 60 per cent won-loss record and enable the Lea-men to gain an automatice NCAA bid if they win the league tournament. With Maine, Rhode Island, and Northeastern remaining on the schedule, UMass should have little problem attaining that percentage. But as Leaman said, "They told me we wouldn't have any trouble with New Hampshire, either. What this team did yesterday has no bearing on what it'll do tomorrow."

While UMass was losing to George Washington over the weekend, a trio of ECBL teams were in the process of registering major upsets. Rutgers dealt 12th ranked Cincinnati an 89-70 stunner, West Virginia dominated 17th ranked Notre Dame, 81-68, and Duquesne upset 19th ranked Detroit.

For UMass, the Black Bears from Orono appear to be no match as the Minutemen seek win number 15. Maine is 11-12 and like UMass, has suffered some internal problems. Top scorer Paul Wholey has not been with the squad since the ninth game after a hassle with the coach and it was never made clear if he quit or was thrown off.

The Black Bears are now led by Roger Lapham and Kevin Nelson, both with 15.8 scoring averages. Steve Gavett, suffering with a bad ankle, joins the pair in the Maine front court.

Maine lost its most recent game, 95-75 to Rhode Island, to run its losing streak to four and eliminiate it from any possible post-season play.

Gymnasts split dual meets with Chiefs

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD — During action this weekend in the "best traditional rivalry in New England Gymnastics", the might become even mightier and the weak muddled through.

The UMass women's gymnastics team and the Springfield College men's team both turned in their strongest performances of the season while their respective counterparts were mediocre at best.

For the UMass gymwomen it was their fifth straight win and another record breaking total score. The Minutewomen combined for a 143.55 point total to 131.15 for the Chiefs.

Depth continues to be the key to success for the UMass women and especially among the all-around performers. Jill Heggie and Stephanie Jones continue to battle for first place honors in the all-around competition. Heggie took first place with a 36.85 in the event. She finished first in vaulting with a 9.35 for her Yamishita with a half-twist vault. Heggie also finished first on the floor with a 9.3 performance. She finished second on the uneven parallel bars and balance beam with strong 9.2 and 9.0 marks.

"Once again I was very pleased with Jill's performance. She continues to work very consistently for us," commented UMass coach Virginia Evans.

Jones is still breathing down Heggie's neck, however. Jones finished second in the all around competition, just .15 of a point behind Heggie. En route to her 36.70 score, Jones captured two firsts and two seconds. She had sparkling performances on the uneven bars and on the balance beam where she received scores of 9.5 and 9.3 respectively. Jones earned a 9.2 on the floor and an 8.7 in vaulting.

Susan Cantwell turned in her best all-around performance of the season and finished third in the event with a 35.35 total. Cantwell finished in a three-way tie for second in vaulting with her 8.7 score which was impressive considering that she slipped on her first vault and went crashing into the horse. She finished third on the bars with a 9.05, fourth on the floor with a 9.0 and in a two-way tie for third on the beam with teammate Cheryl Morrier.

By events, vaulting was the weakest for the Minutewomen but assistant coach John Calabria attributed this to the surroundings. "I think we were a little tight in the beginning adjusting to unfamiliar surroundings and I think the team is tired. This was our third meet in eight days and it showed a little."

Both the bars and floor were strong. Jean Anderson and Karen Hemberger turned in solid 8.15 and 8.40 performances. On the floor Diane Laurenson came through with an 8.95 and Barbara Burmeister had an 8.70.

On the beam, the UMass gymnasts showed much improvement and displayed normally missing consistency. "We can still improve on our beam routines but I think we were consistent and showed good rhythm," commented Evans.

Springfield College's women never really challenged UMass. Linda Thompson received a 9.1 for a third place finish on the floor for SC's highest placing.

Springfield College's men's team has never been stronger this season. The team combined for a 206.50 total to 198.20 for UMass.

SC's Tony Hall recorded his best all-around performance this season by winning the event with a 51.85 total. Teammate Rich Samuels finished second with a 50.50 total. Minuteman Angelo Scuderi finished a close third with a 50.1.

Coming off its strongest meet of the season against Southern Connecticut where the team scored 202.5, coach Dick Swetman was "kinda disappointed" with his team's performances.

"Springfield College put it all together and we didn't," Swetman stated.

The loss of all-around performer Steve Marks, who fractured his hand during practice on Friday, hurt but seemed to be only a minor problem. The major problem with the team seemed to be a lack of concentration and poor attitude, according to Swetman, who feels his team could beat the Chiefs.

There were some bright spots, however. Dave Kulakoff finished first on the pommel horse with a sterling 9.15. John Forshay finished first in vaulting with a 9.3 and received praise from Swetman for his floor exercise, which he competed in for the first time in a month. Angelo Scuderi finished first on the still rings with an 8.80 and second on the pommel horse with an 8.55 en route to his third place all around finish.

Hoopwomen hopes fly away as SoConn grabs OT victory

By JUDY VAN HANDLE

It was a case of poetic injustice.

For 40 minutes, the UMass women's basketball team had shown Southern Connecticut that it could outplay, outrun, outshoot, and outintimidate it at its own game. But instead of a victory, all the Minutewomen had to show for their indefatigable efforts was a 69-69 tie.

Into overtime the game went, and suddenly Southern got the urge to surge and ran off 10 straight points to open the extra session before UMass could get on the board. And although the Minutewomen fought gamely back to make things a bit more interesting, 10 points is an awful big hurdle to overcome in three minutes.

So it went Saturday night at the Cage. SC managed to hang on for an 81-78 win over the scrappy UMass quintet before the biggest crowd of the season.

Playing the role of Heartbreak Kid for Southern was Jody Rajcula. The sophomore center brought about the OT with 17 seconds left in regulation on a short jumper over Lu-Ann Fletcher, who could offer only a token defense as she was saddled with four fouls.

And in the five extra minutes, Rajcula pumped in eight of her team's 12 points on a combination of spinning moves and offensive boardwork. She finished with a game-high 37 points.

After SC grabbed a 79-69 overtime lead on the strength of three Rajcula hoops and Loretta McDonald and Joan Van Ness lay-ins, the Minutewomen finally replied on a Fletcher basket. After Rajcula hit again, ubiquitous Sue Henry (23 points) sank two howitzers to narrow the gap to 81-75 with 1:48 left.

After SC failed to score, UMass regained possession and Nancy O'Neil was fouled. She sank one of her two tries. O'Neil grabbed her own rebound, put it up again, missed, and Fletcher took care of the boards but was fouled by a now-frantic SC.

But Fletcher missed her two attempts. Cheryl Carey managed to somehow snake in for the rebound and the lead was down to three with 50 seconds left as she layed it in.

UMass got the ball back, but with

GW drops rimmen; senior night tonight

By RON ARENA
Collegian Staff

If all goes right, the tradition should carry more applause than the opposition as the UMass basketball teams hosts the University of Maine for the annual "Senior Night" tonight at the Cage.

While both teams are struggling — UMass has lost two in a row, Maine four in a row — the Minutemen have the sentimental impetus of seniors Mark Donoghue and Jim Town displaying their talent for the final time at the Cage.

Donogue, who has started for two years in the center position since transferring from Dartmouth College, and Town, who leads UMass in both scoring and rebounding, have been vital mainstays in the Minuteman frontcourt.

"I'm gonna miss it a lot," Donoghue said in reference to his final Cage appearance. "When it's all over it'll be funny. I mean I can remember when I wanted to play here so badly, and now the time just kind of flew by.

"I'll just be proud to have made a contribution, no matter how big or small, to UMass basketball," Donoghue added.

"It's been great playing in the Cage," Town offered. "It's been a tough year though, and I don't think it'll be that big a thing."

For the Minutemen, tonight's contest will mark the stretch run as they try to regain a winning form heading into next week's ECBL tournament in Philadelphia. UMass lost a tough 79-77 decision to George Washington University Saturday night to drop its record to 14-9 and finish last in the East division of the ECBL.

UMass finished at 3-4 in the new league and will meet the winner of Thursday night's Rutgers-Villanova clash in the opening round of the league tourney. Villanova, 6-0 in ECBL play, and Rutgers, 5-1, meet Thursday to decide the division titleist.

UMass fought back from an early eight-point deficit to grab a 71-68 lead over George Washington in the final minutes. The Minutemen opted for the four-corner offense but a Derick Claiborne turnover and ensuing foul led to a Les Anderson three-point play and a knotted contest. From then on it was a matter of some poor UMass shots and some clutch foul shooting by the Colonials which decided the outcome.

George Washington's final nine points came via the foul line as guard John Holloran, the game's leading scorer with 22 points, sank four free throws in the final 24 seconds to seal the victory.

Donoghue and Town led UMass in the scoring columns with 20 and 18 points, respectively, while Claiborne and Len Kohlhaas added 12 each. But in the end it was a case of poor shot selection which did UMass in.

"I don't think we played real sharp, but we played gutsy," UMass coach Jack Leaman said after the loss. "We just took bad

Investigations Into The Deaths Of MLK,JFK, RFK

NUMMO NEWS

On April 23, 1976 the Senate Select Committee to Study Governmental Operations released a report stating that it "had developed evidence which impeaches the process by which the intelligence agencies arrived at their own conclusions about the assassination...(of John F. Kennedy)...and by which they provided information to the Warren Commission." This report which was the first governmental admission that the Warren Commission Report was the first governmental admission that the Warren Commission Report had been fundamentally defective, contributed (along with the repeated disclosures of intelligence agency foreign assassination attempts, concealed information, destruction of evidence and general and pervasive misconduct) to the atmosphere which prodded the House of Representatives to establish a select committee of its own to investigate the assassinations of John F. Kennedy and Martin Luther King, Jr.

Created by House Resolution 1540 on September 17, 1976, the Assassinations Committee retained as its chief counsel later that month Richard A. Sprague of Philadelphia who had successfully conducted the investigation and prosecution of the murderers of Joseph A. Yablonski, the insurgent leader of the United Mine Workers (UMW). Yablonski and his family had been murdered, Sprague later proved, on the orders of former U.M.W. president W.A. "Tony" Boyle whose re-election Yablonski had challenged. In Sprague then the committee had acquired a prosecutor of national reknown with over 10,000 criminal trials to his credit. Moreover, Sprague had proved in the Yablonski case that he could untangle the intricate snarls of political murders. The Committee thus seemed to be off to a promising beginning.

In the next three months the committee recruited a staff of some 70 lawyers, investigators and technicians who were supported by a budget of $150,000 a month. During this period no public criticism of the committee or of its chief counsel surfaced. Even in December when Sprague went before the Congress to request a two year budget of 13 million dollars, all still seemed sweetness and light. For, as the Committee explained when queried about its projected six and a half million dollar annual budget: "...the integrity of this investigation is contingent upon the independence of our investigative efforts...The Executive branch agencies which were utilized in the past are the very agencies whose previous performance may be the subject of a part of this investigation. "Any valid investigation therefore had to be done by outsiders and the committee proposed to hire eighty independent lawyers and investigators to perform that function. The logic of the committee's position seemed self-evident, and Sprague's budget request had the unanimous support of all twelve committee members.

There was some minor-key rumbling in Congress about the size of the budget, but no great outcry. In reality the committee's enemies were simply biding their time, waiting for the propitious moment to strike. That moment came with the adjournment of the 94th Congress.

The Chronology Of Subversion:

The Select Committee on Assassinations had been established in September, 1976 by a vote of 280 to 65 of the sitting 94th Congress. The committee's legislative authority, therefore, expired with that Congress' adjournment in December of 1976. To continue its work Resolution 1540 had to be reenacted by the new 94th Congress whose deliberations would begin in early January during the transition between the Ford and Carter administrations. Promptly on the new year, the attack on the committee commenced.

In fact the first salvo had already been fired, somewhat surreptitiously, in mid-December by Rep. Don Edwards (D-Calif), chairman of the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Civil and constitutional Rights. Edwards, in a confidential letter to the House leadership and to only three of the twelve committee members, protested that Sprague's reported intention to use secret recording devices and stress évaluators (a new method of lie detection) when interviewing witnesses was, in his view, "wrong, immoral and very likely illegal." He also objected to public hearings. The attack on the committee had finally come and it had taken the form of an attack on the committee's chief counsel, Richard Sprague.

The next salvo at Sprague was fired on January 2nd by The New York Times which published a long, critical article digging up every conceivable bit of dirt it could find in Sprague's eight year career in the Philadelphia District Attorney's office.

On January 4th, Congressman Edwards' previously "confidential" letter was cited by Robert Bauman, a Republican from Maryland, in his objection to the attempt by the House leadership to obtain unanimous consent for a resolution to recreate the committee. Bauman's objection not only temporarily killed the committee, leaving Sprague and the other 72 committee employees without income; it also meant that the committee's life and purpose was now exposed to a much wider range of congressional opposition strategies.

On January 6th, the Times published an editorial of advice to the Congress. The editorial was entitled "Blank Checks and Fearful Fantasies" and urged the House "to be cautious as it moves to re-establish the investigative committee it created last fall. The Times claimed there had been disquieting portents" (about Sprague) and about what it termed "the committee's appetite...It has asked for an extraordinarily large budget...."

Now the opposition grew like Topsy.

Having failed to get the unanimous consent resolution on January 4th, the House tried again a week later on January 11th to obtain a favorable resolution which would require only a two-thirds majority for approval. But this effort failed too — largely because of lack of support from the Republican Conference (the Republican caucus in the House). According to two members of the Conference — Representatives Robert Michel of Illinois and our old friend, Robert Bauman of Maryland — re-establishing the committee would permit it to delve into areas that the Republicans preferred to have left alone: "With the proposed mandate that committee could begin a whole new investigation of the Central Intelligence Agency and the Federal Bureau of Investigation. "That, presumably, was unthinkable to the Republicans. Faced with this opposition, House Democratic leader Jim Wright of Texas withdrew the second proposed resolution, leaving the committee, "twisting and turning, dangling slowly in the wind."

When asked his reaction to this turn of events, Henry B. Gonzales (D-Texas) who was to become the committee's new chairman said that he felt "Like a guy was has been slugged before he has a chance to get into the ring and fight." It was an apt description.

Nor did the attacks let up. On the same day that Jim Wright withdrew the second resolution (Jan 11th), Timothy Wirth (D-Colorado) continued the harassment of Sprague. Wirth demanded that the committee explain how Sprague had been chosen in the first place and that Sprague "make a full financial disclosure to the select committee, if not to the House."

The on February 1st, after a month of sniping, the House finally voted to re-establish the committee but on a two month trial basis not for the two years desired. In addition the House slashed the committee's budget in half to $84,000 a month. This meant of course that half of the staff had to be fired. The gnibbling process was not taking voracious bites.

On February 2nd with very curious timing, the Justice Department publicized the findings of a 148 page report it had prepared which affirmed that James Earl Ray had acted alone in the murder of Martin Luther King, Jr. This new finding gave new ammunition to the committee's detractors for it appeared to support the contention that the committee's efforts were "superfluous." (Interestingly enough the Justice Department appeared to be having difficulty finding wrongdoing anywhere in government. Two weeks earlier it had quietly dropped its conflict-of-interest charges against former Secretary of the Army Howard "Bo" Callaway who had been forced to leave his post as Ford presidential compaign manager when it became known that he had tried to influence government agencies to take action that would have enhanced the value of a Colorado ski resort owned by his family.)

Reeling under these successive blows, committee chairman Gonzales tried to fight back by declaring in an interview on February 3rd that the committee had "uncorroborated evidence" of a conspiracy in the Kings and Kennedy killings." The prospect of these new leads however did not deter the committee's opponents.

On February 5th the Times returned to the fray: printing an Op-Ed article by George McMillan author of The Making of An Assassing:The Life of James Earl Ray. Mr. McMillan asserted that "...There is not a scintilla of positive hard evidence that either Ray or Oswald was acting for, or with, a conspiracy." He urged the Times readership to accept the fact "that Oswald and Ray, indistinct killers, with amorphous ideologies, did in fact alone change our history." (emphasis in original)

But the most bizarre development of all was still to come. Suddenly, without warning, and for reasons that are far from clear, a major feud broke out between Committee Chairman Gonzales and Chief Counsel Sprague. On February 10th, Gonzales attempted to fire Sprague for insubordination and budgetary mismanagement. The committee's eleven other members, however, instructed Sprague to disregard Gonzales' order since the power to hire and fire was invested in the committee as a whole and not in the chairman alone. Whatever the outcome of this personality conflict, it does not look encouraging for the committee's future. Indeed as the Times observed in a February 12th editorial in which it finally came out of the closet: "With so much controversy even at this early, organizational stage of work, it is

Committee For Human Rights

By THE PUERTO RICAN COMMITTEE FOR HUMAN RIGHTS

The Puerto Rican Committee for Human Rights was formed in October 1976. This Committee's formation is based on representation of Northampton's Puerto Rican community and we are actively organizing to present our community's needs and grievances to institutions and agencies in the city that are directly or indirectly discriminating against them. We are committed to the protection of human rights and to the abolition of discriminatory practices in the vital areas of housing, education, health, employment, and the judicial processes.

Brief History

Our struggle to combat racism in these specific areas has its roots to the beginning of 1976 when some of the present members of the Committee began their active role within the local Puerto Rican community. Through various diverse advocacy situations and because of the social-economic conditions of the times, the pattern of discrimination by Northampton's institutions and agencies against the Puerto Rican community became only too apparent and blatantly clear. The message was only too real for us: whereas individual advocacy work was still seen as important for helping and reaching people's immediate needs, there was a demonstrated more essential concern for organizing at the grass roots level.

During 1976 there were also a series of direct police harassment and violation of civil rights of several members of our Puerto Rican community. Some of this incidents have been publicized. These racist incidents unified many Puerto Ricans from both the Northampton and the UMass community, and were among the compelling forces that led to the creation of the Puerto Rican Committee for Human Rights.

There has been a steady migration of lower income, rural and urban Puerto Ricans to the Valley, and into the confines of Northampton specifically. Because of the economic exploitation of Puerto Ricans on their own homeland, their struggle to survive has forced them to migrate to the U.S. Until our isla Borinquen is free from all economic-political exploitation by the U.S., Puerto Ricans will continue to be violated and abused. We must put a stop to all racist and imperialist tactics employed by the "monster". And if we must temporarily struggle to survive within the "belly of the monster", then we will give it the worst case of gastroenteritis!!

Progressive ' Film Series Presents

Malcolm X

The Progressive Film Series Presents: February 24, 1977, Malcolm X Speaks, 44 minutes, Produced by Malcolm X.

This film is a chronicle of the life of Malcolm X. It is a documentary on the life and thought of one of the most insightful critics and prophetic thinkers of the past decade. The film unfolds the drama of his life from his early days of a street hustler to his prison term and conversion to the Black Muslim faith.

Malcolm X: Struggle for Freedom, 22 minutes, produced by Lebert Bethume.

Malcolm discusses the racial problems and other social inequities of our age at a time when his views were rapidly evolving toward a new approach. It was filmed during his trip to Europe and Asia, just three months before his assassination.

ALSO: To be shown at Herter Auditorium 231 at 7:30 p.m. and 10:00 p.m. Sponsored by the Commuter Collective, the Commuters area Government at UMass.

The Collective is asking for $1.00 donation to help defray the cost of showing these films.

To trace the origin of the black student movement in the 1960's we have to understand the beginnings of the civil rights movement.

The first mass civil disobedience protest against segregration began with the Montgomery Boycott. The Montgomery movement began on December 1, 1955 when a black seamstress named Mrs. Rosa Parks refused to give her seat on a bus to a white man because she was too tired to stand.

"After the arrest, a group of black women asked the ministers and civic leaders to call a boycott on December 5, the day of Mrs. Park's trial. One of the ministers who responded to that call was twenty-six year old doctor of philosophy, Martin Luther King Jr., an Atlanta native and pastor of Montgomery's Dexter Baptist Church."(1)

Out of mass struggle new organizations emerge. From mass meetings the Montgomery Improvement Association was formed. The M.I.A. organized a car pool to transport brothers and sisters who lived too far to walk back and forth to work.

At mass meetings Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. emerged as the main mass leader of the boycott. The city of Montgomergy tried to break the boycott; but after a year of struggle, the U.S. Supreme Court declared Alabama's state and local laws supporting segregation on buses unconstitutional.

The Montgomergy boycott served as an example of successful mass direct action. Dr. King insisted the success of the boycott had been because it's participants had adhered to non-violence. He soon became the advocate of a passive resistence movement. Other communities organized similar campaigns.

By 1957 sixty southern black leaders met and formed the Southern Christian Leadership Conference to develop the non-violent mass direct action movement. Also in 1957, Dr. King, along with A. Phillip Randolph and Roy Wilkens of the N.A.A.C.P., organized a mass prayer vigil in Washington, D.C. which was the largest black protest demonstration up until that time in history.

From black working class struggles for national democratic rights, black youth, especially in the South, began to relate to the movement. Many were determined not to "wait" for freedom. In 1959 the Cuban revolution was victorious; many youth closely followed this revolution. The year 1960 came in with the aura of high expectations. It was a presidential election year and the N.A.A.C.P. had projected the slogan "Free by '63."

On February 1, 1960 four freshman at A&T College in Greensboro, North Carolina sat in at a segregated Woolworth lunch counter downtown. In a matter of days, the idea leaped to other cities in North Carolina. During the next two weeks, sit-ins spread to fifteen cities in five Southern states. Within the following year, over 50,000 people-most were black, some white-participated in some kind of demonstration or another in a hundred; and over 3,600 demonstrators spent time in jail.

In a year several hundred lunch counters had been desegregated in Southern cities.

"Nearly 1,300 arrests had been made by this time...There were 400 arrests in Orangeburg, about 150 in Nashville, nearly 40 in each of Tallhassee and Florence (South Carolina), about 80 in Atlanta, about 65 in Memphis and nearly 85 in Marshall, Texas.

In the North, college students staged supporting demonstrations and raised funds for arrested Southern students. The focus of the sit-ins was broadening to include libraries, museums and art galleries; the methods... were...wade-ins, stand-ins, kneel-ins, and other forms of non-violent direct action..." (2)

Miss Ella Baker, an organizer for SCLC, decided to hold a conference bringing together the sit-in leaders. She asked SCLC to underwrite it financially.

"Ella Baker went to Raleigh and got her Alma Mater, Shaw University, to provide facilities for a meeting of about a hundred students. But by the time of the conference on Easter weekend, April 15-17, 1960, demonstrations had spread so fast that there were sixty centers of sit-in activity. Also, nineteen Northern colleges were interested enough to send delegates. The result was that over two-hundred people came to the conference, one-hundred twenty-six of them student delegates from fifty-eight different Southern communities in twelve states." (3)

The black student movement of the 1960's began with the sit-ins. When SNCC, the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, was formed it served as an ad hoc coordinating committee for local centers of action. In the early sixties SNCC provided the movement with a center for non-violent direct action against racial discrimination.

In the North, white students formed the Northern Student Movement (NSM), that raised funds for SNCC.

The turning point for SNCC came when CORE, the Congress of Racial Equality started the freedom rides in 1961. "On May 14, 1961, members of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) began the Freedom Rides to test a Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in transportation terminals. On May 20, after one of CORE's integrated buses was bombed near Anniston, Alabama and another was mobbed in Birmingham, CORE decided to call off its rides." (4)

A group of Nashville SNCC students lead by Diana Nash and students in Atlanta continued the Freedom Rides. They decided to leave school for the movement. Most promised a year, others two of full time school for he movement. Most promised a year, others two of full time commitment. Black students re-activated the movement in 1961; and before the summer was over, students from all over the country had taken rides in the South.

In the fall of '61, SNCC found it increasingly difficult to keep action going on the college campuses. By this time, a core of students had left school and were working full time with SNCC. This transformed SNCC from a student group to a professional civil rights organization.

Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, embarrassed by the Freedom Rides, suggested that civil rights organizations jointly sponsor a campaign to register Southern black voters. When the Justice Department seemed to offer federal protection for registration workers and white liberals procured foundation money to finance costs, civil rights groups agreed to develop the project.

SNCC soon became the main focus of organizing mass voter registration drives in the rural South. Between 1961 and the fall of 1962, SNCC workers conducted many courageous drives in Mississippi. In December of 1962, SNCC made a major breakthrough. It managed to work with the Albany movement to mobilize hundreds of blacks to fill the jails. The protests in Albany were against the city's segregation laws. Later Dr. King was brought in and national attention came to the issue. This was the first time SNCC, a student group, had moved masses of poor blacks in the rural South. Albany soon became a prototype for later actions in 1963.

In the North, another student formation began to take place. In the fall of 1961, black students at Central State College in Wilberforce, Ohio who had been involved in the sit-ins, Freedom Rides, African nationalist organizations and the Nation of Islam began to discuss what they felt were the shortcomings of the civil rights movement. The students decided to form a political party on campus to bring about a black political awareness. As these black student revolutionaries began to formulate ideas for their party, some decided to leave school and go into Northern black communities and organize as SNCC did in Southern communities. After some debate, a name was chosen for their black student party, it was called the RAM party, later to become known as the Revolutionary Action Movement.

"1963 produced the second phase of the protest era. By spring, through efforts of SNCC and SCLC organizers, various Southern cities were seething with protest revolt. The turning point of mass black consciousness and for the protest movement came during the "spring non-violent offensive" in Birmingham, Alabama. Dr. Martin Luther King, who had become the symbol of the direct action non-violent struggle through the efforts of SCLC and SNCC...pushed Birmingham to the brink. The honkies-bringing out dogs, tanks, water hoses on women and children-was too much for the African-Americans to stomach. Within months mass demon-

Subliminal Seduction

By KARIEN ZACHERY

Subliminal Seduction ... Seduction below the level of consciousness, or awareness of oneself.

The word subliminal means below the level of consciousness ... for example, when one is day-dreaming they are not conscious of the happeninns around them; however, their subconscious is picking up and recording vibrations and messages given off by the environment.

Seduction can be in forms from a request to a con. It simply means to somehow convince to submit to a stronger will ... to win over.

Very few people are familiar with the term, subliminal seduction, yet the essence of the meaning exists everywhere in our environment: in the forms of television, radio, movies, concerts, records, plays, ad infinitum.

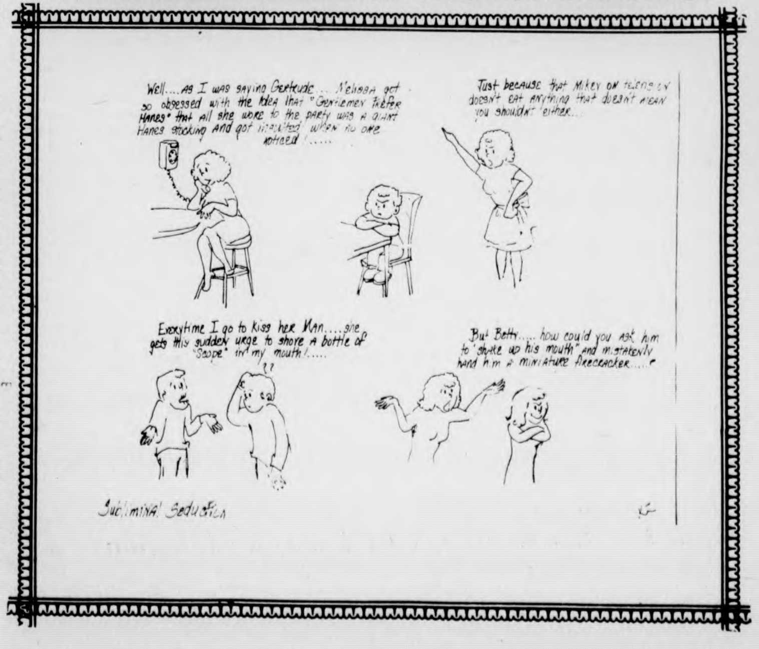
We are definitely a direct product of the "melting pot" of America, especially the Black population. We have been subject to more influences than any other people ever existing. At least the Polish, French, German, Italian, Chinese people, etc. still have some form of their original culture. It's hard to even imagine what you would be like if you were not raised under this western influence.

But ... everyday the masses are molded, shaped, fashioned, grown and killed ... mentality. Ameerica has the ability to make its people think and act in whatever manner she dislikes. Your likes and dislikes are the likes and dislikes of this culture. You are what you eat, mentally and physically. If you only eat certain things, how can you be anything other than that? Stretching the main idea of this passage a bit ... we are, in fact, human robots. Our lives are dictated to by such things as, "Good Times," soap operas, cartoons, etc.

Have you ever noticed while you're watching T.V., a commercial advertising McDonald's comes on displaying a luscious doubledecker and a cool, frosty vanilia shake. Suddenly you get this burning desire to eat ... your taste buds start to dance in your mouth and you can almost taste the food. "The power of suggestion." How many children and adults do you know who are running around claiming they're "The Fonz"? How many Superflys do you know? How many Kojaks and Wondergirls ... do you know?

All of these ideas are picked up from various means of communication to the public. The point is that no one individual has a mind of their own, even though they may think they have.

Influence and warped minds is the order of the day. Everybody's trying to find out who they can get over on ... who's mind is weaker than theirs. Just as society has the ability to feed the people weak and degenerate ideas, it can also feed them strong idea ... it's simple; thus, the production of a strong nation.



Well.... As I was saying Gertrude.... Melissa got so obsessed with the idea that "Gentlemen Prefer Hanes" that all she wore to the party was a giant Hanes stocking and got insulted when no one noticed!.....
Just because that Mikey on television doesn't eat anything that doesn't mean you shouldn't either...
Everytime I go to kiss her Man....she gets this sudden urge to shove a bottle of "Scope" in my mouth!.....
??
But Betty..... how could you ask him to 'shake up his mouth" and mistakenly hand him a miniature firecracker.....

Weekly News Roundup: International-National

United Press International

BANGKOK, Thailand — Vietnam, in a blow to President Carter's overtures, accused the United States yesterday of using undercover military agents in Thailand and Green Beret teams in Laos to sabotage peace in Southeast Asia.

In its first major comment on the United States since Carter's inauguration, the Hanoi Quan Doi Nhan Dan (People's Army) daily newspaper also said the United States has an "immediate and long-term scheme of subversion and aggression in Southeast Asia."

One Western diplomat said the article appeared to be a setback in US-Vietnam relations. It followed by less than a week a statement by Carter that he wants to send a mission to Hanoi to learn the fate of hundreds of missing Americans.

The harsh attack said the United States planned to reopen its closed bases in Thailand.

The military paper's attack on the United States was carried by the official Vietnam News Agency and was monitored in Bangkok.

The newspaper is one of only two national dailies in Vietnam and is considered to express the opinions of top Vietnamese leaders.

Vietnam charged in the article that the United States:

—Has "thousands of US military personnel in civilian, diplomatic or commercial disguise to carry on (its) operations" in Thailand.

—Has "encouraged Thailand to make military provocations against Laos and Cambodia."

—Is "energetically reorganizing the Green Beret forces in several mountain areas of Laos for sabotate against the peaceful construction of this country."

—Is making preparations to reopen its telecommunications and electronic detection bases closed last summer in Thailand.

The Hanoi article said that some of the spy bases "are functioning under direct instructions from US advisers."

American officials say US military personnel in Thailand number fewer than 200 advisers and some Marine guards and attaches at the embassy.

The United States maintains several field advisers with large Thai army units and lands several planes a month at Takhli air base north of Bangkok. The planes mostly are involved with Indian Ocean surveillance of the Soviet navy.

HONG KONG, Feb. 15 (AP) — Chinese leaders have indicated to David Rockefeller that they want to settle the dispute over Chinese assets frozen in the United States and private American claims in China, the Far Eastern Economic Review reported today.

The weekly Hong Kong magazine said, without giving a source, that this was indicated to Mr. Rockefeller, chairman of the Chase Manhattan Bank, when he visited Peking last month.

A spokesman for Mr. Rockefeller, reached in New York, declined to confirm or deny the report. He said that the substance of Mr. Rockefeller's talks in China was confidential and added:

"When he returned from Japan and China, he met with the President and the Secretary of State and Mr. (Zbigniew) Brzezinski, and the substance of the talks with those people also was confidential."

Mr. Brzezinski is chairman of the National Security Council and a top adviser to the President.

Chinese funds frozen in the United States total $76.5 million, while owners of American corporate and private property seized by the Communists on coming to power in 1949 say it is worth a total of $196.9 million. The two Governments agreed in principle four years ago to settle the dispute, but a full settlement has been delayed by other problems.

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — The government yesterday ordered Roman Catholic schools that integrated their classrooms to expel their nonwhite students by the end of this week, and the church has refused.

In a showdown over the church's recent defiance of South Africa's segregation laws, the administrator of Transvaal Province, Sybrand van Niekerk, said he intended to "deregister" four Catholic schools that have admitted black and colored pupils. Colored is the official South African term for persons of mixed race.

As administrator of the Transvaal, Van Niekerk answers to the central government and acts as its arm at provincial level in applying policy.

The loss of accreditation would cut off financial subsidies the state gives to many private schools.

Van Niekerk said the four schools must comply with the order by the end of the week and expel their new nonwhite students, but a Roman Catholic spokesman said the church will not yield.

The spokesman said Catholic officials do not think the government will use force to carry out its orders or close the schools. If a school's registration is withdrawn, he said, the students work and examinations would not be recognized.

South African bishops voted last week to integrate Roman Catholic schools in defiance of apartheid laws that separate blacks and whites.

The Anglican church has begun a series of meetings with government officials in attempts to follow the Catholic lead, but with prior official sanction. Prospects for such sanction are unlikely.

Officials in Natal Province have taken no action against integrated Catholic schools there. The eastern province, which contains the port of Durban, is traditionally more flexible in its application of racial apartheid legislation.

The Transvaal includes Johannesburg and Pretoria, South Africa's administrative capital.

Van Niekerk said he will grant an interview to Archbishop George Daniel of Pretoria and seven Catholic educators to discuss integration, but his ruling cannot be appealed.

"I caa discuss (integration) but cannot agree to it," the administrator said, because a parliamentary amendment is the only way to change the apartheid laws.

Fewer than 100 black and mulatto children are involved in the Catholic experiment. Spokesmen have declined to provide more details or any estimate of how much government funding could be affected.

Officials in Namibia (South West Africa) last week withdrew a $27,600 grant to two Catholic schools that took in blacks.

Meanwhile, in Cape Town, South Africa's legislative capital, Foreign Minister Hilgard Muller said that representatives of the United States, Great Britain and South Africa will meet in the very near future to discuss a Rhodesian settlement.

There are great expectations about a new Rhodesian initiative by South African Prime Minister John Vorster which could have far reaching consequences for the whole of Africa, Muller said at a press club luncheon.

(In Washington, Reuter reported that the State Department called Muller's statement on news initiatives toward a Rhodesian settlement premature.)

(A spokesman said no high-level meeting on Rhodesia or new initiative was planned.)

WASHINGTON — President Carter yesterday nominated Wade H. McCree, a black Federal appeals court judge, to become solicitor general.

The White House also reported that Carter had a 30-minute talk with Clark Clifford before the special envoy to Cyprus departed for a tour of the war-torn island.

Clifford is scheduled to spend three days each in Greece and Turkey and 2½ days in Nicosia on Cyprus seeking to reunify the island that Turkish forces divided in a 1974 invasion.

In addition to nominating McCree for the No. 3 post in the Justice Department, Carter chose another black lawyer and two women attorneys for ranking Justice positions. The nominations are subject to Senate confirmation.

McCree, 56, a resident of Detroit, grew up in Roxbury, Mass., and attended Boys Latin in Boston, Fisk University in Nashville, Tenn. and Harvard Law School. He has been a member of the appellate court for the 6th Circuit, based in Cincinnati, since 1966.

As solicitor general, McCree will have a decisive role in choosing which cases the government takes to the Supreme Court and in charting Administration positions on many other Supreme Court cases.

McCree is the second black to hold the position. The first was Thurgood Marshall, who held the job as an appointee of President Lyndon B. Johnson from 1965 to 1967 and is now a Supreme Court Justice.

Carter also nominated Drew Saunders Days 3d to be assistant attorney general in charge of the civil rights division.

Days, 35, an attorney with the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund, Inc., will be the first black assistant attorney general in the department's 187-year history.

Stanford Law School Prof. Barbara Allen Babcock, 38, was nominated as assistant attorney general in charge of the civil division. Tricia M. Wald, 48, was picked as assistant attorney general in charge of legislative affairs.

WASHINGTON — President Carter said yesterday Cuba may be ready to remove its troops from Angola, and a congressman said he was told in Havana the withdrawal is at least half completed.

Carter said he would be willing to resume full diplomatic relations with Cuba once it withdraws its "mercenaries" from southern Africa and fulfills a number of other conditions, including respect for human rights.

But Rep. Jonathan Bingham (D-N.Y.), who talked with Premier Fidel Castro for seven hours last week, said Castro expects the United States to meet some conditions, too. "The ball is in our court," Bingham said.

(Reuter news service reported Bingham told a Capitol Hill news conference the Cubans were not going to stop their role in Angola in response to US pressure. He said that although the Cubans had withdrawn half their troops, they had been sending in thousands of technicians. He added that they planned to continue their "elaborate technical assistance program" to the pro-Marxist Angolan government.)

(The Associated Press reported Bingham also said Cuba will not resume its antihijacking agreement with the United States until the US trade embargo is lifted.)

The FBI....."Political Police"...USA

By Terrell Evans

In the title I have used the phrase "political police", the F.B.I. and the United States of America in conjunction with each other. This relationship raises an important question simply because we are here in America. The question that arises is: Why does this country, America, advocater of free speech and political freedom, need an organization which comprises a "political police" force? The question is not difficult to answer. The F.B.I. as "political police" job is to ascertain what ideas are suitable for the ears of the American people and which ideas are not. The idea the working class should revolt and utilize the resources of this country to enhance their own well being, is a subversive idea not suitable for exposure to the American people. The Black Panther Party, the Socialist Workers Party, and certain branches of the Civil Rights Organization are examples of subversive and undesirable organizations.

The tactics used by the F.B.I. are not unfamiliar if you are familiar with the "dirty tricks" employed by Nixon's cohorts. By combining the "dirty tricks" and the strategy used by the Watergate burglars, you will have an insight to the tactics used by the F.B.I. The F.B.I. went so far as to create a program-Cointelpro. The Counterintelligence Program was designed to disrupt "the political activities of American citizens-legal activities protected by the Bill of Rights". (1)

The Socialist Workers Party (SWP)

A major concern of the F.B.I. was to keep members of SWP from holding public office. One particular operation involved Judy White, SWP electee for the governor of New York in 1966. Judy White was a leader in the antiwar movement and the only candidate running for governor to take a negative stand on the war. Ms. White's stance on the war led to endorsement by numerous opponents of the war and many radicals not especially close to SWP.

The F.B.I. decided that the campaign should be discredited and devised a method using the media to do it. The Agency observed that Ms. White was not legally old enough to hold the position as governor. The information was transmitted to the media by the F.B.I. This action created a controversy which led to what was called the "anti-Judy White Law". (2) The state legislature passed a law altering the election charter making it illegal for any person to run for an office, unless they were old enough to assume the position of that office.

Even before the law was passed, CBS news in New York, contending that Ms. White wasn't old enough to hold office, prevented her from appearing on a television special featuring the candidates. In effect, the SWP broadcast time came to a sudden stop. (The party had been receiving a considering amount of broadcast time before the incident).

In another incident, the F.B.I. attacked the SWP and the Black movement by bringing to the public eye derogatory information debasing another SWP member. In 1961 the SWP announced Clarence Franklin as party's candidate for Manhattan borough president, a black man.

The F.B.I. reviewed the history of Clarence Franklin and found that he accumulated a criminal record. The Bureau again went to the media. On November 7, 1961 (3) the New York Daily News published in a column called On the Town, a story on Clarence Franklin. The columnist put in the story Franklin's arrest record which included larceny; burglary and manslaughter. As a result, Clarence Franklin was publicly embarrassed and eventually withdrew from the race.

Not all of the F.B.I.'s attempts to disgrace and undermine the political campaigns of the SWP were successful. Whether the F.B.I. was successful or not, is not the cause for alarm. The fact that there exists in this country, an organization with the power to limit the political activities of an individual or groups of individuals is the cause for alarm.

Disrupting Anti-War Demonstrations

In some cases the F.B.I. tried to stave off the compilation of the peace movement by giving it bad publicity.

In Bloomington, Indiana at the University of Indiana, the F.B.I. published its own newsletter Armageddon News. The newsletter ran for two semesters, the publications attempted to prevent any nonleftist students from joining leftist organizations and participating in antiwar demonstrations.

A second newsletter published by the F.B.I. was designed to disrupt a peace movement on April 5. 1969. (4) The newsletter supposedly written by a member of the Students for a Democratic Society criticized the SWP and Young Socialist Alliance. Thus trying to introduce on favorable tensions when the groups met.

In San Diego, California the F.B.I. created the Secret Army Organization. The Army's job was to terrorize war protestors. According to the American Civil Liberties Union, the Army was to serve as provocateurs, creating disorder at antiwar rallies, giving the California police reasons to intervene and creating bad publicity for the whole movement.

F.B.I. actions against the Civil Rights Organizations involved the Committee to Aid the Monroe Defendants (CAMD) in 1964. The objective was to sabotage this defense committee, which was helping a group of civil rights workers facing prison in Monroe, North Carolina. The SWP was also involved in the defense committee. The F.B.I. tried to create discord between CAMD and SWP by framing a Militant magazine reporter-George Wiessman.

The frame-up made it appear that Wiessman had stolen defense funds from the home of Dr. A.E. Perry, head of the local NAACP chapter and CAMD. The F.B.I. made sure the incident was published in the newspaper. They also sent letters to a carefully selected list of men, concerning the actions of Mr. Wiessman. The list included Leroi Jones and James Baldwin.

I have presented only a few of the illegal acts the F.B.I. undertook. These operations and others came to light as a result of civil liberties suits filed by the SWP and Young Socialist Alliance in 1973. (5) In landmark court decisions the F.B.I. was forced to present documents exposing Cointelpro-a seventeen year old program. Thousands of documents were released, many were censored and many others the F.B.I. decided not to release are still locked in their files.

FRANCISTOWN, Botswana, Feb. 15 — Hundreds of young black Rhodesians are moving through an overcrowded camp outside Francistown each week, heading for guerrilla training camps in neighboring Zambia.

"Only by shipping them out almost daily on flights to Zambia can the authorities manage to control them all," says one British aid official, who reports that the flow of volunteers is increasing steadily.

Volunteers for the guerrillas come across Rhodesia's western border into this industrial city with refugees from the guerrilla war. All are funneled into a cramped, heavily guarded camp and turned over to Joshua Nkomo's Zimbabwe African Peoples Union. Mr. Nkomo's group is one of two Rhodesian nationalist movements with guerrilla armies fighting across the border to unseat Rhodesia's white minority Government.

Many of the refugees quickly volunteer for training in camps set up by Mr. Nkomo's organization in Zambia with the blessing of President Kenneth D. Kuanda of Zambia.

Hundreds each week are flown 450 miles northeast to Lusaka, the Zambian capital, traveling on scheduled flights of Zambia Airways or on special charters.

Noting that word has spread through the western Rhodesian province of Matebeleland that "people are wanted as freedom fighters," one Botswana police officer said, "as a result, they are pouring across the border to volunteer."

One of the largest groups to cross consisted of 400 students from a Swedish Lutheran mission school at Maname, 10 miles for the border. In Salisbury, the Rhodesian Government said guerrillas had kidnapped the students. But only 53 agreed to go home with their parents, who were sent over the border in buses to get them.

White Rhodesian intelligence officers depict the airlifts as an effort by Mr. Nkomo to build his forces up to those of Robert Mugabe, whose Zimbabwe African National Union operates in eastern Rhodesia from Mozambique and Tazania.

Although Rhodesian intelligence officers portray Mr. Nkomo and Mr. Mugabe as rivals, the refugee flow has increased since the formation last October of a fragile alliance between their movements, called the Patriotic Front. Between them, the two men control most of the anti-Government guerrillas, both inside and out of Rhodesia.

Total Put at More Than 1,000

Rhodesian intelligence sources say that more than 1,000 blacks, who range in age from 13 to 30, have crossed into Botswana for training since the first major guerrilla moves into Matabeleland from Zambia six months ago.

On one day recently the Francistown camp — built for 400 to 500 refugees — was jammed with 791 Rhodesians, a spokesman for a British aid agency said.

On one single recent weekend, 314 crossed the border seeking sanctuary, according to Phil Steenkamp, adviser to Sir Seretse Khama, President of Botswana.

Rhodesian intelligence officers suggest that Mr. Nkomo's organization can field more than 2,000 men, Mr. Mugabe's more than 6,000.

Rhodesian officials contend that reports gleaned from captured guerrillas and documents as well as informers indicate Mr. Nkomo has 200 men in Matabeleland and a few hundred in the three other fronts stretching along eastern Rhodesia. The others are in training in Zambia, they say.

Mr. Mugabe, on the other hand, is pictured by the white Rhodesians as having infiltrated as many as 2,000 guerrillas into the country in the last 14 months, some of whom have penetrated to within 40 miles of the Rhodesian capital. Intelligence officers say the rest are in camps in Mozambique, the main launching point for their offensives, and in Tanzania.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Feb. 14 (Reuters) — Two French lawyers have compiled a report in which they accuse Brazilian policemen of torturing common criminals and minors, as well as political prisoners.

Brazil's right-wing military Government has been repeatedly accused of torturing political prisoners, but has always denied the accusations.

In a dossier they intend to send to the International Commission of Catholic Jurists of the Peace and Justice Commission of the Vatican, the French lawyers — Louis Joinet and Mario Stasi — singled out the criminal investigation division in Brazil's largest city, Sao Paulo, as one of the worst centers of torture of common criminals and minors.

"In Brazil, apart from the maltreatment of political prisoners, there are grave violations of the human rights of common delinquents and essentially minors," Mr. Joinet, of the Central Administration of Justice in Paris, said before flying home yesterday.

"When in a country the torture of minors becomes a routine, it is a sign of the gravest human rights in that country," he said.

JOHANNESBURG, Feb. 15 (AP) — A black man who was being detained fell 10 stories to his death today at Johannesburg police headquarters, the police said. He was the 18th black to die in custody in less than a year.

The man, identified as Matthews Mabilane, was apparently trying to escape during questioning, the police said. Mr. Mabilane was being held under the "terrorism act," which allows detention without trial or access to lawyers and family.

A spokesman for the security police said that Mr. Mabilane had opened a window and climbed through before anyone could stop him.

CASABLANCA, Morocco, Feb. 15 (Reuters) — A court here imposed jail sentences today on 176 leftists for plotting to overthrow King Hassan and establish a people's republic in Morocco.

It sentenced 44 to jail for life.

Only five of these were in court for the six-week trial. The 39 others were tried in their absence. Prison terms from five to 30 years were imposed on 132 persons. In three cases these were suspended sentences.

The prisoners chanted revolutionary songs as guards led them away to the cells at the end of an all-night session lasting nine hours, when verdicts were read.

Among those jailed for life was Abraham Serfaty Ben Moshe, a Jewish mining engineer, who was said by the prosecutor to have been the intended president of new republic. A former leader of the outlawed Moroccan Communist Party, he was told to be leader.

NAIROBI, Kenya — Uganda's Anglican archbishop and two government ministers were arrested yesterday in connection with an alleged plot to overthrow Ugandan President Idi Amin, Uganda radio reported.

The arrests were announced following an open-air ceremony in the Ugandan capital of Kampala at which three men said they had plotted to overthrow Amin. "Kill them! Kill them today!" shouted some 3000 troops assembled for the ceremony.

Uganda radio, monitored here, said Archbishop Janani Luwum, Internal Affairs Minister Charles Oboth-Ojumbe and Land and Water Resources Minister Erinayo Oreyma had been arrested.

Luwum, who attended the concession ceremony with other Anglican bishops, was seen to shake his head in denial as his name was mentioned in connection with the alleged plot.

Church officials outside Uganda expressed fears the arrests might set off a purge against Christians in the country.

Amin said the plot had been launched by former Uganda president Milton Obote, now living in Tanzania.

Aballa Anywui, former head of Uganda's public service commission and one of those arrested, read a long memo allegedly drawn up by Obote.

The other two prisoners reading statements were John Olobo, a ministry of labor official, and Lt. Ben Ogwang of the Ugandan army.

Investigations

hard to see how the committee can command the credibility essential to its substantive work. Regretfully, we urge the House to drop the investigation." The Times had finally revealed its position on the committee — though it had modestly declined to mention its own role in stirring up the controversy it now, sadly deplored.

The Contradictions Of Congress.

An outside observer monitoring these developments can only marvel at the failure of the American people to perceive what is going on under their very noses. This subversion of the House Assassination Committee is Watergate anew. Only this time the culprit is the legislative and not the executive branch. It is the Congress the supposed guardian of the people's interests that is so vitally concerned about saving the people's money that it wants to trim the assassination committee's budget down to zilich. It is hard to believe that this is the same branch of government which blithely sat by and watched 25 billion dollars a year being spent in Vietnam and that okayed a 270 million dollar loan to Lockheed and a 670 million dollar loan to General Dynamics. It is hard to believe that this is the same body questioning the investigative ethics of Richard Sprague which has yet to pass a code of ethics for its own conduct. And it is impossible to reconcile this Congress' concern with its integrity with the more than 40 of its members who are alleged to have been on the payroll of the South Korean government. Surely this is not the same group which brazenly manuevered to have its own 120 million dollar pay raise enacted without an embarrassing recorded vote.

And they want to know why politicians rank below garbagemen in the public esteem.

An outraged public should flood the Congress and the White house with telegrams demanding the preservation of this committee for the host of unanswered questions surrounding the King and Kennedy assassinations still abound:

1. Where did James Earl Ray get the thousands of dollars found on him when apprehended in London?
2. Where did he obtain the two false passports he had in his possession: both of which were of persons who bore a striking resemblance to him?
3. Why did the FBI smear King to the Memphis press for staying at a white hotel, causing him to move to the only black hotel in town where he was subsequently slain?
4. Why did the Memphis police pull off the police bodyguards who had been assigned to Dr. King and then place two of the detail under house arrest when they volunteered to guard him on their own because of the rumors of threats to his life which they had heard?
5. Why did the FBI and CIA destroy, distort and conceal evidence from the Warren Commission?

If murder stands in the way of justice and democracy in America then it is the duty of us all to say: "Stop, enough."...."Don't mourn. Organize...(Joe Hill)..." "Truth crushed to earth will rise again...(Martin Luther King, Jr.)"

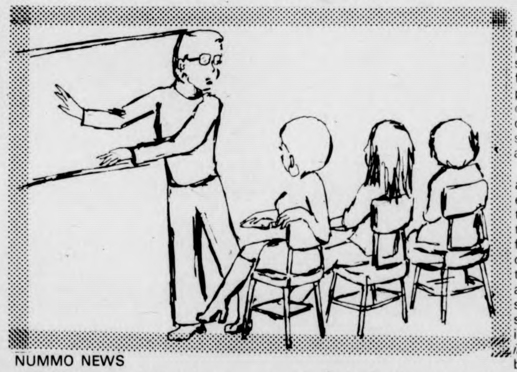
What Is Education ?



NUMMO NEWS

My own views of education are like that of a business. After nearly thirty years I feel fully capable of identifying projects and resources which will enable my business to prosper. Once a person has understood and managed the basic techniques of business, he then possesses the tools which will allow him to apply them to the specifics of his desire. What he may need, in addition to his skills, is the opportunity to consult with someone having more expertise than himself.

However, it would be both an imposition and immoral for anyone to assume the responsibility of setting requirements or deadlines which may not be within another's capabilities, scope or interests. Thus, for the business consultant to consciously set stringent requirements for the manager would be an injustice.

Running a business is a very impersonal matter, as is learning. This, however, does not negate the business manager or student for soliciting positive suggestions or contributions.

Along similar lines, each individual on the face of the earth should be in charge of designing the specifics of his own life's course and his own learning goals, as well as conceivable ways of meeting those goals once he has mastered basic learning skills. The degree of guidance he may require in meeting his goals may vary, according to the specific goals; however, setting them should be his design.

As captain of her own ship, this person requires the opportunity of designing her own charted course or at least the freedom to explore available courses without any compulsions. She naturally welcomes any positive guidance, but must seek her own lighthouse. Her charted course must avoid the narrow-minded stumbling stones of those who will not cooperate in offering positive suggestions of navigation less she agree with their limited visions of the one and only proper path. Thus, her journey must be free of external compulsions as she independently searches for the lighthouses of truth.

As an educator returning to a university for an advanced degree, after six years of diverse experiences and some study at the University of Massachusetts Center for Human Potential, I feel that I owe it to my profession to acknowledge those factors which can be perceived to limit positive elements within present-day educational institutions. Current trends on teaching popularly exemplify injustices in many educational settings (whether overt or covert, conscious or unconscious), are having some very detrimental affects on students — stilfed "human potentials" or suppressed human freedoms.

In varying degrees, the design of many courses infringe on human freedoms. It is of a worthy benefit if an instructor constructs his course based on matters which he perceives as being of most benefit to his students. However, that design would assume the quality of injustice if it enveloped the claws of mandatory and compulsory requirements which exclude or minimize the students flexibility to substitute part or some of the entire framework put before him. The point being that it would be based on the instructor's personal perceptions and would not necessarily stem from the student's own needs and interests.

The student may have had varied and interesting subject-related experiences or exposure. It, therefore, would only seem just that the student have both the freedom and opportunity to further define or redefine the personal theories he has (more than likely), accumulated on a particular subject. The compatibility of the student's views with those of his instructors should be of least importance. An honest approach by both teacher and student should evolve from a desire to search for truth, and thus be the only basis for a clear understanding of the subject at hand.

Unfortunately, the student may be unrealistically bound by compulsory mandates of a course design. These compulsive requirements are often minus individual relevancy. The student, depending on the extent of his needs and interests, should have both the freedom and opportunity to interrelate his past experiences with the general subject being taught, while receiving only positive suggestions and feedback. In no way should the instructor obligate the student to complete a course he designed, when the student does not feel it is reflective of his needs. To do so is a display of injustice stemming from compulsion and leading to oppression.

Injustices arise when the teacher sacrifices honesty and open-mindedness when examining the student's viewpoint. Since it is the teacher who most often assumes the vantage position in a class setting, a moral issue arises if the students with differing views are compelled to conform to the established course layout without the opportunity to explore new possibilities. Authority power-plays hinder the flow of the independent search for truth. It would be more honest if the teacher would allow the student to analyze and integrate his experiences into personally relevant phenomenon, while offering positive suggestions as opposed to dominating mandates.

Tomorrow Has Been Here And Gone

Voices of New Africa House Choir

VOICES OF NEW AFRICA CHOIR TO PRESENT MUSICAL TOMORROW HAS BEEN HERE AND GONE, a musical play by Thurman W. Stanback and Semenya McCord will be presented by the Voices of New Africa House Workshop Choir on March 15, 16 and 17 in Bowker Auditorium at UMass, Amherst. Dealing with the struggles of a black New York family during the sixties, the play examines the motivation behind the riots, burning and looting which took place during the sixties, the effects of the Viet Nam war on black families, and the first suggestions of the migration of blacks beat to the south.

The play was premiered as a drama at Bethune-Cookman College in Daytona Beach, Florida in 1969, and was presented by students at Spelman College in Atlanta in December, 1976. The overriding appeal of the play is the expose of heretofore unpublicized attitudes of the black family toward politics and social institutions and the rhetoric employed by these families during their most intimate moments of conversation. At the request of the choir, playwright Stanback has redesigned the play, incorporating a number of scenes which were not a part of the drama to allow for musical numbers. While observing the broadway traditions of the musical, new features have been added to the play, the most notable of which is the creation of scenes during which the choir participates not only on stage, but as pit singers, a device employed in the current broadway hit, THE WIZ.

Thurman Stanback, the playwright, holds the PhD in drama from Cornell University and is a professor of theatre at Florida Atlantic University at Boca Raton. In addition to TOMORROW HAS BEEN HERE AND GONE, he is the author of the plays THE DELICATE THREAD and A STILL SMALL VOICE IN THE SILENT ARENA.

The music for the play has been written by Semenya McCord, a well-known singer and composer throughout New England. She holds the Bachelor of Music degree from Knox College in Illinois and has done further study at UMass. She has composed songs for the Voices of New Africa House Choir and Archie Shepp, the saxophonist, with whom she has recorded as a vocalist. The music of the play is a panorama of Afro-American vocal styles, employing songs in the mode of the blues, gospel, soul and jazz.

The production will be directed by Fran Anderson and choreographed by Melvyn Robinson. Horace Clarence Boyer, the director of the choir, will serve as musical director for the play. The admission fee is $1.50. The box office of Bowker Auditorium will be open from one to 6 p.m. beginning March 7, 1977.

The public is cordially invited to experience the very latest in music and drama in this production.

Open Letter To The Black And Third World Community

By Imari Abubakari Abadele

Dear Brothers and Sisters:

To win freedom. We must start from the fact that Black people are a nation - an oppressed nation - in America.

The only valid citizenship We have is citizenship in the Black Nation. The Black Nation dates back to 1660. In 1968 Black people, meeting in national convention in Detroit, named the Black Nation "the Republic of New Africa."

Our so-called "United States citizenship" does not exist legally because it was offered to our fore-parents - who were kidnapped ex-slaves - three years after We had already been made free people under U. S. law. Our fore-parents were never given the chance to say "yes" or "no" about this offer of U.S. citizenship. As kidnapped people, brought here and held against our will, We had a right to choose what We wanted to do and be, once We were free. Once We had been freed by the Emancipation Proclamation and the Thirteenth Amendment no one could "make" us U.S. citizens or anything else. They had to ask us, and We had to have a chance in an election (a plebiscite) to choose. Right down to today We have never had this chance. This means that today We have no real U.S. citizenship. And We can have no real, legal U.S. citizenship until We have an election - called "a plebiscite" - and vote on the subject. That is international law. It is spelled out, especially, in law passed by the United Nations. These laws are UN Resolutions 1541 and 1514, both passed in December 1960. The U.S. has ruled that international law is part of U.S. law.

This means that today your only real citizenship is in your own Black Nation, the Nation into which you were born, the Republic of New Africa. But it also means that today you still have the right to be a United States citizen - IF you wish. You have the right to be one or the other, and you have the right to be both a citizen of the Black Nation, the Republic of New Africa, into which you were born, AND a citizen of the United States.

Today We still have the right to choose. It is an important decision. It is a valuable right, perhaps the most valuable right We still have. Therefore, let us each make the choice on the basis of all the facts, on the basis of what is good for Black people. Let us not rush to judgement. Let us use this present situation for all it is worth. We may have until 1978 or longer to discuss the matter before voting a final choice.

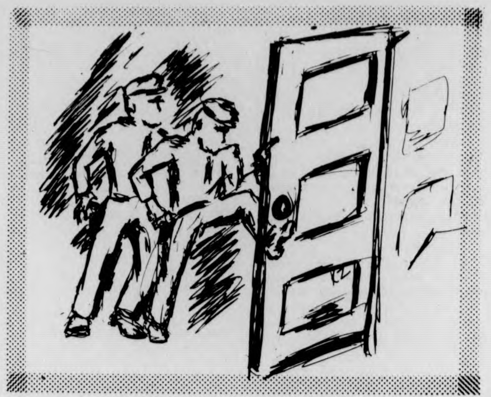
Phil. Police Continue Harassment

At 5:00 a.m. on Friday, February 4, 1977, a North Philadelphia residence of members of the Afrikan Peoples Party was, once again, raided by the Philadelphia Police Department. This marks the 3rd time that this has happened: the previous times were October 20, 1975 and October 20, 1976.

For the last year and one half, the Afrikan Peoples Party has been coming under increased political repression: two members have been framed-up in such a manner that the media projection of these cases has been non-political. No media has been used in the Government State and City Police attacks against the Afrikan Peoples Party (as was the case with the Black Panther Party). We feel that this was due to the pressure the Government is now under from the peoples outrage about their Counter Intelligence Program (COINTELPRO), which is aimed at the destruction of any form of political dissent against the present system of government; and particularly, the opposition of the Black Liberation Movement whose existence represents the most central, continuous form of oppression within the U.S. Society.

The Afrikan Peoples Party, as a specific case in point, is an element of the Black Liberation Movement, which has actually demonstrated its ability to give direction and mobilizes the masses of the people toward resolving their day to day, as well as national problems. In Philadelphia particularly, the Afrikan Peoples Party has been a leading force in the struggles for Black Peoples Democratic Rights within the society as well as educating the people about the need for an alternative political and economic system. Philadelphia has therefore been the center of repression against the Afrikan Peoples Party. Each time these attacks have happened, they have corresponded to campaigns around the peoples day to day needs, in which the Party played a key role in bringing about.

Beginning in 1975, with our involvement with the Black Vendor's struggle for the right to work, we organized demonstrations and boycotts as well as educated community people about the issues. In October 1975 the Afrikan Peoples Party, was attacked by the Philadelphia police and detectives, with no warrant, stating that we were harboring a fugitive. Instead of going on the defensive, we organized a boader organization to fight against repression in general. Because of turning a defensive into an offensive, another attack was made against our Party by framing up one of our members, community activist, Drug fighter, Muhammad Adil, on false drug charges. The support of hundreds of people have clearly refuted these erroneous charges. Inspite of this mass support, he was sentenced to 4½ to 8 years, and is now fighting for an appeal.



In 1976, after helping to organize the Black Anti-Bicentennial Action Committee (BABAC); a Black United Front aimed at mobilizing the people to denounce the atrocities commited against us by this government, by exposing the July 4th American Bicentennial Celebration as a lie, the Afrikan Peoples Party was to be closely watched by local and national authorities. This was due to the fact that our organizational efforts, led to the defeat of Mayor Rizzo's attempts to block the successful 60,000 strong July 4th Coalition's Anti-Bicentennial demonstration, by his calling for 15,000 army troops to "Protect Philadelphia," "claiming that blood would flow in the streets." Also in 1976, in the Coalition for Better Transportation in the City's (CBTC) campaign against SEPTA (Southeastern Pennsylvania Transportation Authority) cutbacks, Afrikan Peoples Party was singled out of a demonstration and beaten by local police. Later following a Press Conference on the transit issue the home of some Afrikan Peoples Party members was attacked by armed FBI agents without a warrant.

In January 1977, an Afrikan Peoples Party member and founding National Chairman of the New Afrikan Martial Arts Federation, Brother Saud Bey-William Lott, was arrested on a fugitive warrant by FBI agents. This warrant was issued from the statement of a police informant stating that he was a part of a conspiracy which led to the robbery of Gino's and the killing of two people "of the Peoples Liberation Army." He was placed on $150,000.00 ransom bail. After mobilizing a 150 people and character witnesses to a later held bail petitioning hearing which reduced it to $90,000.00 ransom bail and a following Press Conference at the Church of the Advocate, Afrikan Peoples Party once again experienced another attack at 5:00 a.m. in the morning by heavily armed County police (note: the police informant's name is "Willie Williams").

The Party is filing for an injunction against further attacks. This repression must not be seen simply as an attack against the APP, but instead as an attack against the Black Liberation Movement.

Political Police

The Cointelpro operations did not get the publicity they deserve. Whether it ever gets this publicity, there are a few things Americans must realize.

(1) They must realize their choice of politics is not theirs at all. (2) They must see that their political preference is determined by the forces that control society. (3) They must realize they are being brainwashed by "patriotic" rhetoric which leads them to think they are politically free.

America has an image to maintain, therefore Cointelpro could only operate in secrecy. As long as such operations exist we will have two Americas. America the victim, and America the victimizer.

On The Liberation Front

strations had occurred all over the south.

In, the North, in Philadelphia, RAM, working with the N.A.A.C.P. organized mass demonstrations against union discrimination in the building trades. The place of the demonstrations was a school construction site in the middle of North Philadelphia's black community. In a week's time, over 10,000 people participated in the demonstrations..This was the first breakthrough in the North. In New York, CORE began demonstrating at down-state northern cities with freedom marches and police brutality demonstrations.

The March on Washington which was held in late August started as a mass movement. Some 250,000 people demonstrated.

The concept of non-violence suffered setbacks among SNCC workers when four black girls were killed in the bombing of a church in Birmingham, Alabama in the fall of 1963.

RAM organized a student wing called ASM, the Afro-American Student Movement. It organized chapters in Nashville, Tennessee, Fish University, Detroit, Michigan and Los Angeles, California. ASM called a student conference on Black Nationalism in May 1964.

The convening of the 1st National Afro-American Student Conference on Black Nationalism held May 1st to 4th in Nashville, Tenn., was the ideological catalyst that eventually shifted the civil rights movements into the Black Power movement. During the summer months, RAM organizers through the agreement of John Lewis, then chairman of SNCC, went into Mississippi to work with SNCC. RAM organizers soon came into conflict with white SNCC workers, who opposed an all-Black force and the practice of self-defense. Soon, RAM began a movement to force whites out of SNCC.

Commentary

IMARI ABUBAKARI OBADELE,

Yes. Our Black government cannot do ALL of the things We want to do. This is because We are not free yet. But We can do a few things to help Black people right now - IF We stand together and work together. The Black Government cannot do very much by itself. The people - all of us - must help. Here are some important ways in which everyone can work with the Provisional Government so that the Provisional Government can help us all:

First, you can support the Black Government, the Provisional Government, with work and taxes and discussion of the issues. You can tell other people who do not know this, that the Black Nation now has an elected Black Government. You should also vote in the various elections called by the Provisional Government, and you should urge your family and friends to vote.

Next, you can join the Community Development Association, or the Land Development Cooperative, in your area - or help to make one. These groups will build medical centers, day-care centers, and schools. They will also organize food-buying clubs and people's farms - so that We may get better food more cheaply. These are things that can help Black people right away. But each of us must pitch in.

These Land Development groups will also begin to build whole New Communities and factories, owned by the people together. This takes more time, but We have to begin NOW.

Let us remember that the most important work of the Provisional Government is to build for the future. It is to win our freedom. As a free nation - like Canada or Mexico or Cuba or Jamaica - We could do much to help ourselves up, instead of being beggars as We are now, and instead of waiting around to see if the United States can save itself and maybe save us.

WHERE IS OUR LAND?

Every free nation must have land. Our land is the land that We have lived on and built up ever since We have been here. It is the Black counties in the South. In Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee, and Arkansas these Black counties and parishes, which today lie along the Mississippi River, are called Kush. (Kush is the name of the great African Kingdom that in the Bible was also called Ethiopia.) These counties and parishes, taken together, are big enough to be a state or a nation and support 10-million people. These counties and parishes, KUSH have about 20,000 square miles. That makes Kush bigger than Belgium or Holland and more than twice the size of Israel. Kush is the land that the Provisional Government is working to free first.

WHAT STEPS MUST WE TAKE TO BECOME A FREE NATION?

The main way in which We can win our freedom and independence is called "EXPANDING SOVEREIGNTY." ("Sovereignty" means total control by a government.) Using this way, We will keep building our own schools and stores and farms and hospitals in Kush, and start our own courts and trash collection and post offices - until We have all the things a free nation must have and We are using our own things instead of things that someone else controls. Then We will hold the plebiscite, a vote, to make us an independent nation, a free nation.

At present, one step We want to take in Kush this year is to elect Municipal Councils and County and Parish Councils for the Black Nation, the Republic of New Africa. This is an important, new step. (There is another little pamphlet that tells about the "Municipal Council".) All this makes up the next big move in our Fight for Freedom. If the other steps We have already taken had won us freedom and power and jobs, We would not need to take new steps. But, now, new wise steps are necessary, and these are those steps. We urge you to join in this bold, exciting, and history-making work.

The Vice Presidents, the Representatives, the Judges, and I thank you - and We look forward to working with you. For, surely, We, together, shall FREE THE LAND!

National Black Elections

WHAT IS THE PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT?

As citizens of the Black Nation, the Republic of New Africa, We have a right to our own Government, just the same as the Indians do, under U.S. law. Our Black "Provisional Government" is the group of people who were elected in the NATIONAL BLACK ELECTIONS last September (1975) to run the government of the Black Nation. I, Imari Abubakari Obadele, was elected President with 3,000 votes. (About 5,000 people across the Nation voted. The National Conference of Black Political Scientists supervised the elections and counted the votes.)

In a way this is a small amount of votes, but that was the first national election that Black people have ever held on our own. It was very hard to get to everyone. But during 1976 there will be more elections, in places which did not hold elections last September, to elect more representatives to the "People's Center Council." The People's Center Council is the congress of the Black Nation.

Those who were elected Vice Presidents last September are Attorney Chokwe Lumumba from Detroit, Brother Alajo Adegbalola from Boston, Brother Obaboa Owolo from Los Angeles, and Brother Kwablah Mthawabu from Waterproof, Louisiana. Those elected to the Nation's People's Court, which is like the U. S. Supreme Court, were Attorney Taunya Banks from Mississippi, Attorney Aduke Olabisi from Michigan, and Vice President Obaboa Owolo from California.

The Government is called a "Provisional" Government because "provisional" means temporary. It is the kind of Government We have before We are independent and have full power. There will be new National Black Elections in 1978.

SUPPLEMENT TO THE COLLEGIAN

African News Special

AFRICA NEWS SPECIAL:
THE U.S. AND AFRICA
PROSPECTS FOR 1977

(AN) Early in the 1976 election campaign, Carter aide Hamilton Jordan told an interviewer, "If, after the inauguration, you find a Cy Vance as Secretary of State and Zbigniew Brzezinski as head of National Security, then I would say we failed....But that's not going to happen. You're going to see new faces, new ideas."

After the election, Jordan appeared only slightly embarrassed as he told reporters the two were under serious consideration for high-level posts. And both men ended up in the exact positions Jordan had named — the "nearly unanimous choices" of the network of people known as the "foreign policy establishment."

But Vance and Brzezinski were only the most prominent of a slew of appointees coming from the Council on Foreign Relations to serve in Cabinet and State Department positions. The Council, a club that both symbolizes and cements the informal foreign policy establishment, has served as a quiet meeting place for that elite. There bankers, corporate lawyers, media executives, scholars and government officials come together to formulate foreign policy strategies.

During World War II the Council cooperated with the State Department in sketching the design for the post-war institutions and policies that shaped a quarter-century of United States world leadership. Their consensus became "common sense," and was generally termed "the bipartisan view."

But by 1968 the war in Vietnam was at its height, and a group of elder statesmen, Vance among them, advised President Johnson that a military solution was no longer feasible. Then, while Kissinger directed the protracted and destructive retreat from Indochina, the Council moved towards building a new foreign policy consensus.

A "Trilateral" World Order

The Council moved to update its image and gain new vigor, opening up its membership to women for the first time, involving more younger people, and increasing its token membership of blacks.

But the substantive effort to build a new consensus was crystallized in 1973 around two projects: the "1980s Project" and a separate multinational organization known as the Trilateral Commission.

The basic theme of the "1980s Project" is that new ideas and new institutions are needed to manage change in the international system, recognizing that the United States has lost its uniquely dominant position and that the clamor for equality, at home and abroad, threatens the interests of dominant groups in Western countries. Position papers from the project are to be published only this year, but their general direction can be gauged by some of the ideas circulating in the related Trilateral Commission.

The Commission, founded at the initiative of Council Chairman David Rockefeller, brings together leaders from Western Europe, Japan, and North America to discuss key world issues and formulate common positions. It reflects in its title a basic outlook on world problems, namely that if the Trilateral powers can be brought into agreement on key issues, the rest of the world (whether East or South) would be unable to resist the pressure to fall into line and content themselves with small concessions.

Trilateral reports talk of being more flexible in nigotiations with developing countries, and perhaps incorporating selected countries (such as Brazil, Iran, Mexico, or Saudi Arabia) into international economic decision-making).

Carter's adherence to the "Trilateral approach," reflected in his choice of policymakers, stems from his own foreign policy education over the last three years, as a member, together with Vice-President-elect Mondale, of the Commission. It was said of an earlier President, Dwight Eisenhower, that everything he learned about economics he learned in a study group of the Council on Foreign Relations while President of Columbia University. The Council's stepchild, the ~~Trilateral~~ Commission, seems to have played a similar role for Carter.

It is for his lack of sufficient emphasis on a trilateral approach that Council protege Henry Kissinger has been most criticized by establishment members. The have accused him of concentrating on detente diplomacy with the U.S.S.R. and China while not consulting closely enough with allies. They have praised his tactical brilliance and his skill in putting out "brush fires," but complain about his failure to build structures through which longer-term economic problems could be managed, thus heading off insurgencies before they happen by timely concessions and consistent cooperation with friendly regimes. Now, in 1977, the institution builders have their chance.

Control Through Investment

As the Carter Administration buckles down to face tough policy questions such as those in southern Africa, the change in emphasis will for the most part be subtle. Kissinger's approach of extinguishing guerrilla struggles through diplomatic maneuvering will still be in evidence, though coupled with efforts to promote institutional reform and the use of economic leverage.

The Republic of South Africa is one case in which clear steps may be taken along the lines suggested by the Trilateral Commission. Carter, contrary to Democratic platform rhetoric seeking minor sanctions against American companies in South Africa, will likely push for increased U.S. investment there. Just prior to the November election, Carter told the South African Financial Mail that "economic development, investment commitment and the use of economic leverage...seems to me the only way to achieve racial justice there."

Despite occasional anti-apartheid pronouncements, Carter's UN Ambassador, Andrew Young, is a firm believer in the same strategy. Likewise with other top members of the foreign policy team, such as IBM directors Cyrus Vance and Harold Brown, men familiar with South Africa through their knowledge of IBM's large operations there (profits amount to $25 million annually). And the heart of the foreign policy establishment, so strongly represented in the new Administration, is the New York banking community, which last year loaned more than $700 million to the hardpressed South African government and related institutions.

Carter's stand on investment in South Africa augurs continuing U.S. isolation at the UN on southern African issues, despite the attempt to build a new image there through the appointment of Andrew Young.

On areas which do not affect the basic U.S. economic ties with South Africa, the Carter Administration may bend to pressure from liberals and blacks.

Avoiding An Arms Race

Another policy area in which new thinking may be in evidence is that of arms sales to the developing nations.

Following Secretary Kissinger's trip to Africa last spring, the Ford Administration moved to boost U.S. military aid, and arms exports increased significantly. Carter subsequently took the occasion of a major foreign policy address in New York to lash out at arms sales in the Third World as "unsavory business." He promised to reduce "commerce in the weapons of war" — a statement that reflects a more general aversion to military involvements overseas, and a preference for economic measures.

Legislative action to limit U.S. arms sales is expected soon. Senator Dick Clark (Dem. — Iowa), a member of the Foreign Relations Committee and chairman of the Africa sub-committee, will probably be on the front lines of the debate. "I would hate to see us get into a great arms race in Africa," Clark told AFRICA NEWS, "I'd like to avoid that at almost any cost."

Clark, one of the key Capitol Hill proponents of a more enlightened Africa policy, has also been involved in the recent William Schaufele as Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs.

When news of the decision spread, influential Democrats cabled and telephoned Vance. They objected not so much to Schaufele himself, but to the failure to symbolize through a new appointment a changing attitude towards Africa.

Clark talked personally with Vance about the problem, and as a result of the pressure Vance has agreed to find a replacement for Schaufele within the next few months, AFRICA NEWS has learned.

Caution For Rhodesia

While some modifications in Africa policy are expected soon, observers take the Schaufele reappointment, along with other signals from the new team at State, as an indication that "caution" may be the watchword for Rhodesia and Namibia policies in the coming months.

For Rhodesia, that means continued backing for the Geneva talks approach, while leaving the dirty work to the British government. For Namibia, there will probably be a continuation of current efforts to get South Africa and SWAPO to join in negotiations.

Whether a bolder southern Africa policy will emerge later on is far from certain. Studies currently underway examine a variety of options, which range from a continuation of present strategies to relatively dramatic U.S. pressure to end white minority rule in the two territories.

Some advisors are ready to argue that U.S. interests require a rapid end to the current stalemate in Rhodesia, especially since continuing guerrilla warfare will lead to the radicalization which both Kissinger and his successors so oppose.

One strategy reportedly under consideration is strict enforcement of an oil embargo against Rhodesia. The idea's appeal lies in the fact that five major oil companies supply Rhodesia oil — two are American, the others are British, Dutch and French. In coordination with those governments Carter could quietly call in the oil giants and tell them to turn off the spigot. The Smith regime would crumble under the pressure, and the way would be open for establishing an interim multi-racial administration.

The U.S. would then be in a strong position to press South Africa to move swiftly on Namibia. In an interview last week, Assistant Secretary Schaufele said he thinks a way can be found to get South Africa and SWAPO to the negotiating table. But Schaufele and his deputy, Frank Wisner, both charged that SWAPO has been the party resisting peace talks, even though South African Premier Vorster has repeatedly stated he will not meet with SWAPO.

Apparently, Kissinger had been reluctant to force South Africa into negotiations, because he was uncertain about SWAPO's ideological orientation. But if Carter's Africa policymakers decide SWAPO is acceptably "moderate," they could let Vorster know they mean business.

Carter aides are sensitive to suggestions taat Africa policies may not change as much as campaign rhetoric promised. One member of the State Department transition team expressed the attitude rather ironically a few days ago. He pointed to a stack of papers on his desk and said, "We have been working on it hard enough; something better happen."

Born Spaced

Swirling winds of cylonic madness racing threw my soul still I have hopes of finding you
Looking through the darkness upon light reaching for shadows shadows of uncertainty
And then we came together in the circle of searching Unknowing were we of the gifts that were to be forces of power enchanted being Mystery of unity embraced the many
The plans of time the splitting of paths distant dreams of endless looking the circle goes on turning
So do we Touch me Feel the power within the connecting extentions
And now
as yesterdays' dreams makes tomorrow real
All I ever really wanted was your embraced
NO!
Oh NO!!!
I reach
I want
and now
time shows its plasticness and you vanished like wind blown smoke
Was the want too great the unobtainable glazing eyes of repetitious circles Uncertain of the unknown captured by want a slave to lost want falling upon me
I must set myself free
As long as the mountains and trees reach for the heavenly fire
As long as the water flows to seek the sea
As long as it is me that is how long
I will be free worry not
As long as Confession remain confused
there will be questions
As long as questions remain questionable there will be the crave to know the crave to know brings
All things into the light moving toward descending transformation
unknowing darkness
Yesterdays life flashes before my face behold my mother and honor be upon my extention
I welcome your shroud of uncertain comfort
As we pay our debts and recycle our souls

One Hundred PerCent Pure

"Cover that child up,
It's a bitter day out there!
Where you goin' to with that baby?
Don't you come back here with happy
Juice on your breath — I got the Authority look 'n out."

Mama use to talk like that
But all knew it was love and pride.
Folks left more children at our house
Then I care to remember. All with Long stories to tell — Hard times
And rejection, while she listened
From the bathroom, taking her daily
Injection. Then babys were stripped
Buck naked and scrubbed one-hundred per cent
Pure.

Size one and two were dipped in Rice starch — placed over large chipping
Pipe, in our kitchen to dry.
Night use to fall hard, with the wind
That ventured from the ocean, ripping
At the screen-door. If I remember correctly,
Most youngsters became frightened at the Darkness and no sound of their Mamas.
Their little minds were soon distracted;
A chicken wing and craters of mashed potatoes,
Surrounded by rivers of onion gravy — did the Trick.

A chubby figure was often found
Curled up in one of Mama's old stuffed Chairs — sleep. Soon the house became Noisey again — mothers returning for their Missed bundled... Mamas silent humming was Broken and she blurted out all her composed Thoughts of the day.

"Get a soup bird and feed that child the broth.
By the way, you got a warm coat for h'm,
I'm goin' past the salvation army in the mornin',
They got plenty..... Never mind honey
Pay me for what? You'll only be back by Friday
To borrow it back. God helps those who helps themselves, Hes been good to me,"

Sun shine

Sunshine has come up again
Another day slops quickly away
For if I step outside
I know its going to rain
Buckets and drops
Its going to fall
And fall it will Just on me

Sunshine what is wrong with me
Why won't you let me be
Be out there like everybody
With your rays pouring down on me
You are everything to me

Some say another day
Another dollar
I say another day
Another bucket of water
Sure do need my light
If everything is to be alright

The Way It Is

Why is it that Nummo News must ask for help from students in this Multi-talented Conn. River Valley? An article concerning you our brothers and sisters could spark a lot of interest and action and only take a few hours out of your week. Is it because people are too busy with academic affairs and various other activities? Unfortunately that is not the answer.

Nummo News is a widely read paper. Ask anybody that. The Education of the Black Nationalist Child or Black Student Activisum and you'll have an interesting conversation on your hands. Needless to say that's all you'll get. Why is this?

First, one has to understand what the content of the paper is, and what is its ideals represent. Second one must understand his-her self and where your $priorities$ are.

To be active in the affairs that the articles typify, one has to work COLLECTIVELY with others for a COMMON cause. Inevitably this means sacrificing time, and time, for many exhibits a lot of possibilities that included self-centered activities, i.e.; reading, basketball, love, etc., the list is endless. These are entities of people that manifest their individuality. This individuality is exhibited in many ways in our society. It shows itself best in our capitalistic attitudes. GET all I can for myself and my (wo)man. Try and deny it, its impossible. To many of us want that nice home, car, stereo, etc. This is why Nummo News is crying for help. It is impossible to have the things that make life so nice and work for a cause that symbolizes the potential loss of our identities.

Think about it. Why are there so many people at the career counciling sessions. These careers are fantastic. Wouldn't you love to have a job that pays $25,000 a year with a construction company or a computer firm, who's sole purpose is to maximize profits. This is why Nummo News is soliciting help. We're asking for help from people who fear the contribution of time and self represent the loss of individuality, time fun, cars, love.....

Former prof charges sex bias

By JOHN M. MORAN
Collegian Staff

Dean William Darity of the School of Health Sciences declined to comment on charges of sexual discrimination within the school when contacted yesterday by the Collegian.

The charges were contained in a prepared statement by Richard B. Reynolds, a former associate professor in the Division of Public Health. Reynolds resigned on February 1 and said he did so because of the "atmosphere of repression" throughout the school of Health Sciences.

Reynolds charged that sex discrimination exists in the areas of salary rates and applications for graduate students among others.

He also charged that the "absence of aggressive recruitment" of Third World faculty and staff members indicated "a lack of commitment to affirmative action."

"I can't respond to the charges in the statement because they concern personnel matters," said Dean Darity yesterday.

Reynolds attempted to read his statement to a meeting of the Title IX Affirmative Action Committee of the School of Health Sciences at its meeting last Friday. Darity, who is also the chairperson of the Committee, closed the meeting when Reynolds had only partially completed the statement.

"I was unprepared for the content of the statement, but I was legally correct in closing the meeting. I knew I was right later when I had a chance to read the entire statement," Darity said.

Under Title IX guidelines all agencies receiving Federal money must hold Affirmative Action hearings. It also requires these hearings to be open to the public.

In the statement, Reynolds said he had been highly critical of affirmative action in the Division of Public Health.

Reynolds stated that Darity had called him "into his office on several occasions to tell me to drop the issue, to stop criticizing other members of the committee on this issue, and to accuse me of attempting to embarrass him personally."

He charged the committee itself of acting in bad faith on several points. These included the failure of the committee to interview either students or faculty concerned with affirmative action in the Division of Public Health.

In a telephone interview, Reynolds said he stands completely behind his statement.

"I told Dr. Darity before the meeting as a matter of courtesy that I intended to speak. He then told me if I tried to make a statement he would call the meeting off," said Reynolds.

Kathy A. Abraham, assistant news director for WMUA was also forced to leave when the meeting was closed. She said Reynolds was allowed to speak after much discussion by the committee.

"Darity, who was against letting Reynolds speak from the beginning, interrupted him when he was about a quarter of the way through the four page statement. Darity then asked me to identify myself and then he closed the meeting. He seemed pretty uptight about the press being present," she said.

"I wish I knew why Darity isn't working on these problems in affirmative action. He can't do everything, but as the Dean of the school, he must be held responsible for some things," Reynolds said.

He continued to say there was a possibility of repercussions for those people, especially students, who might cause trouble within the school.

"Several students have asked me not to sit near them or talk to them. They have to be careful. Many trainingships and funded supports are under the discretion of the dean of the school," he said.

Dukakis to arrive at noon

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis will arrive on campus around noon today for a two day visit, according to an aide to the Governor. Secretary of Education Paul Parks and Joan Pinck from Educational Affairs will meet up with the Governor later in the afternoon.

"The governor is here to try to live as a student for two days. He will be attending classes, sleeping in a dormitory, and eating whatever they happen to be serving in the dining commons," a Dukakis aide said yesterday.

He also said that Dukakis would try to keep the visit as informal as possible. The governor has a meeting scheduled with student leaders today and a press conference scheduled just before his departure from UMass on Thursday.

The remainder of the governor's schedule during his stay here has been kept a close secret by his staff in an effort to make his visit as productive and unobstrusive as possible.

Dollar charge for '76 Index may not be legal

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

An alleged violation of the Massachusetts State Contract Law may have occurred when the Undergraduate Student Senate charged students an extra dollar for the 1976 Index yearbook last semester.

Stephen N. Mathieu, a junior accounting major, claims that according to Massachusetts State General Laws Chapter 106, section 2-301, the Student Senate may not have fulfilled their end of a legal contract made when it issued the Index card.

"According to the law, the Index card is a legal contract and legal document of title, and by charging the extra dollar, the Senate broke the law," Mathieu said.

Mathieu is now awaiting sufficient funds in order to file a class action suit against the Senate which he claims may have misled students.

"Legal services won't take my case because it's a student against a student organization," he said.

Thomas Kerrins, Treasurer of the Student Senate, said Whitmore didn't print what was supposed to be on the card. "The card was supposed to read, 'this card plus one dollar entitles you to receive a copy of the Index for 1976'."

The card that was issued to students along with their registration packets last summer stated payment of student fees for both semesters last year entitles the student to receive an Index for 1976.

"By paying the dollar, we were unknowingly terminating a legal contract and agreeing to new terms set forth by the Student Senate," Mathieu said.

Massachusetts law says that documents of title give the person in possession of the title the right to receive what it covers.

Mathieu claims undergraduates were discriminated against in the actual distribution of the Index book.

"All the 1976 graduates were mailed an Index book to their home and not charged the dollar. Undergrads should also have received the book free because the Index card legally said so," Mathieu said.

The Index printed 10,500 copies last year with 4,189 books mailed out to 1976 graduates, leaving 6,311 to be distributed on campus. According to Daniel Smith, 1976 Index editor, more than 5,000 books are already sold.

"According to an article published in the Dec. 9, 1976 issue of the Collegian, the student senate charged the extra dollar to make up for a $2,300 deficit in the Index budget," Mathieu said.

Mathieu asked, "If all 6,311 books are sold, an extra $4,011 will be collected over and above the $2,300 deficit. Now with about 5,000 sold, that leaves $2,700 unaccounted for. What has the senate done with the surplus?"

Kerrins said the surplus funds will become the property of the senate and go into Student Activities Trust Fund monies which will lower next year's need for revenue, unless the senate votes otherwise. This would be done to reduce the amount of money students must pay for next year's student activities fee.

"The actual worth of the book is $10. The reason we've financed the book in the way we've done in the past, is in this way we can save the student $3 or $4," Kerrins said.

He said the senate did everything necessary so the book could hit the newsstand last semester. "The senate is not some entrepreneurial body that's here to rip off the students, but it's a representative government of the students that tries to provide the maximum amount of services with the limited funds provided," Kerrins said.

When questioned, Brian Delima, speaker of the student senate, said "This student (Mathieu) has an excellent point and should be commended for his involvement in determining the legality of the dollar charge. The SGA will meet with our attorneys to determine its course of action."

Kerrins said, "the legislation concerning the Index book was passed last April and published in the Collegian. No complaints were received and no action was taken, the only case that can be made is that the computer made a mistake or that there was a technical error."

Mathieu said William Cicia, liason officer between the Registrar and the Data Processing Center in Whitmore, claims he authorized the printing of the Index cards, but the wording for them came down from the student senate.

Energy to burn

Sawmill operates on wood power

By ERNEST J. CORRIGAN
Collegian Staff

Driving 55 mph, and turning your thermostats down to 65 degrees will certainly help to ease the impending oil crisis, but it won't be enough to prevent future crises.

In order to plan realistically for the future, we are going to have to look for alternative sources of energy to meet our needs.

"When the energy crisis hits, it's going to hit hardest in New England."

This dreary forecast was made by Steve Rice, a graduate student in the Wood Economics Dept., who is working on a wood energy project to fulfill his requirement for a Masters of Science Degree.

Under the auspices of Dr. William W. Rice (no relation), Professor of Wood Technology, Rice has developed a system which will allow a sawmill to become energy self-sufficient, using its own wood waste for energy.

His thesis, entitled, "The Feasibility of an Energy Self-Sufficient Sawmill In New England", offers the sawmill industry an alternative to their tremendous, and costly, consumption of fossil fuels.

In sawmills producing kiln dried lumber, there is a great demand for process heat. This demand is ordinarily met by burning large amounts of oil which provides the necessary heat.

Wood wastes produced in the mill are chipped and dried as part of the manufacturing process.

The chips are burned in a gasification process which yields much higher efficiencies than conventional methods of combustion.

Because the wood chips are "baked" at a lower temperature than most wood burners, they don't actually burn. They slowly emit gases into the lower chamber of the water boiler and upon combining with oxygen, they combust.

After 24 hours of constant "baking", Steve was able to obtain only a handful of ash, which shows the system's ability to derive the greatest amount of efficiency per ton of wood.

The operation is in itself a balanced ecosystem because it transforms wood waste into useful energy and at the same time, it is virtually non-polluting.

A prototype of this process is currently being installed at the Wood Processing Center, at the Tillson Farm, in Amherst.

Wood at one time provided this country with its energy needs but has since given way to less expensive fossil fuels.

As the cost of fossil fuels and their availability rises, so do the reasons for going back to wood as an energy source.

In New England we are heavily dependent on oil to meet our energy requirements.

"A severe oil crisis at this time would cripple us. For this reason, we have to keep ourselves open to alternative solutions and be aware that our existing sources of energy will not sustain us." Rice commented.

In this thesis proposal, Steve estimates that over 11 million dry tons of wood, and 8 million dry tons of barkiare being wasted on a yearly basis. His proposal would enable an oil consuming industry to convert from oil to wood and save on both ends. It would conserve oil and utilize the wood waste that the industry itself creates.

Besides all this, wood, unlike oil, grows on trees.

'Tomorrow' to come again

By ERNEST J. CORRIGAN
Collegian Staff

"Tomorrow" will happen again this summer, in the form of the Toward Tomorrow Fair. Toward Tomorrow is a unique event whose aim is to educate the public for the future.

More than 17,000 people attended the fair last summer and even more are expected for this year's version.

The last several decades have given us a litany of crises. Books such as "The Silent Spring," "The Population Bomb" and "The Limits To Growth", have stirred public concern about environmental deterioration.

Over 300 exhibits, workshops, and presentations dealing with subjects such as resource depletion, over-population, food shortages, and the depletion of natural resources were offered at the last fair.

Visitors will be invited to participate in the search for technology which will promote harmony with nature and with fellow humans, conserve natural resources, utilize locally available skills and resources, and preserve positive social relationships and values.

Ralph Nader, and our very own Professor William E. Heronomus, will be back again this year as will other prominent Americans such as Barry Commoner, Steve Bair, Hazel Henderson, Murray Bookchin, Herman Kahn and Helen and Scott Nearing.

Two concepts will unify the diverse offerings at the fair: appropriate technology and social invention.

The idea of the fair is to present as many options as possible so that the public can get an idea of what life will be like in the American future.

The success of the fair can be measured by the spark it ignites in the public. It is an educational setting where citizens can learn about social and technological alternatives. It all happens the weekend of June 24—26, but the energy it creates may go on for a long time.

PIRG survey reveals energy misconceptions

By ARNOLD WARSHAW
Collegian Staff

People's misconceptions about solar energy and their lack of knowledge concerning their own home energy costs are stifling the acceptance of the sum as an energy source, according to a survey recently released by the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (Mass PIRG).

MassPIRG revealed that 25 per cent of the 224 Massachusetts homeowners called in the survey believe that solar energy is not practical in the Bay State because the weather is too cold and too cloudy.

Just the opposite is true according to Timothy Peters, a PIRG research associate.

"Massachusetts is recognized as one of the best places in the United States to use solar equipment because of our average amount of sunshine, high fuel costs and long heating season," said Peters.

Another finding of the survey was that of all the homeowners surveyed, only 13 per cent could estimate what their annual costs were for hot water.

Often, the cost of heating water is included in the overall fuel bill which includes space heating, air conditioning or other appliances.

"Homeowners must be informed that hot water is the second largest energy expense they bear, about 20-25 per cent of the average homeowner's energy bill," said MassPIRG staff member, Mindy Lubber.

Apparently, knowledge of water heating costs heightens interest in the purchase of solar water heaters.

Of the homeowners questioned by PIRG, those who are aware of their water heating costs are more apt to buy a solar water heater at today's prices, than those without knowledge of their hot water costs.

Another finding of the survey is that 93 per cent of the homeowners recognize solar energy as an alternative heating source.

In addition, those people who are aware of their energy costs feel that there is an energy crisis and that Massachusetts is suitable for solar equipment. They are more likely to buy solar water heaters than those who answered to the contrary.

In other related news, Northeast Utilities was called on by MassPIRG attorney Peter Bogle to rewrite its brochure on solar energy.

"Their pamphlet's claim that solar heating is twice as expensive as electric heat is misleading, outdated and overly pessimistic," said Bogle. "Northeast Utilities should recall the old pamphlet and issue a bill stuffer with mooe up to date information."

"We cannot allow misconceptions to eclipse the progress of solar energy development," Bogle said.

"Government and industry must redouble their efforts to point out to homeowners both the high cost of water heating and the long term savings possible from the installation of solar heaters today," he said.

Central has new Activities Coordinator

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

Central Area Council (CAC) last night chose David Kantor over Scott Manchester, 6-3, to become the area's new Activities Coordinator, replacing Wayne Burns, who resigned earlier this semester for more personal obligations.

Kantor, a junior and a three year resident of the Central area, is presently an undergraduate senator and an active participant in the planning committee of the University's Spring concert.

Besides promising an area activity every two weeks — a job requirement — Kantor also told the CAC he is considering a weekly newsletter for the area government to inform it of his work.

Since he has no specific functions in mind yet, Kantor intends to find out what the residents want, before he plans anything definite.

Following Kantor's appointment, CAC unanimously re-elected its president, Janice Perry, to the undergraduate senate. It then listened to presentations by Student Organizing Project (SOP) spokesperson, William Bluestein, and John Foley of the undergraduate student senate.

Bluestein received the endorsement of the CAC for the SOP's efforts to organize a student union while Foley fielded questions from the area representatives concerning the recent Student Senate Activities Fund $7 increase. He urged CAC members to return to their dorms and relay to their constituencies the information about the increase so that they can act wisely when confronted with the petition circulating around campus that is seeking a referendum on the increase.

CAC co-vice president Andy Topallian outlined to the representatives the plans for a Central Area blood drive, scheduled to run from March 1st through the seventeenth. Stressing a decentralized approach to the drive, he urged all representatives to recruit potential donors in their respective dorms. He then also assigned a tentative night for each residential house to donate blood: March 1, Greenough; March 2, Wheeler; March 3, Brooks; March 7, Van Meter South; March 8, Van Meter North; March 9, Gorman; March 10, Chadbourne; March 14 Butterfield; March 15, Baker; March 16, Brett; and March 17 open.

In a major financial allocation, the CAC earmarked $1,500 to fund the joint Orchard Hill-Central Area spring concert, tentatively scheduled for April 30th.

Again acting with neighboring Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG), the CAC voted to send a letter to Dean William Field, acting director of the Campus Center, asking him to review the University liquor policy which has been impeding efforts of dorms in these two residential areas to sponsor parties serving alcoholic beverages.

V. Meter studies all-woman dorms

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

The Study Group on Van Meter South has begun holding meetings and discussions as it enters into the information-gathering phase of its 10-day analysis of that all-women's dorm.

Two separate meetings last night with residence assistants and other dorm residents, and a meeting Sunday with Head of Residence Elizabeth Williams, were not acknowledged by the investigative committee but were confirmed by dorm President Beverly Garside.

Garside told the Collegian that corridor meetings are to be scheduled later this week with the study group at the convenience of the residents.

According to a statement of purpose issued by the study group and sent to Van Meter South residents, Sally Freeman and Marjorie Lenn of the Community Development Center (CDC), Joseph Battista and William Taylor of the Orchard Hill-Central Area offices, and the heads of residence of all dorms in Orchard Hill and Central, this committee — a collection of four objective members of the university community — was formed in response to a recommendation submitted by Taylor and Battista for an outside group to study the situation.

Its members — Robin Smith, head of residence of McNamara Dormitory is Sylvan, Paul Rannenberg, the student H.R. of John Adams Upper, Martha Tripp, a student counselor in John Quincy Adams Middle, and Ann Gillespie from the Office of International Programs — refused to elaborate about their work, but did say final recommendations for alleviating dorm tension should be submitted to those involved by March 4th.

The group also stated in its flyer, distributed throughout Van Meter South corridors, that it intends "to investigate and analyze the situation in Van Meter South, and to submit recommendations to the CDC and the Orchard Hill-Central Administration."

Organizations lobby for Bottle Bill

By PAT BEINAR
Collegian Staff

The Committee for the Mass Bottle Bill and the Mass Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) met with students last night to begin efforts to increase the returnable bottle market in Massachusetts and create greater pressure for the legislative enactment of a state-wide Bottle Bill.

According to coordinator Norman Stein, students will arrange meetings, make phone calls, and organize media events until mid-April, when the House and Senate will again vote on the bill. At that time, they will try to convince the undecided legislators to vote in favor of the bill.

Other projects include petition drives to be conducted and presented to the school administration requiring all vending machines, cafeterias, and food services on campus to use returnable bottles only.

By surveying stores, for returnable bottles, students may launch a campaign to boycott those which do not carry them.

Students may also survey past election results to determine the factors that influenced the winning or losing votes on the Bottle Bill in various Massachusetts towns, Stein said.

The bill, which prohibits the manufacture of non-returnable bottles for beer and soft drinks, will also prohibit the plastic binders which hold the bottles, and would not go into effect until 12 months after it was passed.

"This would give manufacturers more time to adjust their machines and make necessary changes," Stein said.

"We are directing our efforts towards passing the bill for two reasons," Stein added. "The bill was defeated by a very narrow margin last year."

"We believe we now have greater public support, because the public has had time to examine the facts pertaining to the bill," he said.

Stein hopes that if the bill is passed, there will be a greater chance for a nationwide Bottle Bill.

Those interested in working on the projects can contact Linda Mitchell or Michael Yaffe at the MassPIRG office.

Wellman Document defined Univ. Governanc

Editor's Note: Each day this week Alan Levin will be examining a facet of the relationship between the student governance units here and the administration and the Board of Trustees. Today's article summarizes the process students can utilize to make policy recommendations to the administration and Board of Trustees.

By ALAN LEVIN
Collegian Staff

In the early 1970's as students and faculty clamored for a louder voice in their respective roles here in the University, a special committee led by Education Professor Robert R. Wellman drafted a process now known as University Governance.

The purpose of the committee's work was to give students and faculty a role in the UMass Board of Trustee decision making process.

The committee's final product, the Wellman Document, gives the representative body of students, the student senate, a chance to aid their views on administrative policy dealing only with areas of "primary responsibility". In other words, the student senate can challenge an administrative policy which directly concerns the student body.

As defined by the Wellman Document, "services and activities which are designed primarily to serve students" is the only category a student senate policy recommendation can fall under. In the current situation, students are not allowed to initiate a formal governance recommendation in the realm of academics.

The Wellman Document states, however, that students "will by assured the opportunity of participating in developing academic policies and in evaluating degrees, programs and courses." But the path of this participation is not described in the document.

If an Area Government, the Campus Center-Student Union Board of Governors or any student wishes to make a formal policy recommendation to the UMass administrators, they must go before the members of the Student Senate and convince them of the request's worthiness. If the Senate passes the governance motion, it is forwarded to the appropriate administrator.

An example of a recent Governance Motion is Senate Bill 96, a suggestion that the University accept an Environmental Policy which would ban no deposit soft drink containers on campus, monitor radioactive and other harmful substances on campus, push recycling, begin installing alternate energy sources of energy and ban fluoro carbons on campus.

Another Governance Bill calls for the end of the University Rhetoric Requirement. A third bill is a request to amend the Student Government Association (SGA) constitution.

There is a catch in this complicated process, however, while the administrators promise to listen to student concerns, there is no similar pledge to act on these concerns.

The Wellman Document states: "The Board of Trustees has all authority, responsibility, rights, privileges, powers and duties of organization and government of the University of Massachusetts." So, the ultimate decision making authority rests upon the University bureaucracy.

It is this fact and others that has made Governance an issue. Students have never been entirely satisfied with the procedure, but their criticisms seem to be stepping up lately because they want to have a larger, more guaranteed role in University policy.

UMass basketball star Mike Pyatt dropped by Black Affairs yesterday to congratulate the staff for printing the picture that showed his body position prior to his injury. Pyatt told Black Affairs that the picture was used by his doctors. The above picture first appeared in Black Affairs last Wednesday.

It was learned that after the February 12 Rhode Island game at the Cage, there were no films of the game, due to the camera blank-out that occurred during the first 15 minutes of the game. Futile attempts were made to secure film of the game from Rhode Island, but they did not have the part that would have showed Pyatt's injury.

Pyatt said, "I thought it was my right foot that gave away first, and I tried to push off with my left foot." The picture clearly showed that it was Pyatt's left foot that first slipped. It was the picture of Pyatt's body position before his injury that proved to be helpful to his doctors.

A Luta Continua

(the struggle continues)

Commentary

By NASSER EGA
Black Affairs Editor

The question is HOW LONG? How long will only a minute fraction of the Black community dedicate themselves for the rights and other privileges of the sisters and brothers on this campus, while the vast majority just sit back and watch the dedicated few sacrifice their academic and social time to see that we don't lose what was slogged and sweated for by the brothers and sisters in the early 60's and 70's.

Black organizations suffer because of lack of staff, lack of support and because folks just don't take the time off to find out if any of the organizations need any help. A couple of them admitted that they were ignorant to what organizations there were on campus, had no interest in them, and didn't have the time to check them out.

It seems to be that the only time we can get community support is when the organizations are neck-deep in trouble or any other kind of problem, all which could be avoided if support was received much earlier. The burden shouldered by the few could be spread out within the community, but from the looks of things this attitude of "somebody else is handling that scene so why should I bother" thing will continue in the coming years.

I don't think folks realize the danger of their non-involvement. Do they realize that by them not getting involved in Black organizations that fight tooth and nail to enroll Black students here at UMass, they are assuring the non-acceptance of their brothers and sisters who want to come here in the future? Do they think that just because we've now got Third World centers that they can't be taken away because it's part of the 'institution'? Do they think that because we've now got a hard-fought for newspaper, that it can't cease publishing? Do they think that now we've got "air" time we'll always have it? All of you who think that wav must be awakened!

The question of why the vast majority don't participate has been looked at from different angles and the same conclusion has been drawn in all cases — a blank. I, too, pondered away at this mystery. Is it because the majority have their needs fulfilled and have a little pocket-money on the side and don't want any hassles interfering with their social time, which they rightfully believe can be put to good use at the gym or checking out some babe or dude? Or is it because they did not really struggle to get through high school and had less of a problem getting to college unlike the brothers and sisters in the 60's, and see through their eyes nothing to struggle for because it's there and walk by? One thing for sure if a demonstration is called to try and get the Blue Wall to start playing 'Disco' music again, folks will be trampling all over each other to be first in the marching line and some would probably be willing to cut off their right arm to be on the Blue Wall Committee to ensure that 'Disco' stays on!

All that we have now, which folks have taken for granted, can disappear before anyone knows what's happening unless all of us join hands with the dedicated few and help maintain what was struggled for, for us, by those who were here before. Let us do the same for our brothers and sisters who will be following us.

The words "There is no crisis here" spoken by South Africa's Prime Minister John Vorster during last summer's rebellion by Black South African students in Soweto, has been used as the title to a documentary film showing the events of the uprising. "There is no crisis here" was filmed illegally in South Africa and is being distributed by Film Forum Ltd. of London. The film is going to be shown at the University of Massachusetts CC 101 on Thursday, Feb. 24, at 7:30. The film is being sponsored by the International Socialists. Following the film there will be a discussion and two speakers from the International Socialists. The two speakers featured will be Larry Smith a member of the Black Caucus of the International Socialists, and Michael Egan, a white South African who was born in Johannesburg. He will speak on the importance of the South African Revolution and its significance to blacks and socialists in this country.

The film relates the events that occurred in Soweto last summer: the resistance by black students to the use of the Afrikaans language that led to the protests and boycotts of the schools and ultimately to the South African regimes attempts to repress the protests. Hundreds of blacks were killed when police used tanks and machine guns to put down the Soweto uprising. Included in the film is an interview with Tshsi Machinini one of the leaders of the rebellion, who spoke here at UMass last Dec. 8, on the role of the students in South Africa. In the film Mashinini explains why the students called for the strikes and describes how he saw the police kill an eight-year old girl who raised her fist in a black power salute.

Mashinini goes on to say, "I went to the mortuary, her body was riddled with bullets beyond recognition." Mashinini concludes by saying "The people are no longer interested in equal rights with whites. We want the tables turned so they can have a taste of their own medicine." The film gives a little more insight into what really happened in Soweto, when black youths defiantly protested against the oppressive regime of South Africa.

Harvard University to file arguments supporting admission policies of blacks

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. [AP] — Harvard University said Tuesday it will file arguments with the U.S. Supreme Court supporting the right of schools to have admission policies that favor blacks.

The Supreme Court agreed Tuesday to review a California Supreme Court decision that such programs illegally discriminate against whites.

Daniel Steiner, Harvard's general counsel, said the university will file a friend of the court brief in the case.

"The precise arguments to be advanced by Harvard will not be known until the brief is finished, but we probably will maintain that the United States Constitution permits a wide variety of affirmative action admissions practices to colleges and professional schools," Steiner said.

The case is viewed by many civil rights advocates as a test of the nation's committment to helping minorities achieve equality.

"The brief is likely to state that diverse student bodies strengthen the educational process for all student and that universities have an obligation to bring excluded groups into the mainstream of society," Steiner said.

"We think the Constitution should be interpreted to permit universities broad latitude in making admissions decisions, which are an integral part of the educational process."

Afro-Am is sponsoring Pearl Bowser this Friday. She will be speaking on the roles black men and women have played in black film companies. Bowser will be utilizing slides as well as films during her presentation. She has lectured extensively from the east to the west coast, from the south to the midwest, and from college campuses to museums. Through her personality and vast resource of knowledge, she has sparked many people's interest in early black films. These films have often been kept from the public eye. Due to her work in this field, she has helped attract many people into buying and reading about these early films.

Pearl Bowser was a science major at Brooklyn college. After graduating, she worked at CBC and with other forms of the media. She researched a book that dealt with blacks in the cinema. Through this research she gradually became more and more interested in blacks in films. She went back to school to learn about video and production so she could accurately handle the film herself.

We need volunteers to help with the Petition drive. People are needed for an hour per week to sit at the table we have set up in the Campus Center. Basically, the petition is a pardon from the governor for the release of Craemen Gethers, who was illegally placed in jail for a 1974 robbery. Presently, he has served nineteen months out of an eight to twelve year sentence. People should call the Student Organizing Project 5-2415 or the Cultural Center 5-0794, for hours they can work. The table will have literature on the case, the petition, and a ten minute version of the case on film.

Male-Female workshop

Dear Sisters,

Once again the Third World Women's Center is planning a Black male-female relationship workshop. The workshop will be held on Saturday, March 5, at the Malcolm X Room, from 12-5 p.m. Refreshments will be served. This will be a follow-up to a workshop held last semester. From this last workshop we realized that we as women are not as unified and supportive of each other as we should be. This was evident within the discussion that was held because the men primarily dominated the conversation. Therefore, we are having a workshop just for women so that we can be more unified in our efforts and discussion at the female-male workshop.

Through your ideas and participation we can make this a prosperous get together. Hopefully these workshops will lessen the gap which exists between all of us and we can stand as one. The women's workshop will be held on Sunday, February 27, in the Lumumba Hut at New Africa House.

Please try to make it to both workshops.

Sincerely,
THIRD WORLD WOMEN'S CENTER

'2000 Black'

The ENERGY CRISIS drains our pockets. WATERGATE drains our patriotism. Is America draining the BLACK MAN? "2000 Black" is an experimental multi-media presentation based on social, economic, cultural projections. Where will America send its Black troops to fight next? What will the increased shortage of Black men mean for Black women? Does abortion today mean extinction tomorrow? What will be the future effects of "partying"?

Black Spectrum presents in its hour and a half presentation the question, "Where are we going?" If you understand the question then you must understand the solution is survival. (2000 got to be Black!) Because "2000 Black" is a multi-media experiment, Spectrum has reached to the summit of its creative imagination to produce a presentation that is appealing both in its philosophical, approach and dramatic technique. It's not enough that

PRETORIA, South Africa — The Roman Catholic Church condemns white-ruled South Africa's "social and political system of oppression."

Cooperation vs. Competition

By Jill Clay

What's it like to be an instructor with socialist views and teach at an institution like UMass?

Socialist faculty opinions varied, but they agreed that their most important function as individual instructors was to make students think critically about their societal situation, and not to be taken for a ride.

In general, a socialist is one who believes in the collective ownership and control of production by the workers. In essence, all decisions regarding methods of production, distribution, who exchange of finished products would be in the hands of those who actually worked to manufacture them. This would also apply to farm produce.

Regarding the campus sentiment towards socialism and Marxism, Prof. Michael Egan of the English department said, "There is a large radicalized minority among the students here," and added, "although most reflect the views of society as a whole."

Asst. Prof. James Crotty of the Economics department pointed out that "The reaction to socialism on this campus is better than at most places."

Among the faculty in general, however, Assoc. Prof. Ann Ferguson of the Philosophy department said, "The feeling toward socialists is quite hostile, and there is little understanding of the range of opinions of socialism and Marxism from the average faculty member here."

Prof. Egan being aware of the problems of teaching students who were brought up in an anti-socialist society who presently attend a capitalist-oriented institution. He said, "I am scrupulous in not apologizing to his students for what I am; the function of a university in a capitalist society is the validation and legitimation of the bourgeois point of view. To that extent, someone like me is an anamaly."

A teacher of literature, Egan said he combines it with the historical, political, and sociological aspects that pertain to each work, and in so doing tries to make students conscious of their world. The students that take his courses tend to be somewhat radical anyway, Egan said, partly because his position attracts such students and partly because being brought up in an environment filled with capitalism-related problems radicalizes many students to begin with.

Prof. Samuel Bowles of the Economics department, who writes for "Dollars and Sense" magazine as Bowles refers to as "the 'Newsweek' of socialists," said that his principal aim as an instructor was "to develop a critique of capitalism based on people's everyday experiences. I attempt to provide people with concepts by which they can analyze their own experiences." He added, "He added, "It's important to dispel certain myths students often have about socialism by telling them what it is not ... it's not Big Brother, it's not public ownership of your toothbrush, and it's not heaven.

Bowles said that many students are fed up with capitalism because they have to try to make decent lives for themselves against the odds of inflation, competition and unemployment, and they know that they probably won't have a good opportunity to develop the skills they have learned.

Asst. Prof. Crotty stressed, "Teaching ideology is not what I do, but I urge students to take a critical look at capitalism." "I introduced them seriously to alternative intellectual traditions that they're isolated from in their education," he continued.

Like Bowles, Crotty said he believes that people's own experiences often weaken their faith in capitalism, and he offers them a different perspective "to help them explain their problems and help themselves."

Assoc. Prof. Ferguson said, "I urge students not to learn only from the instructor as they've been conditioned to do, but from themselves, and each other, by having them give group presentations. One of my functions is to make people think critically, form their own opinions, and to provide a process for changing attitudes."

Ferguson said she doesn't want their learning to be passive, to be "regurgitated" on exams and then forgotten. She also emphasized "learning about the community and the outside world; students are divorced from the working world while here at the university."

Prof. Jack Weston, of the English department, said he sees this university as a "political arena," with dorms as well as classrooms serving places of learning and formation of ideas. Weston feels it is his duty to dispel the "bourgeois false consciousness" ingrained in the students, and to indirectly awaken a social consciousness, to teach them to recognize exploitation where it lies.

Prof. Dean Albertson, who teaches U.S. history at UMass, and is a member of the Socialist Faculty Caucus, remarked, "I teach history from a socialist perspective, and I tell my students so. They appreciate openness, knowing I'm not trying to pull anything on them." All of the instructors were in agreement about the generally positive reaction of their students, and all welcomed arguments from the students.

When asked whether the structure of this university impeded the teaching and learning process in any way, some of those interviewed felt particularly strong about the fact that they were forced to grade their students. Bowles explained, "Grades provide a reward external to the process of learning. Students aren't motivated by the process of learning itself when they have to worry about them. The grading system instills anxiety and a sense of competition into the students."

Teens indicted

HOLYOKE, Mass. (AP) Two teenagers pleaded innocent yesterday at arraignment in Hampden Superior Court on charges stemming from the death of a patrolman during a brawl last New Year's Day.

George Guzman, 17, and Ramon Nieves, 19, both of Holyoke, were indicted on charges on manslaughter and two counts of assault and battery on a police officer.

Judge Kent Smith continued Guzman's bail at $50, and released Nieves in personal recognizance pending further action in the case.

The indictments stemmed from the death of patrolman James Gatzounas, 29, who was stricken as he sought to break up a street fight. A medical examiner testified that an autopsy indicated he died of heart disease.

CHEQUERS
University Drive, Amherst
549-5861
Dining room open
11:30-9:00,
'til 10 weekends

by Lauren J. Traub

Chequers, just barely off campus on University Drive, is a quiet cozy place, probably better known for its drink than its food. A haunt for the local pols, it's also where the Patriots used to cool off after a rough day of summer training.

But there's another dimension to Chequers. On the other side of the wall from the bar is the dining room where a variety of meals from light lunches (sandwiches, salads, omelettes, and crepes) to full course dinners are served during all dining hours.

A limited list of luncheon specials is offered besides the regular menu, until 5:00 p.m. These are smaller servings of dinner items, with correspondingly lower prices. For example, London Broil with French fries and roll is $2.50 for lunch, $4.95 for the larger dinner serving.

An interesting array of omelettes, served with French fries are $1.75 - $2.25, or for 25 cents for each added ingredient, you can custom design your own. The Spanish Omelette ($1.75) is generously filled with mushroom, green pepper, and onion, and zested up with a tomato sauce. And don't miss those French fries. They're the thick wide steak house type; very substantial and very good.

food & drink

A Below The Salt ADDITIVE

Sandwiches, cold deli-style or hot, such as turkey or Reuben, run $1.95 - $2.75, and the Open Sirloin Steak rings in at $3.50.

To whet our appetites, the hot Baked Stuffed Clams ($.40 each) were well spiced with a good crisp topping. The onion soup ($.90) and soup of the day, which was Cream of Broccoli ($.70 and unique!) are served in individual crocks. The Cream of Broccoli was reminiscent of a rich chowder, and the onion soup was the French variety with crouton and melty mozzarella. But both soups were bland and would have been improved by proper seasoning, even a little salt and pepper.

Ten main dishes range from $3.95 - $6.95, with the majority under $5.00. Chicken Cordon Bleu (breast with ham and Swiss rolled inside, $3.95) was generous, though unfortunately not completely cooked to the middle of the chicken. Choice of rice pilaf, baked potato or those great fries, and rolls and vegetable come with main course.

The veal of the Veal Parmigiana ($3.95) is the real thing, but still only a cut above the processed patties. Veal as Mama Nature makes it has a tendency to become chewy during cooking, but this particular veal was pounded into submissiveness so it wouldn't have dared get tough. Still, the dish does have a nice melted cheese and tomato topping, and the price is right. It's served with ziti in garlic butter and herbs, and the size should satisfy most appetites. The vegetable was whipped winter squash, beautifully sweetened and spiced. Why couldn't the soups have been flavored as skillfully?

Chocolate Bavarian cream pie isn't homemade, but is heavenly. Chequers offers a versatile menu for a snack or meal, and the prices and serving sizes are certainly reasonable. The bill for appetizer, soup, entree, coffee, dessert, and half carafe of wine (two glasses each) for two was under $15.00, a notable treat for any restaurant.

By the way, an old favorite "Hahjee's Place" (Route 9, Hadley) has recently expanded both facilities and menu. The new, colorfully decorated Persian lounge features belly-dancers weeknights. Although Hahjee's is not licensed for liquor, several imaginative wine-based cocktails, as well as bottled Molsons ($.85) and Loewenbrau on tap are now served.

As for the food, new lamb, and eggplant based dishes, curried chicken crepe, Crepe Milano (with olives, pimento, green pepper, cheese and tomatoes) and assorted omelettes have been added. The dessert selection has proliferated since the opening last fall. Besides the regular dessert crepes, there are now delicious crispy thin fried crepes, filled with various treasures such as ice cream, fruit, or Ferini, a creamy Persian custard. Excellent homemade Baklavah, Turkish or Arabic coffee, or one of the herbal teas make a delightful dessert or snack.

Relevant irreverance

CITY BOY
Dinner At The Ritz
(Mercury)

Being irreverent has become a notable fashion these days; witness the belated popularity of 10cc and the onslaught of newcomers like The Tubes, Crack The Sky and City Boy. All are extraordinarily witty lyricists and potent musical composers.

Dinner At The Ritz is City Boy's second album and truely exceeds all my expectations. Like vintage 10cc and Crack The Sky, City Boy has written their own Sheet Music or Animal Notes. In other words, City Boy is dangerous. The first side alone is guaranteed to send you reeling. Witness "Mommas Boy":

"They say he's a menace to man, this boy of mine... A handsome and intelligent child, he's nobody fool. They showed him around the chemistry lab and later lost the school. Don't take him away". Or what about the mysterious "Walk On The Water": "With virgin white robes" and mystical strobes. Mazuma time with a neon sign. Forget the tent now the money's spent".

The album's finest hour comes with the truely decadent title track.

Here the storyline concerns some poor slob wining and dining some high society woman: "But I wish that I could bare your ultra femine flair. For accent on current events over dinner drives me spare". As the lyrics get all the more biting, the music swaggers like a demented tango. And if that weren't enough, City Boy earns hundreds of points by having the clown princes of darkness, Van Der Graaf Generator, come in for "extra vocal revelry". Sheer guts! Anybody who dares put Van Der Graaf on their album is definitely twisted!

Dinner At The Ritz is a wonderful example of music as humor — nasty, cynical, you name it. City Boy is the logical opposite to 10cc's pop dirty work. May they all reign, bands like them will keep us from taking ourselves too seriously.

Senate 'fattens' Carter's economic program

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Senate voted yesterday to fatten President Carter's economic-stimulus program of tax cuts and federal spending amid growing opposition to his proposed $50-per-person tax rebate.

By a vote of 72 to 20, senators added $1.7 billion to the $15.5-billion stimulus plan recommended by Carter for the period that ends next Sept. 30.

The vote does not represent an endorsement of Carter's much-criticized $50-per-person tax rebate; it means only that if the rebate is approved, the budget will accommodate it.

The vote was on whether to amend the budget for the current fiscal year to allow a stimulus package costing up to $17.2 billion, as recommended by the Senate Budget Committee. The House is expected to vote Wednesday on a similar figure, $17.3 billion.

Although the House Ways and Means Committee already has approved the basics of the $50-per-person rebate proposed by Carter, the 38 Senate Republicans and several Democratic senators are openly opposed to it. Three Democrats, Dale Bumpers of Arkansas, Adlai Stevenson of Illinois and Robert Morgan of North Carolina, and independent Harry F. Byrd Jr. of Virginia used the budget debate to express their own opposition.

Whatever form the stimulus package takes, the aim is the same: to get money into the hands of consumers in the hope the spending will stimulate the economy, and to create jobs with direct federal spending for public-works construction and temporary government-funded jobs.

Here are the emergency spending proposals envisioned by the budget amendments adopted by the Senate. The figures are for spending through Sept. 30 only, even though the Senate included authorizations for future years.

—$300 million to help needy persons pay their fuel bills in areas hardest hit by the unusually bitter winter. Details of this program are yet to be worked out.

—$600 million for increased aid to states, cities and counties to help replace tax revenues lost because of the weak economy.

—$400 million in added spending for such public-works construction projects as court-houses and schools. Authorization for such spending over the next several years would be increased by $4 billion.

—$700 million for public-service jobs in hospitals, jails, parks, etc. in areas of high unemployment. Current law provides money for 310,000 such jobs; the Senate action would raise the number to 600,000 in the next seven months. The economic package envisions 725,000 jobs next year.

—$600 million to expand training and jobs for programs aimed at the young and the old.

—$200 million for railroad and highway construction.

CREEP, Watergate burglars reach out-of-court settlement

BALTIMORE [UPI] — Richard Nixon's 1972 campaign committee will pay four Watergate burglars $200,000 to settle a $4 million damage suit claiming they were duped into staging the break-in as a government security operation, it was disclosed yesterday.

Daniel Schultz, attorney for Watergate burglars Bernard Barker, Eugenio Martinez, Virgilio Gonzalez and Frank Sturgis said the Committee to Re-Elect the President agreed during the weekend to settle out of court for $200,000.

He said the money will be paid out of a liquidation trust fund left over from CREEP's 1972 activities.

The suit charged that the four burglars, who have asked President Carter for pardons, were misled into thinking the 1972 break-in at Democratic National Headquarters "was a legitimate government intelligence operation." The four will receive $50,000 each from the settlement.

"I think the settlement is important in what it represents," Schultz said. "We believe that the men have been a victim of a fraud and that they were not criminals. They did not have any criminal motives and they went to jail because somebody has misled them."

Each of the burglars served 14 months in prison, and the suit asked for $500,000 in compensatory damages and $500,000 in punitive damages for each of the four.

"They've served their time and now they want to have their records clear," Schultz said.

In addition to the Committee to Reelect the President, the suit named as defendants, E. Howard Hunt, former Attorney General John Mitchell, former Commerce Secretary Maurice Stans, G. Gordon Liddy, Robert Porter, Jeb Stuart Magruder and the Finance Committee to Re-elect the President.

Hunt's Baltimore attorney said neither his client nor any of the other defendants would have to pay for the settlement.

"It's all handled throught the trustees for CREEP," said Tom Coons, an assistant to Hunt's attorney William Snyder.

Flu shot demand subsides

ATLANTA [UPI] — With the winter flu season approaching an end, health officials said yesterday there had been little demand for flu shots since partial resumption of the nationwide immunization program was ordered two weeks ago.

Rick Curtis of the influenza surveillance network at the national Center for Disease Control here said most of the flu shots were being given by private physicians with the vaccine also available at state and county health clinics.

No states are expected to operate mass inoculation clinics, as was the case when the $135 million swine flu immunization program was launched last October.

"I doubt if there are going to be very many, is my own impression," Curtis said.

"People are tired of hearing about it."

He said the CDC, which monitors the number of flu shots given in all 50 states, will not know what the response has been to the resumed program until states report the number of flu vaccine doses administered.

Joseph Califano, secretary of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, ordered partial resumption of the swine influenza immunization program for persons in high risk groups on Feb. 8 following an outbreak of A-Victoria influenza in a Miami, Fla., nursing home, where four persons died of the ailment.

Since then there have been sporadic cases of A-Victoria flu in Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina and Illinois.

Reports from several states appeared to support Curtis' impression that there was little demand for the vaccine.

In Florida, the only state so far to report an outbreak of the A-Victoria flu, program coordinator Larry Dodd said there were "hardly any" takers for the shot.

South Carolina health official Dr. Leo L. Walker said, "I do not believe there will be any great demand for flu shots. We're approaching the end of the flu season."

Dr. Joseph Cannon, Rhode Island state health director, said the turnout was hard to gauge because the shots were being given by private physicians. But he added, "I would expect there was a light turnout.

The immunization program was suspended last December following evidence of a statistical association between the flu shots and the Guillain Barre syndrome, a paralyzing and sometimes fatal ailment.

Budget cuts: the devaluation of education

To the Editor:

Does anybody remember the Governor's last visit to UMass? If not, let me refresh your memories a little.

I remember that fateful night. Students were pushing and shoving to get into SUB. It was very hot and muggy inside and the only distinguishable words out of the students in there was how unfair the budget cuts were. The students present at the meeting figured that the governor would change his mind about cutting the budget once he heard their side of the story. They felt that he had to change his mind because he was an elected public official who listened to peoples problems. After all, it was our votes as well as our friends and relatives votes which got him elected.

The only thing the governor proved that night was that we elected a public nuisance not a public official. He pointed out the futility involved with the students who attend state colleges and universities. I remember him explicitly saying that, "education isn't for everybody", and he seemed to infer that this specifically meant students attending state schools. He made one very sarcastic comment about getting a college education just to end up driving a cab in Boston when you graduate. To make a long story short, he put down the student body and he said that the administration could handle the budget cuts without the students feeling the financial impact.

Well Governor, why am I paying higher tuition fees, higher lab fees, and higher student activity fees? How come courses are overcrowded? Why have courses been cancelled?

Budget cuts are lowering the standards of public education. Education is an important part of most peoples' lives. Why should we allow one frugal person to deprive so many students of their right to a decent education?

When the governor comes to visit UMass next week, we should demand him to rectify his decision on budget cuts in education. If he doesn't change his mind we can remind him that elections are coming up again and he can be sure that he will not receive our support. Let's show the governor the unity that the students at UMass possess and tell him that we're sick and tired of being shit on.

John Andrews

Plea for responsible journalism

To the Editor:

After reading James Nollet's article last week regarding the assault of a white woman by three black men, I found myself enraged by Nollet's suggestion that the black community "find the three and beat their butts in." It should be pointed out that the solidarity of the black community at UMass lends itself to more subtle forms of coersion than violence to prevent inter-racial incidents. I certainly hope that nobody, especially members of the black community, took Mr. Nollet's suggestion seriously.

Nollet's contradictory statements — condemning inter-racial violence while promoting inner-racial violence as a means to discourage such, are absurd and ill-conceived. It reflects a peculiar social attitude whereby whites calmly accept black violence amongst themselves but respond vociferously when that violence crosses racial lines. The name of this peculiar social attitude is racism, and many of us are oppressed by it on a daily basis. Why the Board of Editors of the Collegian feels that the UMass community needs to be further oppressed by a violent, racist commentator is difficult to perceive. I think that I speak for many, though, when I make a plea for more responsible journalism.

Peter Kyle

Olympians thank UMass students

To the Editor:

I would like to express my thanks to you and the students of the University for your support of the Massachusetts Special Olympics Run, Dribble and Shoot Basketball Tournament.

Some people came to watch and others to see if they might like to help while the rest seemed ready to do anything that needed to be done. I thank you all, first for the Olympians for that something extra that you gave them and second for myself, for the peace of heart you left me in seeing people willing to give of themselves.

My hope is that you left feeling super about yourself because you were there and helped.

A note to the Governor

Hail, Governor Dukakis — we offer you our greetings, but with considerable reservation.

Needless to say, your "level funding" plan hasn't gone over very well here. We hope your visit to the campus will show you some of the reasons why.

While level funding sounds like no budget cut at all, it has the effect of one, since inflation has raised costs considerably over last year's level. Perhaps the dorm you stay in will give an indication of the need for renovations in many of the residential areas. Maybe sitting in on a couple of crowded lectures will demonstrate just why we don't savor further cuts in personnel. And a look at our other over-used, under-staffed facilities might reinforce our point of view.

It's possible that months of riding the Boston subways have left you out of touch with the needs of UMass-Amherst. Unlike most items on the state budget, the University is an entire community — a community of over 20,000 whose well-being depends almost entirely upon government funding. Budget cuts here are not felt as abstract inconveniences or the loss of a few unrelated services — they are felt as a definite decline in our quality of life, and in the quality of education upon which the future of the state lies.

Cuts in funding affect people, not just accounting books. On a campus where tensions related to race and sex are an ever-present problem for concerned people to struggle with, we can ill-afford a budget that will result in haggling over severely restricted funds. History has shown repeatedly that times of economic hardship are the times racism and sexism become most blatant. In this sense, as well as so many others, a budget cut would be just another step backwards.

Certainly money matters are important — especially to taxpayers. But people are more important. Hopefully, Mr. Dukakis, you'll keep that little truism in mind while touring UMass.

"Stop! I've heard enough! You're perfect."

"You mean I can get a job?"

"With your qualifications you can get any kind of job you want."

"That's great!"

"And you didn't think you learned anything from college."

"Just one question."

"What's that?"

"If I learned so much from college and wasn't even aware of it, then what can I expect from my job?"

"A lot more of the same, only this time you'll know what you're learning."

The work study run-around

By DUKE SIMONEAU
Collegian Staff

Every semester, 13,000 people apply for work-study through UMass' Financial Aid office. If your original supplication for sustenance was rejected (as mine was), you are advised by FA's window workers to file a typewritten sheet stating why you feel you deserve a chance to work. I followed the procedure. However, when the woman said the office would "advise you in two weeks" of the disposition of my case, I insisted on an appointment with a counselor. One week later, I met with Ed Ward in the inner sanctum (yes, I actually got by the little Berlin Wall of windows).

Mr. Ward had all my paperwork. All my paperwork EXCEPT my appeal. When I mentioned it, he said he'd never seen it and it wasn't really necessary. I made one serious mistake in filling out the form. I told the truth and admitted a serious flaw to the character of a U.S. Government certified "Independent Student". I spent the summer of 1975 residing at home. I couldn't help myself though. I just had this irresistable urge to see the family again.

Alas, for a single summer of lounging around the house (between dates and two jobs), I was penalized for not being "independent" enough. Mr. Ward told me outright that with the volume of students processed through financial aid, I could have filled out the form to meet the requirements and be damned with the truth. But this is my last semester to starve. Come summer, I have a diploma and a job waiting (a real job, with a pay check and it's even relevant to what I've spent four years and $10,000 of my own cash studying).

Since Financial Aid hasn't got the best track record for holding onto forms, I took the precaution of Xeroxing my appeal before turning it into them. Here it is, in its entirety. Have a good day. Financial Aid, and may your pens back up and obliterate your Government Certifications.

WHY I SHOULD BE GIVEN WORK-STUDY (OR SEVEN REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD HELP ME EAT REGULARLY) RICHARD JAMES SIMONEAU 8364157

1) School status — full time senior, planned graduation date Sept. 77, living in Brown House, NOT on meal plan (a medical matter I'm allergic to ptomaine.)

2) Dependency status — absolutely, definitely, positively NONE (as in I've been functioning on my own for a while without your help.)

3) Current bank assets — Lynn Five Cents Savings Bank, Lynn, Mass. Savings — eight dollars and odd change. Checking — $50 to live off of this semester.

4) Current bank deficits — $4500 in HELP loans, same bank as above. That must say something about my intentions of getting through here.

5) Current job status — One (read singular) night shift consisting of six steamy, garbage stained hours as a TOC dishwasher. More hours almost impossible to obtain (Schedule full of work-studies). Other jobs almost non-existent (although I note a wall papered with "Work-study only" openings in the Employment Office).

6) Work-study history — while at Northeastern, I only paid out $1,000 a term, was living at home, had a PAID Co-op position arranged by NU for six months of the year, AND a work study job that allowed me to think of dinner for two at McDonalds as other than a luxury item.

7) Total income, 1976 — Gross income: $780 (Now THAT'S gross. Also the result of four jobs, all good references.)

A unique addiction

At the Collegian, we have an unwritten rule that you try as hard as you can in your columns not to get 'inhouse', which translated into everyday language means don't talk about the inner politics and Peyton Press activities of the campus newspaper staff. Well, I'm going to break the rules a bit and write an inhouse column. Why? Because what inhouse news I bring relates to many people, regular student people.

What I have to talk about is dealing with a large university campus life, finding your place in it and taking advantage of all the opportunities here. It has to do with being a UMie: being a student in a far from academic atmosphere, being insane in a zoo-like atmosphere attempting sanity, striving for sanity. And then it's preparing for the future: making yourself employable.

And then there's the self: the need to accomplish, the need to be known and know yourself. Self-identity.

It's all here in this fluorescent-lighted office in the basement of the Campus Center: the campus press manned by students just like you guided from time to time by a few professionals from the real-world newspaper business.

It's a place you tip-toe into the first time you enter because you get the distinct impression that you're an outsider to this big group of friends. It's like walking into any dorm corridor or trying to eat dinner with a group of friends who are strangers to you or setting yourself down at a table of friends in the Hatch or inthe Bluewall who never before knew you existed.

But if you keep on coming, what it is is falling into a niche, a little closet on this 1,000-acre campus. Making friends, becoming within a clique of friends, sharing views and interests and doing together all the things one does to have fun in college, particularly a far from academic one like UMass: It's drinking, smoking, rowdy parties, gossip, affairs ... loving it, you never leave and never see anything else. But the Collegian life is only as good as its members who are more commonly called "news jocks".

You learn practical skills, employable skills whether you be a future newspaper person or not. You instantly become an expert on campus news and state news — you have to. You learn to type at 67 characters per line triple space. You learn to type (not write out longhand, mind you) a piece in an hour, take photos of speakers without thinking that there you are flashing away with an audience behind you. You begin to think of life in terms of column inches, good leads, headlines and press conferences. Your name becomes attached to the phrase "I'm from the Collegian" and you get so used to seeing your name in print so often, you hate to think of the time when it will stop — this "star" time. The Collegian makes you a star, you know.

Talk about a home away from home away from home!

There's something different about this group from any other group you'll find on campus. They get together each day to put together a product, a newspaper which students pick-up and pick-apart each morning. There's a lot of work, a lot of time, a lot of dedicated minds, a lot of love for a masthead, a lot of drive, and many, many headaches you cannot imagine. It's a predominantly lily-white establishment although many, particularly our Black Affairs Editor, are trying to change that. It's also a place where one can claim some power over, or attempt to. The politics of the Collegian. Want a free show on tearing a candidate to bits and shreds of flesh? Come to the Collegian elections in December. Okay, we all admit our mistakes.

But there is something, the greatest most sacred part of the Collegian we of the Collegian oftentimes forget. The Collegian is for most the last time to make mistakes, serious mistakes in print. And the Collegian is the last time until you own something or are a chief editor or in an executive position when you can innovate your own ideas, be crazily creative, unconventionally creative without too much scuffle with higher ups. Oftentimes, we think of ourselves as a miniature Boston Globe. We're not. We're serving a campus community.

Sound like a sell-to-you? You're right. You see, there's one thing unique to the Collegian, something which happens only at the Collegian. It's the hang-around, which translated into ordinary English means someone who stays — attacked by disease, never able to leave — ever. And that's me and a few other clowns and characters here. But this is the second semester I've decided to stay away and take up different residence in order to study, get the cum up and go to a decent grad school.

This weekend I decided for the upteenth time that I would leave, but here I am tonight typing this column, having wasted a whole day when I should have been studying in my room, thinking about what I wanted to say.

And when you come in, if I'm here, find me and say hello. But then again, if enough of you come there won't even be enough room for me anymore. I hope so, because then I'll be forced to go home and study. Nonetheless, good luck in your Collegian career and here I wish you the strength and wisdom to know when you can't learn anymore here and strength and wisdom to be able to go. Few can.

"UNFORTUNATELY, THE COMMITTEE YOU HAD WORKING ON THE UNEMPLOYMENT PROBLEM WAS FIRED TWO DAYS AGO"

NEWS IN BRIEF

Legislator sidetracks pay raise

BOSTON (AP) — Plans to give top state officials pay raises of $1,000 or more were sidetracked Monday by a key legislator, even though the proposal includes hikes for lawmakers.

Sen. Chester G. Atkins, D-Harvard, Senate chairman of the legislature's Public Service Committee, said he will hold the measure in his committee indefinitely.

His comments came after an abbreviated public hearing. Only a handful of persons testified on the proposal by the Dukakis administration.

The plan, outlined by Administration Secretary John R. Buckley, is to give all non-union state officials pay raises in line with those negotiated last year by the bulk of state employes, who are covered by the Alliance union coalition.

Under the plan, unionized workers will get $850 in raises, plus a bonus of $150 or 1½ per cent of their salary, whichever is greater.

Coffee prices to be probed

BOSTON (AP) — The state secretary of consumer affairs says she wants to meet with Secretary of State Cyrus Vance to propose an investigation into the high price of coffee.

Secretary Christine B. Sullivan said she sent a petition Monday to Vance that was signed by consumer representatives and demands to find the reasons for increases in Brazilian and Colombian coffee.

"People want to know if the price of coffee is being dictated to them the same way oil-producing countries seem to dictate the price of oil," she said.

Atomic plants get tighter security

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission unveiled orders yesterday for every U.S. atomic power plant to hire more guards, install surveillance equipment and take other new measures to thwart armed sabotage attempts.

A senior NRC official estimated the beefed-up security will cost each of the nation's 69 licensed or anticipated plants about $2 million. He said any plant that does not comply will be shut down.

Under the new order, utility companies must be able to transform their nuclear plants into fortresses capable of standing off attack by "several" dedicated terrorists with military training and automatic weapons.

Plant guards and "armed response force personnel" — technicians selected to become defenders in event of a sabotage attempt — would be authorized to shoot to kill if necessary. Weapons for plant defense would range up to semi-automatic rifles.

Benard Rusche, the NRC reactor regulations chief, said the intensified security is considered necessary to keep terrorists from getting into atomic power plants and blowing up reactors or otherwise releasing radioactivity.

Body found in drug raid

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — A body discovered in a Gilmanton house containing four tons of marijuana was identified yesterday as Jerome O'Sullivan. But authorities revealed little else about the man.

Assistant Atty. Gen. Greg Smith said no age or home address for O'Sullivan have been established, but he was believed to have been in his early 30s.

O'Sullivan's body was found Monday during a drug raid on the house, a seven-room colonial which was being rented to O'Sullivan by a New York physician who said he had not used the house for several years.

Police sources said that the Belknap County sheriff's office was tipped that a large quantity of drugs were in the house.

The Concord Monitor quoted police sources as saying that the marijuana was packed in cardboard boxes and labeled by weight.

Investigation reveals Texaco withholding natural gas supply

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texaco is withholding from production over 500 billion cubic feet of natural gas in two fields off the coast of Louisiana that could have been tapped this winter to ease severe gas shortages, congressional investigators said yesterday.

Texaco did not attempt to pump this gas into interstate pipelines because of a "desire to maximize its profits," said John Galloway, who headed the probe by the House Oversight and Investigations subcommittee.

Texaco has stated it is producing as much natural gas as it can from these fields. Texaco officials are scheduled to testify before the subcommittee on Wednesday.

Most of the gas in question, located in Texaco's Tiger Shoal and Lighthouse Point fields, is not slated for production until the 1980s, although the reservoirs could be "fully developed" within six months, the investigators testified.

The subcommittee is studying allegations that major oil companies have been holding back production of natural gas in hopes of getting higher prices for the fuel. Chairman John Moss, D-Calif., said the new revelations show "a new type of withholding, more subtle in kind but far more reaching in effect."

Galloway said Texaco is sitting on 429 billion cubic feet of proved but nonproducing gas reservoirs in the Tiger Shoal field — one of the largest fields in the Gulf of Mexico — and 107 billion cubic feet in the smaller Lighthouse Point field.

These reserves are mostly "behind the pipe" reservoirs, Galloway said. These are known but untapped pockets of gas that lie above reservoirs that are currently in production.

He said it is "technically feasible" to get at this gas quickly by drilling additional wells, although such a decision may result in less profits to a producer than waiting until the lower reservoir is exhausted and then moving up to the "behind the pipe" gas.

AFL-CIO launch campaign seeking new labor law

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. — Asking no help from President Carter, the AFL-CIO yesterday launched an expensive and historically ambitious legislative campaign to overhaul federal labor law, increase the minimum wage and reverse four vetoes by President Ford.

AFL-CIO President George Meany said the time was right for enactment of the measures because of the heavily Democratic Congress and a new Democratic president.

"The climate is good," Meany said. He indicated he expected Carter to sign all the measures if they are passed, but declined to ask the President to lobby on labor's behalf in Congress. He said he would go to Carter only if a veto were threatened.

"We haven't asked him to get out in front on it," Meany said. "I have no reason to believe he would be unhappy about these changes. I don't look for vetoes.

"I don't ask for any commitment on these things. I didn't ask for anything when he was running for office, and I am not asking him now."

Meany acknowledged he expected strong opposition from the so-called "right to work lobby."

The AFL-CIO Executive Council, meeting here this week, thus voted to impose a temporary, one-cent per month assessment on all members to raise $800,000 to finance a special lobbying task force.

The National Right To Work Committee plans to raise $1 million to defeat labor's programs and other conservative, employer-oriented groups are expected to make a similar all out effort.

Lucecita Benitez

By ALBERTO SOTO
Eco Latino Staff

"Este tema que voy a interpretar es de un hombre que ya todos ustedes conocen. Casi todo lo que estoy interpretando esta noche es de el basicamente. Es una especie de honor, honor no sino respeto, para esos grandes individuos y poetas. La funcion de un artista es reconocer a los grandes artistas y en este caso, honor a quien honor merece, a Antonio Caban Vale (El Topo). Y este tema se lo dedico a Julia de amor amanecida..." Y un pueblo se levanto y aplaudio a LUCECITA.

Lucecita Benitez nacio en Bayamon, Puerto Rico. Se destaco como artista, llegando a unos de los mas altos lugares al conquistar el primer festival de la voz y la cancion de america con una composicion de Guillermo Venegas Lloveras "Genesis". Ha habido cambios en mis gustos personales en cuanto a la musica y aunque Venegas Lloveras "Genesis". "Ha habido cambios en mis gustos personales en cuanto a la musica y aunque Venegas Lloveras es un gran compositor, no esta en el estilo mio", afirma Lucecita. Ella pertenece al pueblo y lo mismo demuestra su talento presentandose en concierto en los mas grandes salones de espectaculos de Puerto Rico, como en los lugares mas pequenos. Se presento en el Centro de Comvenciones, el mas grande salon de presentaciones de Puerto Rico y proyecto su voz a mas de dosmil personas. Se presento en el ocho puertas, club nocturno, por tres semanas consecutivas y un pueblo la admiro. Presentaciones de sus conciertos "Traigo un pueblo en mi voz" y "En las manos de un pueblo" se hicieron en lugares en San Juan y en toda la isla y un pueblo se levanto y aplaudio a Lucecita.

"Si ser rebelde es no estar de acuerdo con las normas establesidas entonces soy rebelde. Aqui el calificativo de rebelde puede tener doble connotacion, puede haber un rebelde negativo y uno positivo. No se si me comprenden. Mi concepto de rebeldia es muy positivo porque trato de aportar, de dar soluciones. Su rebeldia se ve inpregnada en las poesias de Alberto Cortez, Raffy Monclova, Wilkins, Alberto Carrion, Pablo Neruda y ahora Antonio Caban Vale, (El Topo). El Topo ha sabido explorar y nutrirse de las fuentes de nuestra musica y tradiciones. Las canciones de Antonio Caban Vale son poesias y sus poesias son canciones que brotan el sentimiento libre de un pueblo. Sus canciones vibran con los mas profundos sentimientos del ser humano: el amor, alegria y pasion por su patria, todo sumado a un especialisimo sabor a Puerto Rico que lleva Lucecita en su voz, hace de su concierto un concierto con vida, un concierto con amor a la patria.

"No solo estoy identificada con la independencia de Puerto Rico, estoy identificada con todos los pueblos que quieren ser libres."

Lucecita estara presentandose en los Estados Unidos en Marzo. Uno de sus conciertos sera en esta universidad el sabado doce, en donde cantara las poesias "vivas" del Topo, acompanada por Pedro Rivera Toledo, Oscar Galende, Carlos Rosario, Wison Torres y otros. Traera alegria, traera sentimiento a patria, nos traera el calor de latinoamerica. Y un pueblo se levantara y la aplaudira.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Publicity meeting for women's week

There will be an important meeting of the publicity committee for International Women's Week today at 2:30 p.m. in Campus Center 904 to organize the distribution of publicity materials, press releases, and radio cartels to the New England area.

On Saturday at 1 p.m. in Campus Center 803 there will be an Orientation meeting for all persons interested in helping out in any capacity during International Women's Week. This will include staffing the main office, workshops, guide service and information, as well as a total summary of the week's events. We need lots of help!

Dance Theatre announces schedule

The UMass Arts Council has released the following schedule for the Residency of the Pilobolus Dance Theatre February 24-26, 1977. The residency, which is sponsored by the Arts Council is also part of the National Endowment for the Arts Dance Residency Touring Program.

Thursday at 2:30 p.m., two master classes will be conducted by members of the company in the Women's Physical Education Building for advanced students of the dance. Classes will be for dance majors, and only five places are being reserved for non-dance majors. Reservations for these classes may be made with Marilyn Patton (545-2413) at least one week in advance.

Friday, from 12:45 to 2:15 p.m. a lecture-demonstration will be given at Amherst Regional High School.

Sex discrimination public hearing today

The Student Affairs Title IX Self-Evaluation Committee will hold a public hearing to discuss issues relevant to sex discrimination on campus pertaining to Student Services (Financial Aid Office, Placement Services), today from noon to 2 p.m., in room 917 of the Campus Center.

Health Services offers weight program

Due to the increasing requests for weight control groups, the University Health Services will be offering another weight reduction workshop this semester. Students who are 20 pounds or more above their optimal weight are welcome to participate.

It is a 10-week program that will include individualized diet instruction, an exercise program and methods of modifying behaviors that are the cause of problematic eating. The format will be a combination of group discussions and several guest speakers. A fee will be required of each student with 75 per cent to be reimbursed at the completion of the 10 weeks.

The first session will be held at the Health Center tonight from 12:15 to 1:45 p.m. in room 302. A serious commitment to attend all 10 sessions will be expected.

Beaux Arts Ball to be held Saturday

What has several hundred legs, dances itself into joyous exhaustion between hours of eating and drinking, and enjoys itself all to hell? If you answer anything but the 1st Annual Beaux Arts Ball you may be right, but you've missed the point.

The point is the University of Massachusetts Art Department is carrying on the tradition set by many of the greatest European Art schools. The Beaux Arts Ball has for many years been the province of Artists, models and patrons of the Arts, and has always been characterized by imagination, costumes, music and much frivolity. Beaux Arts '77 is following this tradition. There will be prizes for costumes, continuous entertainment provided by Light in the Night as well as vocalist Cora Rosenthal, and the drawing of the winning tickets for Faculty Art prints.

The Ball will be held this Saturday, February 26.

All proceeds will benefit the Art Scholarship Fund. Tickets for both Beaux Arts '77 and the Art Raffle can be purchased at the Fine Arts Center Art office (rm 351), the student coffee shop (4th floor, F.A.C.), and Thursday and Friday on the Campus Center Concourse. Raffle tickets are one dollar ($1.00), and Ball tickets are five dollars ($5.00) for students and seven dollars ($7.00) for Faculty and staff.

Don't be sorry you missed it!!!

Video Sidewalk today in the Hatch

The Student Video Project presents Video Sidewalk every Tuesday in the Campus Center Concourse and Wednesdays in the back of the Hatch from 11:30 to 2:30 p.m. Today in the Hatch two programs will be played: a videotaped program of the Holly Near and Jeff Langley concert last semester at the Fine Arts Center and the Seabrook Tape.

Handel recital tonight in Bowker Auditorium

Professor Linda Smith will give a bassoon and saxophone recital tonight at 8:00 in Bowker Auditorium. The recital will be in celebration of the 292nd birthday of composer George Frederick Handel.

Workshop tonight on women's issues

There will be an open workshop on Women and Community Organizing tonight in Herter 118 from 7:30 to 9:00.

Ellen Sedlis from the New England Learning Center for Women in Transition and Dale Melcher from the July Fourth Women's Caucus will talk about issues concerning battered women, daycare and health issues.

Israeli folkdancing

Beginning today, Israeli Folk dancing at UMass will be running on a weekly basis in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union.

Instruction will be provided by Yaffa Levine, a certified teacher of Israeli dance, who has just arrived from Israel. Yaffa will be assisted by Sharon Greenblat.

Beginners dance at 7:30 p.m., advanced at 8:30 p.m. New dances will be taught. All are welcome.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Wednesday, February 23 — Born today, you are a responsible, dutiful individual whose insistence upon doing what he is supposed to do when and where he is supposed to do it may well gain him a reputation for being "old-maidish." On the other hand, your "old-maidishness" has often resulted in profit for yourself and for others, for it has enabled you to stick to a project or endeavor --in spite of difficulties that would have effectively discouraged others from staying the course – to the point of gain. This means, of course, that there many be some arid periods in your lifetime; periods when it appears that nothing can be gained, that all is, if not lost, at least unproductive. But ultimately, it means success -- materially and otherwise.

You enjoy the company of those of the opposite sex. At the same time, however, you fully intend to keep your head and heart about you so as not to be rushed into any relationship that might be considered permanent -- in intention, if nothing else. Thus it is that though you may often be seen in the company of one others acceptable as a possible mate, you may not actually settle down with one who is acceptable to you until relatively late in your lifetime. You enjoy your freedom too much and trust your liberty to others too little to be able to enter into marriage without years of mental perparation.

Thursday, February 24

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Make sure that pleasure does not take the place of business today. There are large profits to be made late in the day; look for them.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — The unbidden aid of another may cause you to lose your temper – momentarily. Your ability to regain emotional control is well demonstrated.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — The changes that occur early in the day may prove so disconcerting that afternoon and evening hours are threatened.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Swim with the current today. To try to buck the tide is tantamount to inviting trouble into your home. Allow the majority to rule.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Confusion during morning hours must not be allowed to slide into afternoon hours.. Take hold of yourself -- and quide others that they may do likewise.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — You must use your time more efficiently as you strive to accomplish a new goal. Discipline yourself!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — An involvement in activities for which you are not fully prepared may cause you to lose out in both pride and material profit.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Immerse yourself in the kind of work that will take up both you time and your mind. Otherwise, you will defeat your own purpose.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Received information must be assimilated before it can be utilized with any degree of success. Be sure you know another's meaning.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — This is an excellent day for Sagittarius to attempt to take and keep the reins. Household affairs may get out of order late in the day.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Don't trust to your connection with an academic group. You may find better answers to your questions in other quarters.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — An impractical dream, if followed, may cause you considerable unrest -- not to mention embarrassment. Reconsider your objectives.

Politics stalls new facility

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of a three-part series dealing with the proposed construction of a sports facility at UMass-Boston.

Yes, the politicians are playing games with the University of Massachusetts athletic program. But the game is not being played at the Amherst campus. The game is being played at UMass-Boston, where the UMass Board of Trustees (headed by chairman Joseph P. Healey) in a meeting last January, voted to ask the legislature to release the necessary tax funds to build a sports arena in Boston.

The plans call for a skating rink, pool and basketball gym to be constructed, all housed in one building and with an estimated price tag of between eight and nine million dollars.

The mere fact that Boston and not Amherst is receiving a sports arena has stirred up an overabundance of controversy and confusion. Much of the confusion is simply due to poor communication. How can the average UMass student be expected to understand this decision by the Board of Trustees when Athletic Director Frank McInerney and Associate Athletic Director Robert O'Connell were not even fully informed about the UMass-Boston construction plans?

It is evident, according to Daniel Melley, Director of Public Affiars and Dean of Physical Education David Bischoff, (also a design consultant for the UMass-Boston – Columbia Point project) that construction at Columbia Point will not even begin until Governor Michael Dukakis decides to release the tax funds the state legislature has appropriated.

This is supposedly an "economic decision", according to Bischoff and Melley. It should also be noted that further delay to begin construction at Columbia Point will be expensive, so much so that the Boston campus may be losing some of the originally planned facilities right at this very moment, due to rising construction costs and that evil being known to all as inflation.

Never mind the question — "When will the construction begin?", let's try the question — "Why Boston and not Amherst?" Everyone is fully aware of the fact that the hockey team has no rink of its own and that the Cage is approaching senility, so why did UMass-Boston receive a sports arena, if and when they get around to accepting contractors' bids?

The answers to these questions are not as complicated as one might expect. In an interview conducted last week, Bischoff and Melley provided many of the answers to the questions concerning why the Boston campus was chosen and also what they will be building at the Boston campus. What follows are their replies to the basic questions concerning the proposed facilities at UMass-Boston, which was originally conceived three years ago:

Question: What facilities will be constructed at the Boston campus?

BISCHOFF: "There will be one building of substantial cost, probably between eight and nine million dollars. It will house a skating rink, a gymnasium for basketball and a pool. There will also be collapsible seating, no more than one to two thousand seats."

Question: How will the Boston construction be financed?

BISCHOFF and MELLEY: "State taxes."

Question: Why was the Boston campus chosen? Will this affect Amherst's chances of receiving new facilities in the future?

BISCHOFF: "If they didn't build in Boston, it wouldn't mean that we would have a better chance of getting one here. They (in Boston) do not have a gymnasium, it is unfortunate that people have misinterpreted this. We (at Amherst) have three gyms, UMass-Boston had an opportunity to build a complex for the University and the Columbia Point community. They are building a facility to serve their students' needs and the needs of the nearby community (Columbia Point). The fact that they are getting a hockey rink does not mean they are getting our rink. This University has stabilized, enrollment-wise. No new construction for Amherst is planned. UMass-Boston is still growing, enrollment-wise."

Question: Is it correct in stating that the legislature has appropriated this money and that Governor Dukakis won't release the funds?

MELLEY: "Yes."

Matmen manhandle Huskies

By BOB HASKELL
Collegian Staff

The UMass wrestling team stunned the Huskies from UConn last night at Boyden Gym, by coming from behind to record a 24-19 victory.

Junior Mike Riley, wrestling at 190 lbs. for this encounter, was the hero, as he earned a last second tie with some awesome determination in a tension-packed match against a much larger foe.

Down 18-13 with three matches left, the Minutemen rallied behind the efforts of Bob Spaulding (177) lbs.), Riley, and the inevitable Dennis Fenton (Hvywt.).

Fenton provided the actual winning points as he almost casually flipped the hefty UConn heavyweight onto his back and administered the deciding pin.

A rabid crowd of wrestling fanatics was treated to a fine display of grappling skill as the Minutemen got strong performances from a make-shift lineup.

"We were resting some people tonight," said Coach Dave Amato after the match, "so I was especially pleased by the performances of Bruce Rhodes (150 lbs.), who won 13-4, and of Keith Dixson (142 lbs.), who looked great, but lost a close match to a tough opponent."

JV hoopmen prevail

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's sub varsity basketball team utilized its press to full advantage and capitalized on a ton of Springfield Technical Community College turnovers last night to post an 88-74 win at Curry Hicks Cage.

The smaller, scrappy Tech squad rebounded on a par with the Minutemen, but were hurt by mental mistakes which cost it any chance of winning the game.

UMass led early, keyed by 6 points apiece from Bob Berman and Irv McKnight. Ten straight Tech points tied the game and put the visitors up by 4. However, UMass outscored Tech 23-8 over the last 5 minutes of the half to carry a 48-33 lead into the lockerroom.

Berman and Tom McDonough led the way offensively in the half as they scored 17 and 10 points, respectively. The UMass press was effective in the 1st half with Tech either breaking the press and getting a layup or turning the ball over — more often the latter.

UMass kept the lead around 15-18 points until a Berman jumper at 15:46 brought the lead to 20 points, the widest margin of the game.

At the 10:00 mark, Tech ran off a 9-2 spurt to close within 12. Tech then had another run of 6-2, with Carl Roy getting 2 of the 13 straight points he would score. A Willie Morgan running-on-air, double pump layup and a Wayne Malcolm layin off an inbounds pass, sandwiched around a pair of Roy free throws, had the margin standing at 11 points.

A Roy jumper and free throw pulled Tech to within 10 points, the closest it had been since early in the first half.

However, Berman, who had been fairly silent in the 2nd half, then threw in a jumper off a spin move, and Malcolm put in a layup to seal the verdict.

Berman ended up with 25 points for the 5-2 Minutemen, while McDonough had 19. Chairman of the Boards McKnight took down 18 bounds to go with 14 points. Tech MVP Roy ended with 26 points and 12 caroms.

JV hoopwomen lose

By MEL WEBSTER
Collegian Staff

The UMass JV women's basketball team was defeated by a strong Southern Connecticut squad, 100-75, at the Cage Saturday night.

The Minutewomen played a solid first half, but found themselves trailing by four points, 39-35, at the break. Karyl Resnick came off the bench to score eight points to keep the Minutewomen close. The defense also played well in the first half, closing off the baseline to Southern.

The second half looked like a different ball game. Southern employed a tenacious full court press and it resulted in numerous UMass turnovers. At the 10 minute mark of the second half, Southern's lead had increased to 13 points, 68-55. The lead grew to 19 at the six minute mark as UMass continued to turn the baal over.

The Minutewomen turned the ball over 23 times in the second half, and that made the difference in the game. Southern Connecticut's center, Maureen Goddard, scored 30 points, and teammate Nancy Pearson added 15. The Minutewomen's scoring was balanced, with four women in double figures. Toby Mead led with 14 points, while Resnick hit for 13. Pat DeCaire had 11 points, and made some nice steals in the first half.

Seniors take final bow

Icemen joust Crusaders

By TOM CROWLEY
Collegian Staff

Orr rink might never see their faces again.

Eleven seniors will skate for the last time in front of a UMass crowd this afternoon at 4 p.m. as the Minutemen hockey team faces off against Holy Cross College.

While there are eleven seniors on the 7-2-1 team, only nine will suit up for the game. Both Bob McCormack and Paul Hurley will miss the final home game of this season. McCormack is out with a shoulder injury and a broken bone in his hand, and Hurley is out with a leg injury.

"He'll (McCormack) be sorely missed," coach Canniff said. "He gave us everything he could. He had one long period of injuries this season. He's had poor luck and it happened at a bad time, senior year."

Hurley has already sat out seven games and Canniff feels that the team "misses his steadying influence. He's a great two-way player. In thirteen games, he had eight points; in twenty games he would have been in double figures."

"And we don't have too many people in double figures," Canniff added.

The line that has the majority of double figure scorers on it is the senior trio of Mike Merchant, Frank Snow, and Carl Burns. Merchant is the leading scorer right now for the Minutemen with 25 points.

Carl is having his finest year according to coach Canniff. "He's playing up to his potential." Burns has 22 points on the season.

"Frank Snow has been a welcome addition from Mass Bay (Community College) and has given us a big lift," Canniff said. "He compliments Burns and Merchant very well." Snow had a goal and an assist in Saturday's loss to Boston State.

Merchant, captain of the team for the last two years, has been the team leader for the season. "No question about it, he's an excellent leader off and on the ice, especially since things haven't been that rosy this season," said Canniff.

Mike Badger and Kevin Sullivan are two more attackers who will play at Orr for the final time this afternoon. The two seniors did not get much playing time until this year and only got a limited amount this season playing on the third line. "In the four years they could have fallen by the wayside, but they hung tough and got to where they wanted to go," Canniff said.

On defense, Bob Jefferson and McCormack have played together as a pair for three years. "They were an excellent tandem," Canniff said. Jefferson scored two goals Saturday.

Jefferson and McCormack played in front of an unusual group of goalies for the last three years as three men, Dana Redmond, John Riley, and Doug Janik have all been on the squad at the same time. Redmond is the starting goal minder, Janik has suited up for most games and has started some, and Riley has played now and then.

"I think it's a trait of character," Canniff reflected. "They fought for one job and not one fell in four years. That's the type of individuals they are. That type of character will help them later in life."

The immediate task, though, is the improving Crusaders. Holy Cross is sixth in the Eastern Conference of Division II with a 10-9-0 record, 15-9-0 overall. They have already won more games than last year when the Purple were 7-11-0 in the Division and 14-11 overall.

The leading scorer for Holy Cross is Glenn Graves with 22 goals and 27 assists. Graves, a senior, is the second all time career scorer at Holy Cross and plays on the top scoring line with Bill Bellerose (18-19-37) and Jim Murphy (16-17-32).

The goalie is P. J. Costello who has a 3.60 goals against average.

All eyes are on Jim Town as he goes up strong for two of 26 points in last night's game against Maine. (Staff photo by Geof Cohler)

Mermen win in wild finish

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

In a meet that was decided by the last event, the UMass men's swim team squeaked out a stunning win last night as they edged the Bluedevils of Central Connecticut 57-56 in a see-saw contest that saw the lead change hands several times.

"It's very rewarding to end our season on a winning note," said Minuteman coach Bei Melamed. "I'm very happy for some of our second row swimmers who turned in good efforts tonight including Harry Fulford in the 200 yard breastroke and Justin Time Bradley in the 200 yard Butterfly."

Everything else aside, the highlight of the contest was the final event, the 400 yard medley relay. Before that relay the score stood at 50-56, with the Minutemen trailing and needing to win in the event, which produced a do or die situation.

Leading off in that relay for UMass was Russ Yarworth who literally exploded for the first 100 yards as he gave the mermen a full-body length lead with a time of 49.3 seconds. Swimming second was Dennis Buss who, despite a valiant effort, gave up a little ground as Central Connecticut took a half body length lead. Third member Tom Bondaruk couldn't regain the lost yardage in his 100 yard stint and set the stage for the stunning performance of senior Ben Crooker who was anchoring the relay and had to make up the three fourths of a body length lead that Central Conn. now had.

Make it up he did as he was dead even with Sheehan of Central Conn. after 75 yards and remained that way as they both sprinted the last 25 yards before a beserk crowd at Boyden Pool. In the end, they both appeared to touch the wall at the same time and it was several anxious moments before the judge announned that Crooker had touched out Sheehan.

Yarworth's performance in that last relay wasn't his only fine effort of the night as he had previously set a new marker in the 200 yard freestyle with a time of 1:49.8 and was a member of the winning 400 yard medley relay team that also included Dave Boucher, Justin Bradley and Crooker. Also, Crooker was a triple winner as he added a win in the 1,000 yard freestyle with a time of 1:49.8.

Other multiple winners for UMass included Jim Antonino who dominated both the 1 and 3 meter diving events, Dave Boucher who notched a win in the 200 yard breastroke at a 2:20.5 clip and Tom Bondaruk whose second win came in the 100 yard freestyle where he turned in a time of 52.6 seconds.

The Mermen completed their regular season schedule with a 4-7 record, while Central Conn. dropped to 4-8.

Merwomen shine in New England meet

By JIM GLEASON
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's swim team put together an "excellent team effort" to place eighth in the New England's this past weekend at Rhode Island.

The meet, which featured 28 teams, saw Springfield come back and defend its title by edging out second place UConn. It also featured some fine performances by the UMass swimmers.

Freshman Deb Schwartz was first in the 200-yard butterfly with a time of 2:16.71. That time established a new UMass team record and a new pool record for the University of Rhode Island pool. She took second in the 100-yard butterfly in 1:03.87 and also broke another UMass team record by swimming the 500-yard freestyle in 5:27.39.

She took sixth place in the 200-yard individual medley with a time of 2:22.82. Schwartz further helped the team by being a part of the 400-yard freestyle relay which placed fouuth. Also taking part in the relay were Mary Ellen Butler, Rachel Mack, and Lise Hembrough. The four also placed sixth in the 200-yard freestyle relay which recorded a time of 1:46.84.

Butler came in tenth for the 50-yard butterfly with a time of 29.35 and finished 14th in the 500-yard freestyle in 5:52.08.

Mack, besides being a part of the relays, swam the 100-yard freestyle in 59.03 which placed her 13th in the field.

In the diving competition, Sinda Schuld took 10th place in the one-meter dives with a score of 273.85. She also received points for capturing 14th place in the three-meter dives.

Suzy Strobel was ninth in the one-meter diving competition with 291.15 points.

Sophomore Lynn Lutz placed 12th in the 500-yard freestyle with a time of 5:50.97.

Rounding out the scoring was the relay team of Roxanne Balducci, Alix DenHartog, Dianne Perry, and Hembrough placing 16th in the 400-yard medley relay.

Coach Eve Atkinson was "very pleased" with the team as they all turned in their best times for the two day meet.

Springfield won the championship with a total of 571 points. UConn (543) placed second, while UMaine (475) finished third. Rounding out the top eight are Southern Conn. with 465, UNH with 252, Williams with 230, Boston College (179) and UMass with 170.

The team's next meet is at Radcliffe tonight. Starting time is 7 p.m.

Minutemen subdue hungry Bears; 96-85

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

It was only fitting that senior center Mark Donoghue scored his 1000th career point and final point at the Cage last night with only five seconds left to play in the game.

It was only appropriate that senior Jim Town was the team's leading scorer with 26 points and the team's leading rebounder with 13.

But what wasn't natural on "Senior Night" was the lethargic crowd of 3,200 which watched a listless UMass team win its 15th game 96-85. But as the saying goes, "It wasn't as easy as the score sounds."

Junior forward Mike Pyatt, returning to active duty for the first time since being injured on Saturday, February 12th, rescued the Minutemen with 19 points.

Pyatt, injured in the Rhode Island game with a torn hamstring in the hip area, entered the game at 10:37 of the first half with the score tied at 17, and scored nine points in the first half to help give UMass a 51-43 lead at halftime.

Pyatt, shooting 50 per cent for the game also contributed five rebounds in 35 minutes of play.

"Pyatt's return really gave our team a lift," said UMass coach Jack Leaman after the game.

"Mike shot the ball real well considering this was the first action he has seen in two weeks and it couldn't have come at a better time. Right now he feels a little winded and needs to get back into shape. but overall he looked real good and aggressive," Leaman said.

After the game Pyatt said he felt generally healthy but said his knee felt sore. "But I'm sure with more playing time, that should come around too," said a happy Pyatt.

Besides Town and Pyatt, Donoghue and guard Derick Claiborne carried the Umass offense with 15 points apiece. Alex Eldridge canned nine while freshman Bill Morrison, starting the game, finished with six. UMass shot 50 per cent for the game and outrebounded Maine 51-32.

On the other side of the ledger, Rufus Harris, from Framingham and Roger Lapham from Wakefield each hit for 25 points and were "immense". In 40 minutes of playing time, Harris shot 50 per cent while Lapham hit 10-17 and grabbed ten rebounds. Dan Reilly, playing an excellent floor game as a guard scored 14 points while 6'8 center Kevin Nelson, playing opposite Town, scored 15.

The Black Bears, with a present record of 11-13 came out determined and played even with Umass for the first ten minutes of the game. Behind the shooting of Kevin Nelson and Lapham, Maine took the lead, 31-27 before Eldridge and Pyatt came alive to spark the Minutemen.

Pyatt, who was to score nine points in seven minutes, hit three jumpers while Eldridge stole the ball twice within a minute and drove the full length of the court for two layups. With 2:50 left in the half, UMass led 37-35 and were never behind again.

UMass took control of the first four minutes of the second half as Town, Claiborne, and Donoghue hit jump shots to give UMass a 55-49 lead.

Bill Morrison's jump shot and Eldridge's two foul shots helped extend the lead to 65-57 before Maine's Lapham and Steve Gavett hit outside shots to cut the Minutemen lead to four, 65-61, with 11 minutes left in the game.

UMass, unable to move an offense, went two minutes without scoring a point while Maine, continuously showing patience and communication on offense, evened the score at 65 with seven minutes left.

It was at this stage when Leaman reunited the quintet of Pyatt, Town, Donoghue, Eldridge, and Claiborne, who clicked together for six straight points to give the Minutemen the lead 75-69 with 5:53 left.

Eldridge, Town, and Pyatt, extended the lead to 81-73 but again Maine refused to give up. Rufus Harris, the younger brother of Minuteman football player Ron Harris, hit two 20-ft jumpers to cut the lead to 81-76 before Pyatt and Claiborne took control of the game hitting two layups apiece.

Donoghue's three-point play gave UMass a commanding 92-81 lead with one minute left before it was time for the Cage to give its last tribute to seniors Donoghue and Town.

Seniors bid Cage fond adieu

By RON ARENA
Collegian Staff

For seniors Mark Donoghue and Jim Town, it ended up being a bit of fun after all.

No, the Minutemen basketball team did not play with awesome ability in last nights 96-85 ho-hummer over Maine at the Cage. In fact, they were downright flat.

But it was the traditional "Senior Night" and the sideshow festivities which created enough stir to bring about some sincere stomps and cheers from the 3200 onlookers.

For Donoghue and Town, it marked a final Cage appearance for a pair of seniors who have meant so much to UMass basketball the past two and three years, respectively. It was a fitting way to end.

For Town, the 6-7 forward from Glen Falls, N.Y., the final walk off the Cage court came with 20 seconds left in the game amidst a standing ovation. Town had just completed another of his typical, non-flashy but consistent performances. The senior workhorse finished with 26 points and 13 rebounds to lead all players in both categories in a 38-minute stint.

For Donoghue, the finish was even more of a climax to a two-year Cage career. With five seconds left in the game, the captain from Greenfield took in a Derick Claiborne pass and connected on one his pattented turnaround jumpshots. The jumper gave him 1001 points in his varsity career.

"It felt pretty good walking off," Town said after the win. "It really has been great playing in the Cage."

Donoghue agreed. "We were really pressing early in the game," he said. "We didn't play well, but it did feel great to get that last bucket. They were giving me the ball every time."

The duo, however, appeared more concerned about the team than any individual glory for the night. Both concluded that UMass is not playing good basketball.

"You keep asking yourself what's wrong," Donoghue said. "I keep asking 'Why? Why? Why?' I don't know either. We'll just have to get it together for the tournament."

Last night though, for 40 minutes at least, it was not time to worry about the ECBL tournament. It wasn't long ago that Jim Town came here as a freshman and sat out a year due to a complication in his transcripts. Likewise, Donoghue missed a year after being redshirted following his transfer from Dartmouth. Those were times of waiting and anticipation. Now what seems a short time later, it's a time to look back. And looking back on these two players, one sees good things. They shall be missed.

Hoopwomen shoot down Huskies

STORRS, Ct. — It didn't take long for the UMass women's basketball team to return to its winning ways after its overtime loss to Southern Connecticut.

Like one game.

The Minutewomen got double figure performances from three players and posted an easy 70-55 win over an outclassed UConn team in a game played here last night.

Lu-Ann Fletcher led the way for the new 15-3 UMass squad. She poured in 16 points on an eight for 10 shooting performance while adding six rebounds.

Nancy O'Neil chipped in with 14 points and was the leading UMass board-clearer with 10.

Sue Peters had 10 points to round out the list of individual leaders.

UMass never trailed in the game, as it unveiled its usual fullcourt pressure which harassed the Huskies into making 19 turnovers. The Minutewomen capitalized on the miscues to outscore UConn 20-10 during the last 14 minutes of the first half to turn a 15-13 advantage into a 35-23 halftime lead.

The Huskies, who entered the game with a 4-10 record, was able to make it as close as it was due to the offensive output of its backcourt.

The duo of Karen Mullins and Pattie Bresser scored 17 of UConn's 23 first half points on some deadly long range shooting.

But UMass kept on building its lead up in the second half. It peaked at 21 points (56-35) with 12 minutes left on a Ginny Peebles basket.

The Huskies fought back to come as close as near as 13 behind at 62-49 with six minutes left, but the Minutewomen kept UConn at arm's length the rest of the way.

The factors which decided this game were field goal percentage and rebounding. Mullins and Bresser cooled off in the second half for UConn, and it showed as the Huskies were able to only hit at a dismal 30 per cent clip. UMass, meanwhile, sank 46 per cent of its shots.

The Minutewomen also had double the amount of Husky rebounds, 42-21. The starting frontcourt of Fletcher, O'Neil, and Chris Basile pulled down 23 among themselves, while Maura Supinski came off the bench to add five.

UMASS (70) Carey 1-1-3, Fletcher 8-0-16, McHugh 0-0-0, Martinelli 1-1-3, Peters 5-0-10, O'Neil 6-2-14, Henry 4-0-8, Basile 2-0-6, Supinski 2-2-6, Peebles 2-0-4, Hutchinson 0-0-0. Totals: 31-8-70.

UCONN (55) Vinson 2-2-6, Sirois 3-0-6, Overbaugh 3-2-8, Mullins 8-4-20, Bresser 4-1-9, Cleaver 2-0-4, Borsuk 1-0-2. Totals: 23-9-55.

Civic Center or bust

As the UMass basketball team goes through the process of completing its regular season schedule and prepares to head south to Philadelphia, the City of Brotherly Love, for its ECBL playoff tournament, the jury that has been deliberating the case of the Amherst-Springfield connection is prepared to deliver its verdict.

For those of you who have been kept in the dark concerning the Amherst-Springfield connection, and don't have the slightest idea what I am talking about, let me attempt to enlighten you so you can reach your own verdict.

The Amherst-Springfield connection began about four years ago when the athletic department at this university decided to showcase its fine basketball teams in the brand new spacious Springfield Civic Center.

At first the idea didn't catch on too quickly, as many students either got lost on the way to Springfield, or they decided to stay home and save a few bucks by listening to the game on the radio.

In other words, nobody was showing up in the Minutemen's makeshift home and it appeared the idea was a bust.

But then came the Providence-UMass game in Jan. 1974, in which a powerful UMass team hosted Providence College before nearly 9,000 screaming fans. In case you don't remember, in that game the Friars had Marvin Barnes and Kevin Stacom, while the Minutemen countered with some All-New England stars of their own, with the likes of forward Al Skinner and center John Murphy.

The game was a nip-and-tuck battle throughout, and although Providence pulled the game out in the final seconds, many of the fans left the Civic Center knowing that they had seen New England college basketball at its best.

At that point it appeared that the Amherst-Springfield connection had finally gotten on the right track. It looked as if the Minutemen would successfully draw thousands of students from Amherst to Springfield for the really big games.

But things have not gone well since that day for the Amherst-Springfield connection. Outside of last year's game against the Friars played before another sellout crowd, the Minutemen just have not drawn very well in the spacious Civic Center.

It has gotten to a point now where not only are the students of UMass refusing to attend the games in Springfield, but the players are not too particularly happy with the situation either.

Following the Minutemen's stunning upset of Rutgers two weeks ago, forward Mike Pyatt expressed disappointment in the fact that not even half of the Civic Center was filled to see one of the nation's best college basketball teams in Rutgers.

"Playing in Springfield is nothing like playing in the Cage," Pyatt pointed out. "The crowd isn't alive here like it is at the Cage because most of the people who come to games in Springfield are older people.

"I can understand why a lot of students don't want to come down to Springfield. It's hard for a lot of students to get down here and they also have to pay a couple of extra bucks to get in."

Right now, the UMass basketball program is in a tough situation. One one hand the Minutemen have upgraded their basketball program to the point where they can't play the top teams in the East in dingy old Curry Hicks.

On the other hand, the students, who support the team through their athletic fees and such, either are unable, or refuse to go to any games in Springfield, forcing the Minutemen to play before relatively small home crowds.

What is to become of the fate of the Amherst-Springfield connection? If UMass wishes to continue upgrading its program, it will have to rely on using the Civic Center as a home court when teams like Rutgers, Villanova and Providence.

But by doing this you also take away from the students their basketball team, after all, it's a pain getting down to Springfield on a week night.

If you were a member of the jury voting on the Amherst Springfield connection, how would you vote?

Duke wants 'feel' of campus

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said yesterday he hopes "to get a feel for the institution and for what it's like to go to school here," by the time he leaves campus this afternoon. The governor, who arrived here early yesterday afternoon, is accompanied on his visit by Secretary of Educational Affairs Paul Parks and Assistant Secretary Joan Pinck.

Dukakis spent the night in Coolidge Tower and will today tour campus and talk to students. The governor will leave later this afternoon after a 3 p.m. press conference in Whitmore Administration Building.

Dukakis ate lunch yesterday in the Hatch at 1:20 p.m. and then went to the tenth floor of the Campus Center for a meeting with student senate leaders and other student representatives.

The governor visited the New Africa House and the new solar experiment station on Orchard Hill during the remainder of the afternoon.

Dukakis, Parks and State Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, were accompanied by seven students to dinner in Hampshire Dining Commons last night. The governor had the baked fish and did not go back for seconds.

Dukakis spent last night in room 207 Coolidge. His roommate for the night was UMass student Marc Steinman. Parks stayed next door with UMass student Tom O'Connor.

During the meeting at the Top of the Campus, Dukakis and some student representatives discussed the effects his proposed level-funding budget of $68 million for the Amherst campus would have on the quality of education here. The campus had requested $76 million for fiscal year 1978.

"We need a more limited view of what the University can be and can do," Dukakis said. "We are going to have to make some tough decisions concerning the budget and we may have to reorder our priorities."

Dukakis said several times during the meeting that fiscal autonomy of the University hindered attempts at shifting monies within the budget.

"I'm sure none of us want to go back to the old system where the legislature is fooling around with each line item in the budget, but we must be able to make some changes," he said. "We must ask, 'Are there some places in the budget where money might be better spent elsewhere?' "

"To the extent that you can give us suggestions for the reallocation of funds and to the extent that we feel the ideas are worthwhile, then we will do our best to implement the changes in the budget," he said.

"The last two years have been very painful for the state," he continued, "but not quite so painful as it has been for the people living in the state. We have to balance needs and spending. And compared to the fundamental human needs, the problems of the University are moderate. We'd like to see if we can accept that. Generally, there can be no budget increases."

Jay A. Martus, Student Government Association co-president, said after the meeting he thought it had been very productive.

"I think the governor got a feeling of the great concern for the education here at UMass. I think he's beginning to understand that he won't have an easy time getting students to help cut the budget," Martus said.

"I do think the governor is committed to quality higher education but I don't think he is committed to low-cost higher education," said Martus.

"We talked about check cashing, and tuition raises," said Mary Lynch of Coolidge Tower, who ate dinner with the governor. "He was very nice and asked us what we liked most about UMass. He got interrupted a lot though and he seemed a little preoccupied."

"It was my idea to write the letter of invitation," said Steinman, Dukakis' roommate. "It was very short and the whole floor signed it. Randy Cook did a lot of the leg work. My roommate John Budinscak will have to find another place to sleep."

The governor attended two night classes last night and intended to go jogging and talk to some residents of Coolidge before going to bed.

During the night security was greatly stepped up at Coolidge Tower, according to Jim Ferris, dorm security director.

The governor has been invited to a joint meeting of the Student Government Association, the Massachusetts State Employees Association, the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, and the Massachusetts Society of Professors, but has not responded.

Detractors loud on Gov's budget

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

Opposition to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' proposed University budget for fiscal 1978 continues to mount today as representatives from student groups and labor unions move to organize public support for an increased budget.

A press conference is scheduled for 11 a.m. today to publicize the potential adverse effects of the governors' $68.1 million budget proposal.

Representatives from the Massachusetts State Employees Union; The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, Local 1776; The Amherst chapter of the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP); The Professional Assoc. of the University at Amherst (PAUMA); The Graduate Student Employees Union (GSEU); The Student Government Association (SGA) and the Graduate Student Senate are expected at the conference.

Larry Roberts, the Amherst MSP President, said in a telephone interview last night the press conference represents only a part of the "continuing battle" for increased funding.

"We have to make the general public aware that its interests are seriously involved here. This is an investment in the future with far-reaching consequences," Roberts said.

In a related move for public mobilization, a loose coalition of student groups has called a University Town Meeting tonight at 7 p.m. to discuss the effects of level funding on the quality of education and services at UMass.

Meeting organizers said yesterday they will strive for mass education of the public so they will be better equipped to exert pressure on State legislators to increase the budget.

Speakers from SGA, Student Center for Educational Research (SCER), The Student Organizing Project (SOP), Graduate Student Senate and GSEU are scheduled for the meeting, along with Professor Samuel Bowles of the economics department.

Under the Governors' "level funding" proposal, the University would receive the same amount of money for fiscal 1978 as it did in 1977.

Opponents of level funding maintain this amounts to a budget cut because a high Massachusetts inflation rate is not considered.

The University has requested a 1978 budget of $76.4 million, with $4 million of that amount requested for mandatory cost of living adjustments for school personnel.

According to a budget fact sheet compiled by SCER, a severe reduction in services and programs is likely under level funding. In addition to the elimination of several departments, severe cutbacks are also anticipated in sociology, geology, math and statistics, English, microbiology, history, the school of education, the school of business administration, the school of engineering and the college of food and natural resources.

Four (or five) tickets seek SGA top spot

By STEVE TETREAULT
Collegian Staff

Four, possibly five, candidate tickets are in the running for president of the Student Government Association (SGA).

The candidates are:

—John Foley, a junior political science major, and Herbert Tyson, a freshman political science major, running as a team.

—David Cameron, a sophomore Communications Studies major.

—Marion "Pinky" Batiste, a junior Natural Resource Studies major, and Jon Hite, a junior political science major, running as a team.

—Charles Pooler, a sophomore political science major, and Joel Weissman, a sophomore political science major, running as a team.

The candidacy still in doubt is that of the Jimmy Carter-Bob Padula-Bill Auger team. The triumvirate submitted nomination petitions yesterday containing exactly 25 signatures. Two hundred and fifty valid signatures are needed to qualify for the presidential ballot. Karl Allen, chairperson of the SGA Governmental Affairs Committee was still checking the validity of the signatures last night. The committee oversees the election processes. The other candidates secured more than enough signatures.

In order to be valid, a signature must contain the proper name, address, and student number of the signed.

The candidates met yesterday afternoon with Allen where they were briefed in the financing and general rules of the campaign.

Two students, Jeff Allen and Arthur Fleitman, were not at the briefing, although they had turned in completed nomination forms. Neither could be contacted last night. However, Liz Cattell, who described herself as Allen's girlfriend, said the pair had decided at the last minute not to run.

Each presidential ticket will be given $200 by the Senate in the form of purchase orders to finance its campaign. The allotment was taken from a special senate account containing campaign funds.

Allen said no campaign can spend more than its $200 allotment, and spending of personal funds will not be allowed. Such infractions disqualify candidates from the race, he said.

SBA may slash enrollment

By JIM KASSNER
Collegian Staff

The School of Business Administration (SBA), in the face of skyrocketing undergraduate registration, is currently taking steps to gradually decrease its enrollment by more than 600 students within the next two years.

"This is what we hope to do," Assistant Dean for Undergraduate Affairs Nelson E. Pion said, "not because we particularly enjoy doing it, but because we essentially have no alternative."

Pion and SBA Deans George Odiorne and Jack Wolf met for a gripe session with SBA students yesterday in the Newman Center.

During the past three years, enrollment in SBA has climbed nearly 65 per cent, with faculty positions remaining approximately at the same level. As a result, many courses in SBA are oversubscribed, and the student-faculty ratio of about 30 to 1 is about twice as high as what is considered normal.

As a direct result of the high student-faculty ratio and because a "significant" portion of SBA classes are taught by teaching-assistants, SBA is also in danger of losing its national accreditation. According to Odiorne, SBA was examined last year by the Accreditation Council of the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business, and at that time, SBA was reacredited.

He said, however, if the school were to be examined this year, there would be a strong possibility of not being reacredited. But SBA will not be reexamined for another four years, and by that time it is hoped that the student-faculty ratio can be decreased to an acceptable level of about 15 to 1.

Odiorne said the school is currently in a "topping-off" period resulting from a dramatic enrollment increase over the past three to four years.

The biggest jumps came during 1973-74, and 1974-75 when enrollment jumped by 150 and 300 students respectively.

The school is now preparing to prune current enrollment of over 2300 students back to 1973 levels of about 1700 students. Incoming freshmen will be the hardest hit group, followed by transfer students.

"Basically, we have had no new resources," Odiorne said. "We haven't lost any positions. We've managed to hold our own, while student enrollment has gone up."

According to Pion, the number of planned incoming freshman business majors has been reduced from nearly 500 in 1975 to 275 in 1976 and will remain at this level until the projected decrease in enrollment is realized. In addition, the number of students transferring into SBA from other schools at UMass, or "inhouse" transfers will be held at 75. Pion said he recently reviewed over 200 applications for entry into SBA, but had to refuse all but 75, or nearly two students for every one which was accepted.

In connection with the general rise in business school enrollment, Odiorne noted that minority students comprise only about 1 to 1.5 per cent of total enrollment in SBA.

"When competition gets tough, traditionally it's the middle-class and higher income people that get in. The result is that disadvantaged people might not get an education," he said.

One reason for this, he said, is because minority students often attend schools in urban areas that are understaffed and underfunded. As a result, minority students often do not receive the quality education available to students from more affluent communities.

Pion said budget constraints are not the only reason for not hiring more faculty.

"It is very difficult to attract good faculty to the business school at the University of Massachusetts because of the high enrollment," Pion said.

Candidates to debate

A debate between the candidates for the SGA presidency will be held Tuesday night in Southwest.

The Southwest Assembly will sponsor the debate, said organizer Berylee Bubly. The event will be held in the Hampden Student Center at 9 p.m.

Bubly said she has contacted WMUA for possible live coverage of the debate. However, Karl Allen, chairman of the SGA Governmental Affairs Committee, said the Committee annually sponsors its own presidential debate over WMUA.

Bob Oates, WMUA News Director, said last night that no decision has yet been reached on which debate will be aired. "We will do one or the other, but not both," he said. Oates also said, that due to the station's prior commitments, a debate must take place next week if it is to be aired.

According to Bubly, the debate format hasn't been set. The debate might start out as a question and answer session due to the number of candidates.

Chris Durkin, Southwest Assembly President, will moderate the debate, Bubly said. Panelists include Diane Fessenden, representing the assembly, Gregg Wilson, a Collegian columnist, and student Jim Posgay.

Fair set for March

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

A student crafts fair, under the direction of Mark Richardson, the artisan resident of Greenough House, will be held March 3 and 4 at the Student Union Ballroom.

Sponsored by Central Area Council, the fair will feature display tables of silver, leatherwork, macrame, blown glass, pottery and other handmade crafts. Richardson and other university students will also be running craft demonstrations throughout the exhibition.

On the night of March 3, four French art movies product of Man Ray, will be shown for fifty cents at the SUB. These four films "L'etoile de Mer," "Retour a la Raison," "Emak Bakia," an "Les Mysteres du Chateau du De," were described by Richardson as off-beat alternatives to the popular movies usually shown on campus. The films will be shown at 6, 7:30, 9, 10:30 and 12.

Richardson said he hopes the fair's setting — the display tables spaced apart on the open floor of the ballroom, with live entertainment — will offer the UMass community a chance to walk around in a leisurely atmosphere, talk with the artisans, and view their handiwork. He added that the fair should be a contrasting format to the usually crowded concourse setup.

There will be a meeting for all persons interested in covering International Women's Week (March 6-12) on Thursday, February 24, at 7 p.m. in the Collegian newsroom. Any questions, call Melanie Johnson.

Olver airs views on level funding

By BRAD GOVERMAN
Collegian Staff

Presenting his views of the budget situation at last night's Undergraduate Student Senate meeting, State House Senator John W. Olver said he is "exceedingly distressed" with the possibility of a third straight year of level funding.

"It is difficult for me to see how the University will survive after the course of this year and the next year without cutting heavily into employe ranks," said Olver, who is chairperson of the Senate Ways and Means Committee.

Figures offered by Olver showed that after two years of level funding the rank of Massachusetts support of public higher education on a per capita basis had slipped from 25th in 1975 to 46th in 1977.

When asked if he would support student unionization as a mode of lobbying power to have the $68 million budget increased, Olver said that he supported student unionization but added that this method had already been defeated in the House of Representatives. As an alternative, he suggested students work through existing unions such as the newly formed Massachusetts Society of Professors.

Olver urged students to work with the Alumni Association, a force with Olver pointed out has not been totally identified.

Olver closed his presentation by revealing figures which indicated Massachusetts to be the second or third ranked state in respect to the gap between per capita income and cost of state government.

"In 1967 we were tenth in per capita income compared to being eighth in cost of government. Now, we are 14th in per capita income and fifth in cost of government. The gap between our ability to pay and what we are trying to provide is one of the largest gaps in the country."

In other business the senate voted to turn down an appeal for program support by Resources Judaica, an RSO group designed to promote self awareness of the Jewish culture to the Jewish people of the University. The money was needed by the group to cover costs of a publication to express the emotions of the group.

According to Speaker of the Senate, Brian J. DeLima, the appeal was turned down because, "If we approve their rational then we've got to approve other groups that we've already told we couldn't support."

It was pointed out that with a potential constituency of 3000 the group had a viable means of raising their own operational monies.

Students are reminded that there will be a town meeting in Mahar Auditorium tonight at 7:00 p.m. to discuss the budget predicament.

GSS discusses budget cuts

By D. PETERSON
Collegian Staff

Discussion of budget cuts dominated the Graduate Student Senate (GSS) meeting held last night and led to the passing of a motion opposing Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' level-funding budget proposal.

The following motion was passed by GSS: that the senate states that it is unalterably opposed to level funding for the University of Massachusetts at Amherst in fiscal year '78 and supports efforts to organize opposition to such actions at the legislature.

Senator George Somers stated that the proposal should not be an idle threat but a viable one. "There must be the organization and the willingness to put out if this is to work," he said.

Gayle Lauradunn appeared before the GSS requesting funding of $500.00 for Chomo Uri, a UMass based multi arts magazine for women. Lauradunn stated that the magazine was a source of support for graduate student women of the university.

The Finance Committee, recommended the magazine be given $150.00 due to the small number of area graduate students that actually benefit from the publication.

The body, after much debate voted $300.00 to the magazine.

A representative from International Women's Week, Irene Richards, appeared before the senate asking for funding for their series of workshops to be held March 6-12 at the university.

The Women's Week group had approached other area colleges for funding for their project. Smith and Mount Holyoke failed to invest in the program. Hampshire College did supply funds for the program, which is open to all interested women. The GSS voted to appropriate $800 to support the International Women's week.

Another group voted funds was

No butts about it

If you've been thinking about kicking the cigarette habit but somehow you just haven't been able to get started, the Stop Smoking Program sponsored by the UMass Health Services may be worth a try.

The program offers group support for smokers, breaking the habit, medical aspects of smoking, withdrawal, and quitting tips.

According to Robert J. Olson, the program's coordinator, it is being offered for smokers who have a desire to quit.

"It was designed as a special kind of program, not to tell people what smoking does to the body," he said.

The idea of the program is not to employ scare tactics, but to make use of the desire to stop smoking.

"It offers insights in smoking behavior modification," he said. "The approach is not strict and the techniques are meaningful to the participants."

The program explores what stimuli cause participants to smoke and will suggest alternative methods to deal with these urges, depending on what suits each participant.

There is a fee of $40 to cover costs of a facilitator, staff directors and supplies. A total of eight sessions are offered and those participating in all eight will receive a $15 refund.

This program has been used in Arizona, Olson said, and "the use of refunds is a motivation."

It was also offered last semester and the results were effective, he said.

On March 2 at 7 p.m. there will be a free introductory session held to give people an idea of the program before they make a commitment. The remaining sessions will be scheduled throughout March.

A cutback

By MARY ANN MAYNARD
Collegian Staff

In the midst of the "budget crisis" at least one UMass organization is doing their part to trim expenses.

The University Bulletin, an eight page newspaper for university employees is merging with Contact, a newspaper sent to Massachusetts legislators and parents of UMass undergraduates.

Since 1973 the Bulletin, published every three weeks, has dealt with issues affecting the 5,000 employees on campus. Also, it has contained features on the variety of jobs on campus, and has had a listing of events in the area.

About 25,000 issues of Contact, have gone out on a quarterly basis to keep parents and legislators aware of what's going on at UMass.

The new Contact will be coming out nine times a year and will be sent to both readerships. According to Editor Terry Allen, it will focus on the good things about the UMass campus, and she hopes that the tax payers reading it will see that the university is "worth the effort".

The good news can only help, says Allen.

Women's Week happenings

By MELANIE JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

International Women's Week, March 6-12, will bring to the Five College Area a series of workshops, speakers, dance, artists, music, theatre, and a march in Northampton Tuesday afternoon, March 8 (International Women's Day).

International Women's Day began in 1857 when women garment workers marched on the Lower East Side of New York City protesting poor working conditions. In March 1860, the women formed their own union.

Sixty-one years later, thousands of women marched again on the Lower East side in commemoration of the first march and proclaimed March 8 as International Women's Day. In 1910 an International Socialist Conference officially proclaimed March 8 as International Women's Day in honor of the New York women workers.

Betty Carter, who Carmen McRae calls "the only real jazz singer" will open International Women's Week on Sunday March 6, at 8:00 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Admission is $2.00.

Betty Carter's act is built upon improvisation. Her distinctive voice, scat-singing, and command of dynamics and rhythm make each performance uniquely her own. Her material mixes old and new standards: "bebop" and originals.

Carter began her career with a three year stint with Lionel Hampton's band. She toured with Miles Davis and Sonny Rollins, and made a record with Ray Charles. Because she refused to "popularize" her style, she escaped much of the national spotlight. In 1970, she formed her own record company, Bet-Car, to record as she wished.

Other musical events during International Women's Week include a Women's Music Festival featuring Ellen McEwaine on Friday, March 11 at 8:00 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom; and a performance by the Boston Chinese Dance Company, Monday, March 7, at 8:00 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center.

The Hatch will feature the women's bands Liberty Standing on Thursday, March 10, and Jade and Sasparilla on Friday and Saturday, March 11 and 12. Bev Rhollair will appear at the Top of the Campus Friday and Saturday, March 11 and 12. Ahora will present Lucecita Benitez, singer and advocate for Puerto Rican people, in the Campus Center auditorium on Saturday, March 12 at 8:00 p.m.

Bella Abzug, former U.S. Representative from New York, will speak in the Student Union Ballroom at 8 p.m. on Monday, March 7. Other speakers scheduled for the week include Barbara Sizemore, former Superintendent of Schools in Washington, D.C., Madonna Gilbert, a Native American activist; Helen Rodriguez, expert on health care and sterilization abuse; Grace Lee Boggs, author and labor and civil rights activists, and Arlene Eisen, author of "Women in Vietnam."

The Little Flags Theatre Collective of Boston, Mass., will present two plays concerning the struggles of 20th century Third World women. The group, directed by Maxine Klein, is a self-sufficient, politically-oriented, and multi-racial group. On Wednesday, March 9 they will perform Fanshen, and on Thursday, March 10, Tania. Both performances are at the Student Union Ballroom, and admission is free.

Other events include workshops on health, work, politics, and international issues; children's workshops featuring jugglers, dance and theatre; films for, by, and about women; a Women's Resource Fair, and a Women's Disco.

A Socialist Feminist Conference will be held at Hampshire College from Friday, March 4 to Sunday, March 6. Workshops on Saturday will cover psychoanalysis, racism and the women's movement, and lesbianism. Sunday workshops will feature local women's groups, including the Valley Women's Union, NELCWIT, July 4th Women's Caucus, and others.

Hampshire College will sponsor talks by Robin Morgan, editor of Sisterhood is Powerful, on Monday, March 7, and Marge Piercy, author of Small Changes, on Thursday, March 10.

Brochures with detailed schedules for the week's events are available in the Student Affairs Office. Saturday, February 26, at 1 p.m. there will be an orientation meeting for all persons interested in helping during International Women's Week.

Betty Carter, improvisational jazz singer, will usher in International Women's Week with a March 6 performance at the Fine Art Center Concert Hall.

Internships – academia to real world

By SAMUEL P. HASSON
Collegian Staff

Possibly the most challenging transformation in your life will be the post-collegiate job search.

Emergence from academia into the working world may be as rewarding for some as it is disastrous for others, but there is something you can do about it before graduation, and now is the time to look into it.

The Office of Internships in Goodell Hall has over 700 job descriptions for summer and fall internship offerings. Former intern undergraduates, teacher assistants, work-study students, and three full-time staff persons are anxious to assist students in exploring career opportunities and how the student may grow with said career.

One staff member and former intern with the Hampden County Extension Service is Kathy Aldrich. As a Plant and Soil Sciences major, Aldrich found that working with the Extension Service in West Springfield last fall provided her with a "sort of career orientation".

While attaining practical work experience for her resume, Aldrich said she discovered what areas her education was deficient in. "It was a great job too because no day was the same," she added.

The Extension Service is a government funded organization that provided free agricultural counseling in areas such as crop selection, oil testing and fertilizing, greenhouse and nursery maintenance, and home gardening.

Students enrolled in the Internship program may earn a maximum of fifteen credits a semester. A typical internship culminates with the completion of an academic contract drawn up by the student and a faculty advisor.

At the same time, each intern has their own counselor in the Internship Office, plus the availability of the entire staff.

The Office maintains files on a wide ranging series of potential intern placements, and assists students in selecting internship experiences that are compatible to their educational and career objectives.

Most UMass interns work in eastern and western Massachusetts, however, a significant number of students work in New York City and Washington D.C. Other interns have worked in such places as Guatemala, Tasmania, France and England.

While Aldrich did have an internship fall into place for her with the help of her faculty advisor, most internship placements are done by the Internship Office.

Students interested in a practical work experience offered by the Internship Program should attend one of two recruitment meetings to be held next Wednesday, March 2, or Thursday March 3. The meetings will be at 8:00 p.m. in room 168 of the Campus Center.

The Internship Program has proven itself to be a valuable service mechanism within the University that has enriched the education and career of many enthusiastic students. It is certainly worth looking into.

Grievance system called ineffective

Editor's Note: Each day this week Alan Levin will be examining a facet of the relationship between the student governance units here and the administration and the Board of Trustees. Today's article reviews student leaders opinions on the Wellman Document.

By ALAN LEVIN
Collegian Staff

A system for assuring students a role in UMass Board of Trustee decisions now exists through the Wellman Document, but its detractors say the process is ineffective and unworkable.

Led by Undergraduate Student Senate Speaker Brian DeLima, these opponents of University Governance describe the procedure as, "written to perpetuate faculty-administrative power."

They are attempting, through consultation with administrators here at UMass, to amend the old governance system or to begin a new system. They are hoping to gain a position of authority for students in the University.

DeLima has begun an exchange of memos with Chancellor Randolph Bromery and Vice Chancellor Robert Woodbury to air what he feels are governance's weak spots. He points to several areas where he feels governance gives students the short end of the deal.

All too often, DeLima claims, the time-consuming governance process is ignored in favor of direct consultation with the appropriate administrator. As a result, he has asked that all policy recommendations be sent through the appropriate governance channels.

In reaction to DeLima's request, Chancellor Bromery said, "This recommendation, if implemented, would be costly to the well-being of the campus in terms of the time involved to accomplish policy changes."

Faculty are responsible for making governance policy recommendations in the area of academics and students are "assured the opportunity of participating" with them. However, some critical student observers say "the shared concern is not reflected in the mechanical aspects of the governance document."

Finally, DeLima and others are upset that that University administrators are not bound to this advisory process. As an unsigned Student Senate memo said, "It (governance) assumes that the Board of Trustees can do what ever it wants anyway."

Students dealing with the governance protests have been very irritated by what they think is a lack of concern among administrators about the problem. DeLima and others point to the long delay between the time he sends memos out and the time the response is received.

WASHINGTON: In his news conference yesterday, Carter said he has reveiwed "the more controversial revelations" made recently in news reports about CIA payments to foreign leaders and has found them acceptable.

Carter shows concern for human rights in all nations

WASHINGTON (UPI) – President Carter said yesterday there are "deprivations of human rights even more brutal" than in the Soviet Union – and he singled out Uganda, where he said recent events "have disgusted the entire civilized world."

"I have never had an inclination to single out the Soviet Union as the only place where human rights are being abridged," Carter told a news conference. He said he also is concerned about "political prisoners" in South Korea, Cuba and "several countries in South America."

"We are ourselves culpable in some ways for not giving people adequate rights to move around our country – for restricting unnecessarily, in my opinion, visitation by those who disagree with us politically," he said. "I think we should make it clear that human rights is something on which we bear a major responsibility for leadership."

As for Uganda, Carter said he is concerned about the "horrible murders that have apparently taken place there... the persecution of those who have aroused the ire of Mr. Amin."

"The actions there have disgusted the entire civilized world," he said.

"Obviously there are deprivations of human rights even more brutal than the ones on which we commented on up to now," he said in reference to his recent statements of support for dissidents in the Soviet Union.

"I think we have a responsibility and a legal right to express our disapproval of violation of human rights," Carter said. He noted that the United States signed the Helsinki agreement with the Russians, designed in part to protect human rights behind the Iron Curtain.

Business asked to concur with anti-inflation measure

WASHINGTON (UPI) – President Carter yesterday intensified informal pressure on labor and business to reach agreement with the administration on a system of voluntary notification of proposed wage and price increases.

Carter told a news conference he had not made any specific proposals to either labor leaders or industry representatives.

But he made it clear the White House would view such a system as an effective anti-inflation measure.

"I have not made any proposals to Mr. AFL-CIO President George Meany or any other labor leader of any representative of industry," Carter said. "But I will retain the option in the future of assessing what we need to do to control inflation."

Carter first brought up the subject last month in a message to Congress outlining his proposed $31.2 billion economic stimulus package.

There is "terrible confusion" in the nation's energy situation, but he expects Congress to give quick approval of a sweeping administration energy plan he will submit in April and a proposal he will make next week for a new federal department of energy. Sacrifices will be required of all Americans.

–Some natural gas is being withheld from consumers, but he feels that is "understandable" and he might do the same if he ran an oil company.

–He has reviewed reports the CIA secretly paid millions of dollars to King Hussein of Jordan and other foreign leaders but "I have not found anything illegal or improper" in the agency's work.

–If he discovers such improper activities in an upcoming analysis of all CIA operations "I will not only take immediate action to correct it but also let the American people know about it."

–Recent events in Uganda "have disgusted the entire civilized world" and "horrible murders are apparently taking place there."

–The leaders of all parties to the Middle East conflict will visit Washington by the end of May, starting with Israel's Premier Yitzhak Rabin March 12 and followed by leaders from Egypt, Jordan, Syria and Saudi Arabia.

–He might stop production of the B1 bomber if the Soviets demonstrate "a commitment to disarmament."

–Despite rumors to the contrary, he is getting along well with congressional leaders and Congress is "moving with great expedition" to give him authority to reorganize the federal government.

–Restoration of diplomatic relations with Cuba are still a long way off, and depend on "tangible evidence of the re-establishment of basic human rights," and an indication Cuba would not get involved in any more "overseas adventures" such as Angola.

–Vice President Walter Mondale is preparing a package of voting law changes providing for public financing of congressional elections, improvement of voter registration systems, and automatic casting of electoral votes for the presidential candidate who carries a majority of a state's popular votes.

–He still hopes to pare between $5 billion and $7 billion from the defense budget in future years. A preliminary analysis of the budget indicated the foal was feasible.

–The United States has a legal right under the 1975 Helsinki agreement to raise matters of human rights publicly, not only in regard to the Soviet Union but Cuba, South Korea and a number of Latin American countries.

CIA activities approved

WASHINGTON – (UPI) – President Carter said yesterday he has found nothing "illegal and improper" in his review of CIA intelligence-gathering that involved cash payments to Jordan's King Hussein and other foreign leaders.

Stressing he takes "a direct personal responsibility" for all U.S. intelligence agencies, Carter said if he discovers illegal or improper activity, "I will not only take immediate action to correct it but also will let the American people know about it."

Carter told a news conference he has reviewed "the more controversial revelations" in news reports about CIA foreign payments and found "some quite erroneous and some with some degree of accuracy."

"I have found nothing illegal or improper," he said. Asked whether he should not set the record straight on erroneous reports, Carter declined. He said, "in some ways we are correcting the record" but if he sought to dispel each report that was in error, government activities that should be kept secret would be disclosed.

"I've adopted a policy which I'm not going to leave of not commenting directly on any specific CIA activity," he said, but noted the foreign payments also were reviewed by the independent Intelligence Oversight Board and by President Gerald Ford.

Carter, who said he has begun "a complete analysis" of CIA activities that will be completed next week, also dwelled on how to gather adequate intelligence to guarantee national security.

TEL AVIV: A victorious Prime Ministor Yitzhak Rabin accepts a handshake from Defense Minister Shimon Peres who lost to Rabin by a small margin in the Labor party nomination race for leadership of the party. Rabin called on the party's leaders to put their divisions aside and unite behind him in a struggle to win the national elections in May. (UPI)

Prime Minister Rabin to lead labor party

TEL AVIV, Israel (UPI) — Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin narrowly defeated Defense Minister Shimon Peres yesterday and retained the ruling Labor Party's approval to lead it into the May national elections.

But Rabin's slender 41-vote margin out of more than 2,800 votes cast left the scandal-marred Labor Party vulnerable at one of the most crucial times since the founding of the Jewish state in 1948.

A smiling Rabin and a glum-faced Peres sat on the dais at the party's 1977 convention early Thursday as the chairman read out the results: 1,445 votes for Rabin and 1,404 for Peres.

Rabin then stood up before the cheering, chanting crowd and called on the party's leaders to put their divisions aside and unite behind him in a struggle to win the national elections in May.

"I believe that from this moment on we are all united — in the ways and the decisions of this convention," he said. "I call on everyone to unite and to continue to carry us to victory in the elections."

Peres, staring solemnly at the crowd, shook hands with Rabin and then defended his unprecedented challenge to Rabin, his personal, political and philosophical enemy for years.

"We can go together to the election without being sorry about what we said," he said. "I am not sorry for a moment about the existence of the struggle. I have no complaints about how the elections were carried out. We emerged more united and more proud."

The delegates cast their ballots in two dozen cardboard boxes at the Mann Auditorium convention site Wednesday night.

Peres, 54, has generally been considered a hardliner and Rabin, 55, a moderate toward negotiating with the Arabs. The Arab nations are calling for a resumption of the stalled Geneva peace talks.

Rabin, whose three-year-old government has been rocked by scandal, strikes and soaring inflation, faces unexpectedly strong challenges by the right-wing Likud Party and a new reformist coalition led by archeologist Yigael Yadin.

Former party power Asher Yadlin, who said he pumped misappropriated cash into Labor's campaign coffers, was sentenced this week to five years in prison for bribery, fraud and tax evasion. A month earlier, Housing Minister Avraham Ofer shot himself to death after his name was linked to the Watergate-style scandal by the Israeli press.

Rabin's success could anger reformers who demand an end to Labor's scandal-marred old politics.

US restriction of Russian trade Bukovsy urges

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Exiled Soviet dissident Vladimir Bukovsky urged the United States yesterday to continue restrictions on trade and credits policy towards the Soviet Union where "a Cold War climate" still reigns.

"What peaceful cooperation or detente can we talk about if the Soviet Union continues to force into the minds of its own citizens hostility towards European countries and the United States of America, reserving to itself the right to preserve a cold war climate inside the country?" Bukovsky asked the U.S. Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

Bukovsky, who expects to meet with President Carter during his current visit called on the West to show "a firm, relentless and constant" stand on the issue of human rights.

He urged the United States and other western countries adopt measures to persuade the Soviet leadership to respect civil, national and religious rights.

CIA recommends director

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate Intelligence Committee yesterday unanimously recommended that Adm. Stansfield Turner be confirmed as CIA director.

Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, committee chairman, said he would recommend full Senate confirmation of Turner today.

Turner in two days of testimony, had told the committee he would resign as CIA director rather than carry out a presidential order for activities he felt were illegal.

The 53-year-old Turner, former classmate of President Carter at the Naval Academy, will be permitted to keep his naval commission. Inouye said Turner had agreed not to seek either the position of chief of naval operations or chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff if the posts became available during his tenure.

However, Inouye said, this would not preclude the president assigning Turner to such posts.

Gulf Oil violates fed law

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gulf Oil Corp. violated federal law by failing to deliver contracted amounts of natural gas to a pipeline system serving 16 states, a House subcommittee charged yesterday.

Gulf denied that it is deliberately withholding gas, and said it is doing everything "humanly possible" to get it to customers.

The report by a panel of the House Commerce Committee also accused the Federal Power Commission of a "six-year-regulatory failure" in its dealings with Gulf.

The subcommittee released the report while an official of Texaco, Inc., was testifying on separate allegations that his firm is not developing reserves of 500 billion cubic feet of gas in the Gulf of Mexico because of a desire to maximize profits.

But Richard B. Palmer, senior vice-president for Texaco's Western Hemisphere operations, said the company has no intention of accelerating production from the two fields despite the accusations of gas hoarding. The charges were leveled by subcommittee investigators.

Palmer denied that Texaco is intentionally withholding gas. He said such allegations are hampering the nation's efforts to get a sound energy policy and defended his firm's right to make money.

"A company in this economy that doesn't make money is a drag on this economy, I think you will agree," he testified.

In its report on Gulf, the subcommittee asserted that Gulf has violated the Natural Gas Act by failing to deliver 625 million cubic feet of gas per day last year to the Texas Eastern Transmission Corp., a major pipeline system.

It recommended that the FPC and Texas Eastern "initiate legal proceedings against Gulf to require that it comply with its delivery obligations." Any such legal action would be in addition to an October 1976 FPC directive ordering Gulf to supply the gas in question.

The report said that consumers "cannot rely on the Federal Power Commission to protect them because the commission did not move in a timely manner to enforce Gulf's delivery obligations."

Texas Eastern supplies gas to Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, Illinois, Ohio, West Virginia, Mississippi, Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, Maryland and Delaware.

New Jersey was the hardest hit of states suffering gas curtailments last year as a result of Gulf's failure to deliver the contracted gas to Texas Eastern, the report said.

In a letter to subcommittee member Andrew Maguire, D-N.J., Gulf Chairman Jerry McAfee said: "Gulf is doing everything humanly possible to meet the terms of the contract. Gulf has been producing and delivering the maximum amount of natural gas which can be produced from fields that we operate."

Maguire had written a letter to White House energy chief James Schlesinger to protest the Gulf curtailments.

Records reveal bank robbery

YONKERS, N.Y. (UPI) — Wells Fargo manifests showed yesterday that a pair of bank bandits made off with at least $1.3 million in receipts from Yonkers Raceway in a holdup at the Hudson Valley National Bank.

The FBI said the bandits hid in the basement of a five-story office building housing the bank and held up two employes who reported to work ahead of normal office hours Tuesday to count the Yonkers money and clean up a meeting room.

The bandits tripped an alarm system on their way out of the bank, but police did not arrive in time to catch them.

Embarrassed bank officials said yesterday that none of Hudson Valley's videotape cameras was in operation when the robbery occurred at 7 a.m. Tuesday. The alarms aren't turned on until the bank opens for business at 9 a.m.

Bank officials refused to say exactly how much money was taken in the holdup, but it was learned Wells Fargo manifests showed a deposit of $1.3 million in Yonkers Raceway receipts.

The Yonkers money was turned over to a bank vice president at midnight Monday and included the track's take from Friday and Saturday night racing programs and a Monday night holiday session.

Officials said the haul could have been bigger, but snowy weather forced cancelation of a Sunday afternoon racing program.

The track's experiment wih Sunday racing reached a high the previous week with a $1.8 million parimutuel handle.

The bandits handcuffed two bank employes — John Franchi, 23, and Mary Fitzgerald, 22, to a bannister, placed canvas bank bags over their heads and scooped the Yonkers receipts into a canvas bag.

Police said there was a possibility an accomplice was waiting outside with a car, enabling the bandits to make a quick getaway.

Authorities said it was not immediately known whether the bandits entered the bank basement through a door that was left open Monday night while a meeting was underway, or whether they entered through a 14 by 18 inch hole in the wall of a basement storeroom that a maintenance man found behind a vending machine three weeks ago.

Massacre launched in Uganda

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) — President Idi Amin claimed on yesterday that an alleged plot he crushed last week was to have climaxed with an airborne landing of paratroopers from the United States, Britain or Israel.

In Dar es Salaam, the capital of neighboring Tanzania, a group of 22 refugees arriving from Uganda claimed Amin had launched a nationwide massacre of two predominantly Christian tribes, the Langi and Acholi, he believes were central to the coup attempt.

Amin told correspondents that 16 persons arrested for arms smuggling in connection with the plot had disclosed under interrogation that the uprising was to have started with the assassination of prominent Ugandan leaders.

In the ensuing turmoil, paratroopers were to fly in from an aircraft carrier of undisclosed nationality and capture several towns in Uganda, he said.

Amin did not elaborate on this scenario and it was unclear whether he believed any of the three nations were directly involved in the coup attempt. The U.S. carrier Enterprise, part of the U.S. Navy's Indian Ocean fleet, left the Kenyan port of Mombasa on Wednesday after a five-day visit.

A U.S. State Department spokesman termed "absurd" allegations that the United States was supporting a plot aimed at Amin. No comment was immediately available from British or Israeli spokesmen.

The Ugandan strong man also told foreign correspondents in this capital city he had heard the charges that he personally shot Anglican Archbishop Janani Luwum, "but it's completely untrue."

The cleric and two government ministers died last week after they were accused of complicity in the plot allegedly masterminded from exile by former President Milton Obote. The government says they died in a car crash after their arrest when they tried to overpower the driver.

After talking to Amin the correspondents were taken to see the car's driver, who said he was jumped by Water Resources Minister Lt. Col. Erinayo, seated next to him in the front seat. He said Luwum was seated in the back with Internal Affairs Minister Charles Oboth-Ofumbi and did not join in the attack.

A number of foreign church and political leaders have charged Bishop Luwum was murdered, and they have demanded an impartial investigation.

In Nairobi, Kenya, the All-Africa Conference of Churches released a letter to Amin which it said Bishop Luwum prepared shortly before his death. In it, the archbishop denied charges that he had secreted arms sent him by Obote from Tanzania.

Amin told correspondents he was reviewing plans for this week's ministerial meeting of the African, Caribbean and Pacific Group — ACP — when he learned that the archbiship and the two cabinet ministers had died.

Lifting of race laws proposed in Rhodesia

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (AP) — Prime Minister Ian Smith proposed a major lifting of Rhodesian race laws yesterday as the government said large numbers of whites are continuing to flee the country's escalating guerrilla war.

The announcement came as the government listed 15 deaths in violence since Tuesday, and two black Roman Catholic priests were jailed for not informing on guerrillas.

Smith said Rhodesia would let blacks become military officers starting in June, let them buy factories and businesses in commerical areas, buy farms in about a third of previously white territory, and would try to bring more blacks into the government at all levels.

"If we are to succeed in this exercise it is necessary that black Rhodesians in turn accept the need to ensure a permanent future for our white community," Smith told the white-dominated parliament.

The government said yesterday that 1,414 of Rhodesia's roughly 270,000 whites emigrated last month and only 443 came into the country. A year earlier, Rhodesia lost 1,018 citizens, but it gained 1,040.

The nation lost 7,000 whites last year, as war with black nationalist guerrillas escalated through a fourth year. it was the first time in 10 years that more whites left Rhodesia than came in. Rhodesia's black population numbers about six million.

Officials said yesterday that three security officers, two black and one white, and 11 black guerrillas had been killed in clashes since Tuesday, and a black civilian was killed for breaking the dusk-to-dawn curfew which blankets two-thirds of Rhodesia.

Smith said that since the fighting began in the summer of 1972, 632 black civilians had been killed and 294 wounded for "breaking the curfew or running with and assisting terrorists."

The government contends black guerrillas themselves have killed 863 civilians, of whom only 72 were white.

Carnival an alternative to Mardi Gras

What is Carnival to you? Glittering costumes, formal balls or festive frollicking? In Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, Carnival means happy people wandering around the city with their children, the dancing, drumming and singing of organized groups, and the parade of the samba schools. Carnival is a real-life fantasy that takes place for the four days and nights preceding Ash Wednesday.

How can you celebrate Carnival? Well, you could fly down to either Rio de Janeiro or New Orleans, or you could celebrate Carnival with the Portuguese Club on Friday at the Quonset Ballroom on Route 9. The festivities will begin at 9 p.m. with a live band. A prize will be given to the best costume, but you may come as you are. You do not need to speak Portugese or know how to samba to be a welcome member.

What is Carnival? Carnival, the feast and festival before Lent, once was only a religious occasion. Now it is the party of the year, especially in Rio, the Carnival Capital of the world.

The most entertaining event of Carnaval is the procession of Rio's main samba schools (also called clubs). Each club represents a district and chooses a different theme each year to illustrate with its samba. Each school has its own color scheme for costumes (which also change from year to year) and its own percussion section. Some clubs have 2,000 to 3,000 members and take a half-hour to pass in front of the judges' stand. The samba school which wins this competition is honored to have its song chosen to be the "Samba of the Year."

Maine delegation attempts to stymie tribe's land request

WASHINGTON (AP) — Maine's delegation in Congress is offering legislation to eliminate the claims by two Indian tribes to 60 per cent of their state's land, but allow them to seek monetary damages.

The goal would be to prevent the state from being "financially asphixiated" while the Indians' claim is pursued in court, said Rep. William S. Cohen, R-Maine.

"We're trying to remove the cloud from state land titles so the state can function," Cohen said in an interview. He said he plans to introduce the bill Thursday for the entire Maine delegation.

The Penobscot and Passamaquoddy tribes claim 12.5 million acres of land in Maine, which they say was taken unjustly in 1790 by the state.

The Justice Department has until March 1 to express its views on the dispute, although Maine's congressional delegation has asked for a delay on any action until June.

The Interior Department had filed suit in the case as trustee for the Indians, and in late January recommended that the suit be amended to ask for land rather than just money. The original suit asked for $300 million in damages.

Cohen said the question about who might own the land has thrown his state into a perilous state of confusion that is damaging the economy and threatens to prompt a taxpayer revolt as well.

He said city and municipal bonds cannot be issued as long as there is a cloud on the title to state land — or the 60 per cent of it in question — and both private real estate and commercial developments are threatened.

"A 1,600-person job development in my own area of Bangor is endangered," he said. "There may be a taxpayer revolt with persons not paying their property taxes because if they don't have title to the land, why pay taxes."

Don't tie us down!

NEW YORK (UPI) — The Second U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals suggested Wednesday a public school teacher is constitutionally entitled to teach without wearing a tie and may even be more effective in a turtle neck sweater or open necked sports shirt.

"Teenagers, who are often rebellious against authority," the court said, "may find a tieless teacher to be less remote, a more contemporary individual with whom they can more easily interact and to whom they are better prepared to listen with care and attention."

The three-judge court, in a split decision, made the suggestion in the case of Richard Brimley, a teacher of English and film-making in the East Hartford, Conn. high school. Brimley challenged the constitutionality of a teachers' dress code requiring a tie on the ground he wants to present himself to his students as a person "not tied to establishment conformity."

Angry House Democrats denounce Carter's decision

WASHINGTON (AP) — Angry House Democrats summoned up comparisons with the Nixon administration yesterday in denouncing President Carter's decision to stop new spending on 19 big water-control projects.

For the new president, the underlying theme to the criticism was clear: Don't mess around with public-works projects that Congress has already decided are important.

"I seem to remember some speeches during the presidential campaign about openness and consulting with Congress," said Rep. Morris K. Udall, D-Ariz., who chaired the House Interior Committee meeting. Why, he asked, was there no consultation before such a major decision?

Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus told the congressmen they should not have been surprised. After all, he said, Carter made another campaign promise — to re-evaluate some of the expensive water-control projects to see if money could be saved.

"I ask you to bear in mind that there have been no permanent decisions about these projects," Andrus said, adding that the administration will conduct a complete review before actually ending any projects.

"It seems to me you have the whole thing backwards," said Udall, saying the effect of the administration decision is to find the projects lacking before reviewing them. Udall is a backer of the most expensive of the most expensive of the dams, the $1.4 billion Central Arizona Project.

Carter will announce a final decision on the projects on April 15. Supporters of the 19 programs, the largest eight of which will cost about $5.1 billion, will have until then to justify their views.

Udall and others on the committee recalled the numerous battles when the Nixon administration refused to spend money that Congress had appropriated. "We're still kind of nervous in Congress," added Udall, who received assurances from Andrus that the decision-making process on the dams will be public and in the open.

However, Andrus conceded he did not know what would happen if the administration finally concludes that one or more of the projects should be killed and Congress refuses to go along.

Supreme Court upholds right to set pollutant standards

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Supreme Court yesterday boosted the environmentalist cause by upholding the government's right to fix specific, nationwide tolerance standards for pollutants discharged into rivers.

The case concerned the heart of a 1972 law designed to cut down industrial pollution in stages and eliminate it entirely by 1985.

Eight leading chemical manufacturers argued that the Environmental Protection Agency's authority was confined to issuing general guidelines and that precise amounts of a pollutant would figure only when an individual company applied for its required permit.

But Justice John Paul Stevens, speaking for an eight-man court, said this approach would require EPA "to give individual consideration to the circumstances of each of the more than 42,000 discharges who have applied for permits."

Stevens cited the legislative history of 1972 amendments to the Water Pollution Act, the views of EPA and "scholarly opinions written by some of our finest judges." He said the language of the law clearly authorizes the agency to set precise limits for pollutants for various clases of plants.

Stevens applied his reasoning to both 1977 and 1983 limitations. He noted that EPA has provided for some variances in the 1977 standards.

The opinion rejected the companies' claim that variances are permitted for future plants.

Justice Lewis Powell did not participate.

EPA chief John R. Quarles issued a statement saying the court ruling is "a very important victory" which "provides critical support for the strategy used in requiring the cleanup of literally thousands of water pollution sources in this country."

The companies were supported by the American Iron and Steel Institute and the American Paper Institute, which said its 200 ember manufacturers provide 90 per cent of all the pulp, paper and paperboard manufactured in the country.

The paper industry employes more than 281,000 people and pays $3 billion in wages and benefits each year, API said. Filing suit were E.I du Pont de Nemours Co., Olin Corp., FMC Corp., American Cyanamid Co., Monsanto Co., Dow Chemical Co., Allied Chemical Corp. and Hercules, Inc.

News in Brief

Florida orange crop soars

[UPI] — The Agriculture Department estimates Florida's orange crop will set a new record this year despite damage caused by the January freeze. But juice prices are higher now than they were at the height of the freeze.

The answer to this apparent contradiction, according to the citrus growers, lies inside the orange: the cold damage has left the current crop of oranges less juicy than usual.

The Agriculture Department estimated Feb. 1 that national production of oranges would be three per cent up on last year's record.

Production was to have been even higher: Florida's citrus growers usually expand their acreage by 10 per cent or more each year.

The growers have backed away from their early damage estimates — some said up to 40 per cent of the crop would be lost — but they say the Agriculture Department's record crop estimate is misleading.

Woman searched for in raid

N.H. [UPI] — Authorities are looking for a woman known to have lived at a rented house where four tons of marijuana and a man's body were found in a Monday drug raid, Deputy Attorney General Thomas Rath said Wednesday.

He said the woman's name was known but declined comment on whether she was believed to be in New Hampshire.

"We're looking for anyone who has any evidence concerning the case," Rath said.

Rath said Lowell, Mass., was the last known address of the dead man found with the marijuana. He has been positively identified as Jerome O'Sullivan, 29.

Rath said no arrests have been made because suicide still has not been ruled out.

Hunt flies to Boston

BOSTON [AP] — E. Howard Hunt, the convicted Watergate burglar and author of spy thrillers, flew to Boston Wednesday after slipping quietly away from a federal prison in Florida under cover of early morning darkness.

Hunt, 58, left the 475-man federal minimum security prison at Eglin Air Force Base after serving 32 months for his part in the June 1972 break-in at Democratic national headquarters.

Sources at Logan International Airport said Hunt, the recruiter and lookout in the break-in, arrived in Boston at about 11 a.m., a few hours after his release from the prison on Florida's Gulf Coast.

Hunt planned to talk to officials of the American Program Bureau in suburban Brookline. The agency, which is arranging a speaking tour, scheduled a news conference for Hunt for 10:30 a.m. Thursday.

Crime leaders investigated

BOSTON [UPI] — Officials are investigating reports organized crime leaders from New York are considering investing in sex-oriented book stores and movie heaters in Boston, The Boston Globe reported yesterday.

The Globe said it was told by sources overtures have been made by members of the Sam DeCavalcante of the Mafia "family" about the possibility and wisdom of investing in such businesses, particularly in the Combat Zone.

Boston police and the Suffolk County district attorney's office were investigating, said the Globe, but officials would not comment on the matter.

Easter egg dye recalled

WASHINGTON [UPI] — On the first day of Lent, the Food and Drug Administration Wednesday announced an Easter recall — 179,502 packets of Easter egg dye containing the banned food coloring Red No. 2.

The recall is being conducted by the distributor, the White Rabbit Dye Co. of St. Louis, in the states of Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Louisiana, Oklahoma, Indiana and Kansas. The dye was manufactured by H. Kohnstamm Co. Inc., New York.

TOWN MEETING TONIGHT

THE RESALE VALUE OF A UMASS EDUCATION IS FALLING

LESS MONEY FOR THE AMHERST CAMPUS

- Dukakis' proposed $68.1 million budget is actually 3.3% less than was spent for the Amherst campus in 1975--despite three years of inflation. Enrollments have increased 2.9% while inflation has taken a 21% toll on the State's economy.
- The University has requested $76.4 million. This would provide only 11 new faculty positions and would not even fill all existing vacant positions. Dukakis wants to deny this already austere request.
- Mandatory cost of living adjustments account for $4 million, almost half the proposed increase.
- The cost of utilities is skyrocketing. An additional half million dollars is needed to provide the $6.7 million to light and heat the campus.

THE SITUATION IS ALREADY BLEAK

- There are presently 560 vacant staff positions (15% of the campus workforce) including 230 empty faculty slots.
- 5,000 students are unable to take regular full time course loads needed to complete their programs in 8 semesters (four years).
- Engineering, Business Administration, Health Sciences, Nursing and other programs are unable to accept new majors.
- The Library has slipped from 36th to 42nd among major research libraries. It must have more acquisitions.
- Student/Teacher ratio in many departments is far in excess of accepted higher education standards. Business Administration is 26.2 to 1, Economics is 31.5 to 1, Hotel and Restaurant is 33 to 1.
- Massachusetts now ranks as the 49th State in per capita spending for public higher education. In two years, this state has slipped from 28th to 48th in money spent per student in higher education.
- Students must pay! The Trustees have authorized an 82% tuition increase over three years. Fees will go up to $143 in 1978; tuition will go up $135 for a total of $278 more for next fall.

LEVEL FUNDING COULD SPELL DISASTER

- A Faculty Senate report suggests that many programs might be eliminated. Included are CCEBS, Honors, Residential Colleges, Environmental Science.
- Many departments would face severe cutbacks. Among those threatened are: Sociology, Geology, Math & Statistics, Microbiology, English, History, Education, the School of Engineering, the College of Food and Natural Resources. This is only a partial list of programs slated for cuts if the campus is forced to endure "level funding".
- There could be a drastic cut back in student services. Admissions, financial aid, veterans affairs, transfer programs, off-campus housing office and many other agencies would suffer if the $472,000 increase in student services is deleted from the proposed budget.

This information was compiled by the Student Center for Educational Research (SCER)--an education and research agency of the Student Government Association.

Liberation: Not just for women

By SCOTT McKEARNEY

It is hard to know where to begin in trying to share with you my understanding of the Men's Movement. The task of looking critically and personally at the male role in our culture, and trying to change that role in a revolutionary and positive direction can be threatening and confusing. Breaking free from the tyranny of masculinity and trying to explain the movement is so much more difficult.

Recently, while talking to a long time friend I was startled and angered to hear him speak of the Men's Movement to break free of sexism as 'feminism for men' followed by his usual self satisfied, satirical chuckle. That comment set off a chain reaction of thinking in my mind which led me to write this column.

I do not know the history of where and when the Men's Movement started but I do know that it began and will continue to grow among men who seek the freedom to be loving supportive persons, rather than conflicted and isolated functions of a competitive and destructive sex role orientation called masculinity. The movement arises and grows among concerned and victimized men coming together to break-down destructive ways of living in the masculine sex role while taking an active part in creating new, positive, human ways of being-as persons.

The movement is organizing in opposition to sexism. We are working to break down an exploitative system of social relations which classifies people according to the gender of their sexuality and denies them the freedom to be human first and then sexual in relation to the personal preferences which arise from being healthy, free, nurturing and loving persons.

Sexism is a system of oppression which can be just as destructive to men as it has been to women. Due to the way we have been raised as men in this Western culture of exploitative social and interpersonal relations, we have become marginal people who are tortured by the horrifying tune of competition, aggressiveness, power tripping and the insensitive kinds of living with which we have been trained to order our behavior.

Men as a class of people are isolated from each other. We have been pressured into a state which leaves us only partially capable of gentleness, cooperation, intimacy, and equality with women and even more between ourselves as male persons. It seems that we have been taught that the qualities of masculinity are gained at the expense of other men.

A Men's Movement can not result in personal growth and freedom as long as men remain isolated from and competitive with each other, and battle against sexism only out of guilt over what we have done to women. We cannot set women free, they are setting themselves free.

Women are taking care of themselves by getting together and building a new culture. Men cannot be a strong and complete part of that movement against sexism until we get together ourselves and support each other in transforming our lives by breaking down the unhealthy and dangerous forms of sexism which leave us isolated, tortured and weakened as people. We can get together in so many ways. We can form support groups which not only will help us understand the depth of sexism in our lives, but to support each other as people in a collective struggle to transform our ways of living. We can become involved with Men's Centers and work with each other and reach out to other brothers who are suffering in the masculine role. Through the movement and through the men's centers we can collectively confront ourselves as people and work to build a new people's culture through a unity of struggling people who are oppressed under sexism, political hierarchy, exploitative capitalistic economic relations, and prejudice.

These are ideas, not meant so much as a manifesto than as seeds for new ideas — which necessarily need your help. These ideas and the ideas of other brothers cannot come together as a liberation movement until we come together in action. Think about it, sexism is killing us too, brothers.

Getting back in touch

By ROGER M. LUKOFF

While hitching on a ten mile stretch between the colleges of the Pioneer Valley, a friend and I were given a ride by a middle-aged man in a pick-up truck. The man, quite robust and seemingly friendly, took us into his truck and accelerated down the road at about 15 m.p.h.

Right off, he questioned me, "So, what do you know about rocks?" Finding myself momentarily speechless, I finally responded that they were pretty hard. The man, who seemed a bit disappointed, proceeded to tell us how each rock inside the earth was as different as each person on top of it. In continuing, he discussed complex geological and geographical phenomena that could probably match a Carl Sagan or even Galileo (a possible exaggeration, but so what!)."

In quite a personable manner, our friend proceeded to educate us of things that a professor or a textbook never offer. Not that knowing that jet fuel tanks are cleaned by peanut stalks is going to change my life, but I am stricken by the fact that I have been missing so much from people that stand beside me on any street corner from Amherst to Houston.

Who expects to gain such impeccable knowledge from a "farmer" driving a pick-up? It makes one wonder how much our society is missing because of our "sterile" and structured lifestyle.

By being "away" from the world here at school, we only bother to take notes from "accepted" intellectuals rather than those who must prove themselves every single day of their lives: What, actually, are we really learning?

I'm not advocating the boycott of five-college buses, and not even the absence of note-taking in class, but it seems that so many of us are missing a world that is physically close by, but as far as communication goes, one that is basically out of touch. This is perhaps a barrier all of us should attempt to overcome, because I'm sure that I, along with many others are ignorant of a great many things other than rocks........

Women's Day Resource Fair wants you

To the Editor:

After many months of brainstorming and organizing, International Women's Week is almost upon us, March 6-12. Over 25 organizations of UMass-Amherst are sponsoring a week-long program of women-oriented music, dance, theatre, art, poetry, speakers and workshops. The week's activities are geared towards an educational program of women's struggles around the world, as knowledge is power.

On International Women's Day Tuesday March 8th, there will be a Resource Fair in the Student Union Ballroom 10-4 p.m. As we considered the potential for frustration as one realizes the complexity of women's oppression, we thought it necessary to provide information about organizations and groups which people can plug their energies into to change this male-oriented society at UMass and elsewhere.

If you are an organization that has something to offer a community that is concerned about sexism and racism, let us know by March 3 and we'll reserve a table for you at the Resource Fair. There you can provide literature and people to answer questions about your group.

This is an excellent opportunity to get the word out about what you are doing, and to get people involved in your action-oriented projects. Arrangements can be made by calling me (leave messages if necessary) at the Student Senate office, 545-0341 or 549-6702.

See you at the Fair!

Cooperating with each other

To the Editor:

Michael Hart's letter (Feb. 22) against unionization seems to reflect a rather naive perception of the social relationships at this University. He labels the issues confronting us "mundane" since, in his estimation, "they are agreed upon by all parties concerned." It is my contention that there is no such consensus among students, faculty, administration, and state government about the meaning of "cheap, quality education."

Consider "cheap". To us, as students, it is clear that this means no more increases in tuition or fees. To Governor Dukakis it means level funding in a period of high inflation. To the administration it means cutting costs by eliminating student services and special programs. To the faculty "cheap" means that they are long overdue for a cost of living raise, and now that they have a union they will be fighting to further their interests. You and I, fellow students, are getting squeezed. As for "quality", it becomes apparent that the administration's definition is different from ours when you consider the sort of programs and services which are first to be cut when the budget gets tight.

However you examine it, our interests as supposed beneficiaries of this institution are not being represented in the policy making arena. I agree heartily with Michael that "cooperation is a higher form of social relationship than competition," but to cooperate with interests contradictory to our own like the administration and in some cases the faculty is tantamount to nailing the lid on our own coffin. Instead let's try to cooperate with each other and take some initiative towards participation in decisions which affect all of us.

SUPPORT STUDENT UNIONIZATION.

Setting the record straight

To the Editor:

I want to express my appreciation for the article in the February 16 Collegian by Paul McCann on "Southwest's neighbors." The Globe Article to which he refers is a blatant example of exploitative sensationalism. Whatever its artistic merits, it is an irresponsible statement to the public who have every right to objective information about living conditions at the University. Mr. McCann's reporting, even if it had not shown such a generally positive view among residents living near Southwest, is a most welcome example of responsible journalism.

Thank you.

The people of the OUTFRONT collective are to be applauded for their efforts in bringing Norman Blake to Amherst community. Norman Blake is an extremely talented musician whose main concern was to give his, and Nancy's audience the best show possible. Dylan, when they were together, never had it so good.

Change: Taking it easy

(Editor's Note:) William A. Mills, a UMass junior, is interning at the Taos Pueblo Day School in Taos, New Mexico. He is a contributing columnist to the Collegian. His columns are an account of his feelings and experiences in Taos.

TAOS, New Mexico — Change.

Call it breaking tradition or trying something new.

It still means change.

And in change, there's usually no turning back. So those who propose change must have the wisdom and assurance to discern that change is for the better, or that change is needed.

For change that comes about hastily and without much deliberation and discussion usually results in disaster.

Students of today have lived through much great change. But not enough.

Students today, when they were younger, witnessed their older brothers and sisters fighting for dramatic change in the late '60's. That change has resulted in closer examinations of government practices, and in the elimination of many inequities, even though many still exist. That change helped end a war. It may have torn a country apart, but it found the truth, and it found the way.

Students today have seen a great tradition crumble in the church. We have seen great change in the Roman Catholic faith after the adjournment of Vatican II.

That change has resulted in a church closer to the people, a church more concerned about the peoples' needs.

That change has resulted in the elimination of phony, secretive church practices. It has resulted in a church more aware of the world's problems and a church more willing to help share peoples' burdens.

But of all the changes or lack of change that concerns me now, the change being proposed by the government to affect Native Americans concerns me most.

In this case, I believe the sudden change here will be disastrous. Dr. William Demmert, newly-appointed deputy commissioner — Education, Bureau of Indian Affairs, has proposed to eliminate pueblo agencies and place complete fiscal and educational responsibilities on individual pueblo schools and tribes.

Well, at first glance, this proposal seems rather progressive and welcome. After all, it was just a little more than a year ago that Congress passed the Self-Determination Act — an act that calls for complete Indian responsibility and, more important, complete Indian independence from the BIA and other government organizations.

However, upon closer analysis, this proposal would result in chaos.

The pueblo schools, at this time, are not ready for total independence, and they are certainly not ready for this great burden of responsibility.

Firstly, at present, individual tribes have very little input in school affairs. The pueblo governor and her or his staff would be lost if they had to take over the school now.

Secondly, with the termination of government funds, the schools would be forced to chop teacher and administrator salaries, eliminate needed school positions, and forfeit new educational materials.

During this period of change, the schools educational value would most likely be lost forever.

It is imperative that tribal leaders beecome more involved in the decision-making process of the pueblo schools. But that cannot begin at a moment's notice. The process to convert BIA schools into purely Indian-operated schools must be gradual. The government must not be so quick to release its responsibilities.

Dr. Demmert's proposal is a good one if it is implemented in steps and not by an immediate executive order.

This change must take time. Only then will it be for the best.

IGGY

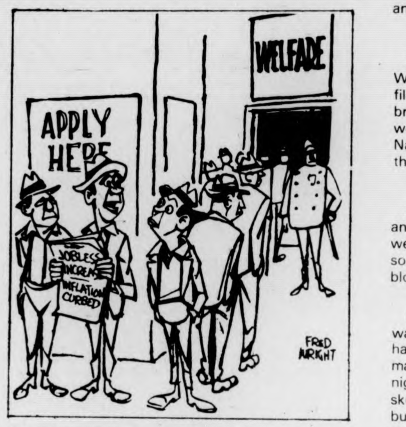
I used to know this guy named Iggy. I forget what "Iggy" was short for, but it was some long New England kind of name that his wealthy parents picked out for him. I didn't see him that often; he was a lot older than I.

You probably wouldn't have liked Iggy. Not many people did. I thought he was pretty cool. He was very intelligent and always had some scheme or another going. He'd tell me about them and I'd always say, "God, that's cool, Iggy!" I was just a kid and "cool" was my favorite word.

Sometimes Iggy used to hang around with Fred because he was his age. The only way that Fred would refer to me would be to say to Iggy, "Let's ditch that punk." I didn't like Fred that much, and often would get ditched.

One summer, Iggy taught me how to flatten metal things like coins and silverware on the railroad tracks. We'd hide in the bushes when the trains went by. Afterwards, we had to wait until the metal things cooled down before we could pick them up. Then we'd take them to his basement and make sculptures. He had the coolest stuff in his basement.

I think it was that same summer that Iggy tortured frogs. It wasn't that I really liked watching frogs "getting it", it was just that Iggy was so ingenious about it. That jerk Fred was usually there and I figured he talked Iggy into it.



"BY BEING UNEMPLOYED WE ARE SAVING OURSELVES FROM A RUINOUS INFLATION."

One night, we sat outside on the grass and talked for a long time. I was thirteen and it was dark out. Iggy told me he was building a boat to take on the canal that ran next to the railroad tracks. I asked if I could go with him when the boat was done and he said, "Sure". Iggy said that all he wanted to do was make things and go places. I told him all I wanted to do was be an artist. He said, "But you already are one". We talked about that big, mysterious "future" and what we thought it held in store for us. Iggy didn't much care, I could hardly wait.

That fall I did a gigantic painting and entered it in an Arts Festival in New Haven. It didn't win anything but at least it got in. I had had this fat girl in my school lie down on a big piece of wood and I traced her and painted it in psychadelic. (Psychadelic was "in" then.) Iggy was home from school that weekend and went to see the painting. He came over and told me that he liked it, but he thought psychadelic was cheesy. I agreed and never did anything psychadelic again.

Around a year later, Iggy dropped out of school and lived with Hare Krishnas in Boston for a while. That didn't last long. I knew it wouldn't. Iggy moved home and started making things in his basement.

On a warm spring day, Iggy helped me make a film. We went down the canal in the boat he'd made and filmed tadpoles and swamp stuff. I remember that we broke tons of skunk cabbage so that we'd stink. Then we went to his basement and filmed pictures of Viet Nam from Life magazine so we could splice them into the swamp film.

Iggy was making a bomb in his basement one day and he blew himself up into a million pieces. His wealthy parents donated a youth center to the town so that kids could have a place to go so they wouldn't blow themselves up. They didn't know much.

I was at a dance at that youth center one night, and was all sweaty and smelly from dancing up a storm. I hadn't thought about Iggy for a long time because it made me feel crummy. But when I was smelly that night, it reminded me of that time we broke all those skunk cabbages and stunk. I sort of laughed to myself but didn't tell anyone about it; no one much liked Iggy anyway. They liked the youth center better.

Carter's 'new Camelot'

By STEVE TETREAULT
Collegian Staff

Are the Russians threatening? It may be coincidence. It may be paranoia. But then it may not be.

While the United States is engaged in its post-election honeymoon with Jimmy Carter, bits and pieces of information are appearing in the papers that are signalling some worry about the possibility of a Russian threat in Europe.

A few months ago, the U.S. government revealed that the CIA and other intelligence agencies had been severely underestimating Russia's military capabilities. The Russians are spending thirty billion more than the United States this year for "defense", with a five per cent increase yet due.

Perhaps the most frightening revelation came last week, when it was revealed that at a 1973 meeting of Communist leaders, Soviet chief Leonid Brezhnev said that Russia was taking advantage of detente in order to build its arsenal. By 1985, he said, the Russians would "be able to exert our will whenever we need to."

Lately, various studies have been done in order to evaluate our military strength, especially our NATO strength in Western Europe.

According to reports, we come up way short in conventional weapons as compared to the Russians. Nuclear weaponry aside, NATO forces are outnumbered 2-1 by conventional Communist troops, tanks, and aircraft. NATO forces number 316,000 men; the Communists have over 380,000. Even though Western Europe is considered the United States' prime military interest right now, only four divisions are stationed along the Communist border; the Russians have over 16 divisions stationed there.

Experts disagree as to the details, but it is generally agreed that if the Russians were to attack, they would be forty-eight hours into West Germany before NATO could organize sufficient counter-forces.

The United States outnumbers the Russians in nuclear weapons in Western Europe by 2-1. However, they would be very foolish to use them immediately to counter a ground attack.

The United States volunteer army, hardly a crack outfit, would be 320,000 men short within six months if an attack were launched. What to do? The latest talk is to reinstate the draft. There are financial as well as political reasons to do this, but the fact is that the armed services need bodies. Hardest hit are the reserve units, which are expected to reinforce regular troops. The reserves are presently 80,000 short of their peacetime level. What would happen if a war were to break out?

There are good reasons why or why not the Soviet bloc would consider an attack. The point is: forget detente, or whatever it is now called. Forget the good feelings. Over the weekend Carter flew to Georgia in the "doomsday jet", the special presidential plane from which the President can operate in time of nuclear war. Only a test, he said, only a test.

During the post-election honeymoon, many are comparing Jimmy Carter to John F. Kennedy, even to the point of mentioning a "new Camelot." Will this Camelot, like Kennedy's, include tensions with the Soviets?

Student services, co-ops

The following is a listing of cooperatives and services which for the most part are operated by students for students. They either make no profit or return what profits they do make to the Student Government Association or area governments. Many are run collectively. Whenever possible students should patronize these services as their prices are often significantly lower than those found elsewhere and the monies generated from them goes to benefit students in other ways. Individuals interested in more information concerning existing co-ops, or in starting new ones, should contact the SGA Office of Economic Development at 545-0341. the organizing committee for a Socialist Symposium. They were voted $200 in support of the program which will be held in March.

The senate passed a proposal for a revised version of the "Policies and Procedures for Administrative Withdrawal (Non-Academic) of Graduate Students," and attacked an amendment that the proposal be considered promptly by the Trustees.

This revision of the withdrawal policy for graduate students is less restrictive than the current policy for undergraduates, said Vice President Tim Austin.

One cannot withdraw from the university for failure to pay child-care bills or rent, he said. It does include clauses concerning mental health as a reason for withdrawal from the university, he said.

A non-discriminatory policy was passed by the GSS; that University policy explicitly prohibit discrimination against any graduate student on the basis of sexual or affectional preference in all cases, including but not limited to financial aid health services, residence or employment.

There will be a general community meeting held at 7:00 p.m. in Marhar Auditorium to discuss budget cuts.

Members of the graduate student senate urged faculty, staff and grad and undergraduate students to attend, as it will affect the educational standards of UMass.

Your physical fitness

By FERN GOODHART

Physical fitness is the learned capacity to work smoothly, efficiently and with energy to spare. Good health, proper nutrition and an "I care about myself" attitude are the foundations on which fitness is built. Fitness is an unstable commodity; it does not store well. Since it represents a dynamic state of the body, it continually needs to be reinforced, replenished and refreshed. Once you are hooked on fitness, it becomes an integral part of your daily habits and when it is omitted, you miss it.

Physical fitness is as specific as the activity you pursue. Swimming will not help your tennis serve, but the physiological benefits on your cardio-respiratory (heart and lungs) system may — it depends on you and the amount of prodding you give your body. Your heart rate, both at rest and during activity, can be used as an index of the physical changes occurring from exercise. The pulse, which is a measure of your heart rate, can be felt at many body sites, but the radial artery in your wrist is most convenient. Count the beats for 15 seconds and multiply by four. (Do not use your thumb; it has its own pulse.) This is your pulse, in beats per minute (bpm).

The average resting heart rate for men is 72-76 bpm, for women, 75-80 bpm. Physically fit individuals usually have a resting heart rate 10 beats lower than average. (A low resting pulse may also be inherited.) When you are physically fit, the heart becomes more efficient, pumping more blood in fewer beats. Within your first month of training, you can lower your resting heart rate 5-10 bpm with proper exercise.

Three aspects of a proper exercise plan are duration (how long?), frequency (how often?), and intensity (how much?). General guidelines for cardiovascular-fitness activity is at least 15-30 minutes, three-to-five days a week, at 65 to 80 per cent of your maximum effort, which may be evaluated by your pulse. This training level conditions the heart if activity is maintained at a certain intensity, adjustable with age. For people under 25, the maximum heart rate is about 200 bpm, and the heart should be between 140-170 bpm during exercise. This pulse range, or "target zone," lowers 4-5 bpm for every five years above 25 a person ages. For instance, a 40-year-old has a target zone of 128-155 bpm. A short-cut to determine your target zone is 220 minus your age, multiplied by 80 per cent. The target zone is the level of activity which will improve your physical efficiency and increase your cardiovascular capacity for utilizing oxygen from the air you breathe. With improving fitness, your body will have more oxygen available to it, and exercise will seem easier.

Before engaging in any strenuous activity, warm-up for at least five or 10 minutes, acclimating your body to exercise. After vigorous exercise, gradually cool down until you feel your heart pumping normally. A reasonable guide is to "walk out" of any activity for at least three minutes, more if you have exercised unusually vigorously. Warming up and cooling down are believed to lessen the strain on your heart, and prevent fainting.

What sort of activity will contribute to your goal of physical fitness? Anything which pushes your heart a little more than usual, raising your pulse up into your target zone. It's up to you. Engage in any activity you enjoy, as long as it is prolonged, regular and moderately vigorous. Exercise should be individual, self-paced, and interesting; not painful, exhausting, or dull. Your choice depends on your likes and dislikes, time, convenience, and accessibility. Consider a variety of activities: brisk walking, jogging, swimming, cycling, tennis singles, basketball, gymnastics, or anything else available for your enjoyment and conditioning.

Your fitness program should be built up progressively. Start slowly and patiently; fitness will develop with your perseverance. Fitness is measured in years (your lifetime), not in weeks or months. Seek medical permission if you have special health problems, such as heart disease or high blood pressure, asthma or other respiratory problems, diabetes, obesity, or the inability to walk two miles.

Your long-term goal is maintaining fitness, feeling good! Short-term, it may be completing those two sets of tennis, running three miles without stopping (no matter how long it takes), or lowering your resting heart rate. Fitness contributes to an alert, vigorous, lengthy life. Let it contribute to yours!

Student Video Project, 406D Student Union (inside SCER)

Hours: Mon., Wed., Fri. 9:00-10:00, 1:00-5:00; Tues., Thurs. 9:00-5:00

Description: The SVP is basically a video access facility which seeks to aid and train students who seek to produce their own television programs. It is also slowly developing into a production facility. The SVP is developing a distribution mechanism and presently has a library of over 200 tapes. As a training-access facility and production resource, the SVP is building toward the time when students have access to their own cable channel.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Thursday, February 24 — Born today, you are one who carefully chooses his associates in accordance with his own interests – whether or not those associates can be of help in furthering those interests in terms of material profit. You are a popular individual, one who is welcomed into any group on the strength of his wit, his intelligence, his emotional integrity. You do not weep when it is your wish to laugh; you do not laugh when your actual response is one of tears. In short, you are honest in your reactions – just as you are true to your intellectual attachments. It would not occur to you to support causes in which you did not truly believe, just as it would not occur to you to act detrimentally toward those causes in which you believe wholeheartedly.

Because you yourself are not particularly ambitious, it is vital to your happiness to select a marriage partner who is not going to be ambitious for you. To be pushed toward goals you have no real wish to gain, to be goaded in the directions of ends you do not really feel are for you, to be nagged into declaring aims you know you cannot work for: these will be the consequences of a hasty marriage to one who loves you for what he or she thinks you can be or ought to be rather than for what you already are - -or are not.

Although there are times when you find it difficult to like other people, you never have difficulty getting along -- or seeming to get along -- with everyone and anyone. You enjoy a personal independence that enables you to pretend acceptance without sacrificing integrity; so long as you do not attempt to fool yourself, you will not suffer any ill affects from putting forth an image that is not really yours.

Friday, February 25

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Another influence should be working well in your behalf at this time. Don't be surprised to make gains you had already given up on.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — A matter of great personal interest takes your time today. You would do well to allow business to take a back seat to other things.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — You have tremendous resources of energy at this time. Find new outlets and discover new joys in projects well completed.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Though your laurels are many, this is no time to rest on them. Reconsider present directions; it may be time for a change.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — The source of your discomfort may lie in endeavors you thought not only well-intentioned but healthy as well. Take another look.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — A single failure among a number of success must not be taken as the last word. On balance, all progresses better than you think.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Worries about future financial security may be somewhat soothed today by the promise of work both pleasurable and remunerative.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Business or professional worries take more of your mental energy today than you have to give. Try to put aside recent disappointment.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Unless you can apply recently gained information to a new problem, you will have put forth considerable effort for nothing. Try!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — This is a good time to try to reform your own as well as another's character. Adversity can strengthen your determination to succeed.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Excitement in the wings must not keep you from your best performance when you are called front and center. Prove your experience.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Though professional matters must take time during the day, make evening hours memorable in terms of family activities.

Look Into Your Future
Be an Air Force Missileman
You can prepare yourself to enter this exciting field by enrolling in an Air Force ROTC program. You can select from four-year and two-year programs leading to a commission as an Air Force officer.
Also there are scholarships available, with a $100 monthly allowance, full tuition, books and lab fees paid. After college, you'll have an opportunity for a challenging job and graduate educational degrees.
If you're the type of guy who looks forward to an exciting future, look into Air Force ROTC programs that include preparation as a missile launch officer in the Air Force. Help continue the traditions that have made our country so great. Be an Air Force missileman.

Barons still around

NEW YORK (UPI) — Through the joint cooperation of the league players, the National Hockey League owners and club owner Mel Swig, the Cleveland Barons franchise was saved at least until the end of the season.

Upon hearing word of the last hour reprieve from Allan Eagleson, head of the players association, team captain Bob Stewart said in Cleveland that the Barons would be on the ice for their scheduled home game against the Buffalo Sabres tonight.

According to the formula worked out, Swig and the NHL Board of Governors each are committing $350,000 to the Barons while the players association will borrow $600,000 from a Canadian bank. According to Eagleson, the money "will be considered an advance by the players association against a repayment of that debt," and the money would be used to pay player contracts, pension contributions, all insurance payments and the total cost of operation of the club including any and all legal assessments.

"The National Hockey League and the National Hockey League Players' Association and team owner Melvin Swig have jointly worked out to arrange an agreement which assures the Cleveland Barons that they will continue operating for the balance of the present season," said board chairman John Ziegler.

Eagleson stressed that the settlement "could not" have been worked out without Swig's cooperation.

"It seemed impossible a week or even a day to do this without the additional funds from Swig," Eagleson said. "We all know the substantial amount of money he has invested in the team."

Benson hurt

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (UPI) — Kent Benson, an All-American on Indiana's 1976 NCAA basketball champions, is finished for the season with an aggravated back injury, university officials said Wednesday.

Benson, Indiana's No. 2 all-time scorer, averaged 19.8 points in 23 games this season and 21.1 points in 14 Big Ten games. The Hoosiers, with four games to go, stand 7-7 in league play.

The 6-foot-11 senior aggravated a chronic back ailment Sunday in a collision with Purdue's Barry Joe Carroll. Both were going for a rebound with only 46 seconds left in the contest won by Purdue, 86-78.

Benson crashed on his back and lay motionless for about a minute. He was helped from the floor by coach Bobby Knight and an assistant.

X-Rays did not disclose any fractures but Benson has been resting ever since.

Knight said Benson has returned to his New Castle, Ind., home. A spokesman said orthopedic specialists want him to remain in bed for two weeks.

Big 10 powers battle tonight

CHICAGO [UPI] — Michigan can count on help from Purdue or Minnesota Thursday night in the Wolverines' bid for the Big Ten Basketball Championship.

The Wolverines hold a 1½ game lead with a 13-2 record compared to 11-3 for both the Gophers and Boilermakers.

The loser of the Purdue-Minnesota game will drop to third place while the winner will move into second place — a game behind Michigan with three to play.

The Wolverines would like to see Minnesota win because Michigan twice has beaten the Gophers, ineligible for the Big Ten berth in the NCAA Tournament, and will play the final game of the season on the Purdue court.

Thus, a Purdue victory, providing it can defeat Iowa and Michigan State in its remaining two games, would give the Boilermakers a chance to tie for the title by defeating Michigan in the season finale.

Michigan plays seventh place Michigan State and sixth place Illinois in its other two games.

Purdue coach Fred Schaus, whose team defeated Minnesota 66-64 in overtime in their first meeting at Purdue, recognizes the importance of the Gophers contest, but equates it with every other game.

"We're capable of winning every game to assure ourselves of at least a tie for the championship," Schaus said. "But we also could lose all four. I think we're playing the best team ball we have all year. Whether that's enough to get it done remains to be seen."

Minnesota coach Jim Dutcher declared Purdue was "playing the best basketball they have all year."

Key man in the contest should be Minnesota center Mike Thompson, league leading scorer with a 24.1 average per game.

Let's get technical

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — Basketball fans always want the opposing coach to have it. Officials are sometimes reluctant to call it. Players try to avoid it all together.

It's the technical foul.

Some fans wonder why a coach as calm as Wake Forest's Carl Tacy can sit still, say just a couple of words to an official and get slapped with a technical while a fiery coach like North Carolina State's Norman Sloan parades in front of his bench, yells at the officials and slams his hands down on the scoring table without being given a technical.

According to Norvell Neve, Atlantic Coast Conference supervisor of officials, when the clock is running, the coach and players can sit on the bench and coach as long as they don't say anything derogatory. When the clock is stopped, the coach can come up off the bench and coach as long as he doesn't say anything derogatory.

"You don't have to get off the bench to get a technical," said Neve, who discussed the technical foul at a preseason official's meeting and in two bulletins sent both officials and coaches during the season.

"While the fans may yell for a technical if a coach comes off the bench," he continued, "There may be reluctance by the officials to call the technical on someone on the bench because of the two shots that are awarded."

This year, a technical called on a player gets just one shot, while a technical called on anyone else on the bench results in two shots. In both cases, the other team gets the ball.

Nellie Cooper, a veteran ACC official living in Cary, N.C., calls technicals based on a variety of reasons.

"The vicinity of the official on the court when a coach makes his comments has something to do with it," said Cooper. "If I am in front of a bench and the coach jumps up right in front of my face and starts yelling at me about a call, or if I am nearby and the coach throws the ball at me, then I may tend to call a technical quicker than if I was on the other side of the court.

"Also, the type of remark has something to do with it. If it is vulgar, or profane, if a coach questions your ancestry or if he gets personal otherwise, those are automatic technicals," he said.

But while Neve says officials may be reluctant about calling the technical on a coach this year, Cooper feels "The coaches are much more guarded about being called for a technical."

Some coaches have tried to use the technical foul to give their players a boost, but never said he doesn't see much of that this year.

"I doubt that a coach wants one in a tight game because of two shots and the other team getting the ball could result in maybe a seven-point play," he said.

Basketball mania sweeps the campus

By RUSS SMITH
Collegian Staff

Little known to us so-called human beings, and even in students, are things that make us go-make us tick. Deep down in the subconscious well of the average college etudie (student who studies twice a week before a weekend of happy hour carousing) lies this tiny bug. It's name, Hitus (of Latin derivative meaning hoop-itus).

A distant cousin to the 24-hour flu, Hitus has the potency of a Big Mac attack. Its victim is unable to resist the urge of donning his (or her) sweatsuit, along with the dorm's ABA-imitation basketball, and racing the Campus Shuttle to Boyden or NOPE gym. Hitus' influence spans from opening day of the intramural hoop season, and depending on the dosage, can linger well into softball season.

Basketball-mania knows no prejudices. It hits the young (freshman) and old (grads) alike. Blacks and whites, males and females, phys. ed. majors and non-pe majors. Teams are formed from dorm enthusiasts, fraternities and sororities, apartment complexes, and organizations. Yes, even the Collegian has an 'alleged' team.

There's nothing in the sport that excites players to participate more than imitating the pros; Dr. J's moves...Kareem's sky hooks, or even the long bomb style of Pistol Pete.

And let's not forget the infamous but seldom used (in intramurals) slam dunk (I've yet to see one in a game).

Reasons for participation vary: exercise, fun, campus championship. Some even play just for the hell of it. That's what intramurals are about.

Well, in three weeks or so, a new hoop king and queen will be crowned, and another IM hoop season will close.

But fear not, fellow students. Softball season will be just around the corner. And those visions of 'Dr. J', Kareem, and the rest, will change-into visions of Vida Blue, George 'The Boomer' Scott, 'Spaceman'...

Hayden shuns ski spotlight

By RICHARD MOORE
Collegian Staff

Nancy Hayden, a 20-year-old sophomore physical education major, is leading what she calls a "leaderless" UMass women's ski team to its second consecutive Women's Intercollegiate Ski Conference championship.

In five WISC races this season Hayden has three second place finishes, a third, and a fourth; but was visibly embarassed at the mention of her own exploits and focused attention on the team's success.

"There's six other girls on this team," Hayden said, "and we all watch out for each other. It doesn't do the team any good if only one girl has a big day, we all have to make good runs. The university gives money to winning teams, they don't care about individual statistics."

Most winning teams count on outstanding performances from certain individuals, though, and Hayden is currently the second leading skier in the WISC.

Hayden credits some of her success to the competition of two other skiers; teammate and co-captain Nancy Shinnick, and the league's top skier, Tracy Newlove of Boston University.

"Kathy and I grew up together," Hayden said, "and we've always tried to beat each other, but now we have Tracy to shoot for. I know I'm skiing more agressively because of her."

Hayden began skiing behind her home in Waltham at the age of six, and for four years she and Shinnick were Waltham High's two top skiers.

"Ski racing is a team sport," Hayden said, "but it's also personal and individual. You hope to ski well for the team, but when you're on the course it's you against the mountain, and I enjoy that feeling."

"Racing is psychological," she said. "When I'm in the starting gate I tell myself that I have the ability, and all I have to do is use it the way I've been taught."

Hayden, who plans to attend physical therapy graduate school after graduation from UMass, said, "I've always been interested in the health field, and would like to work in a hospital this summer. The university has a program where students work with handicapped people, mostly kids, and I'd like to get into it."

"I don't want to jinx us," Hayden said, "but I think we'll win the WISC. The league champions go to the Easterns at Stowe, and that's a trip the whole team wants to make."

UMass skier Nancy Hayden flashes her winning style in a recent meet.

Yes you can beat a dead horse; thoroughbreds may return to RI

PROVIDENCE (AP) — A legislative effort to revive thoroughbred racing in Rhode Island by giving Narragansett Park more betting proceeds has cleared its first major hurdle by passing the state Senate.

In a 40-4 vote Wednesday, the Senate approved Sen. Ambrose L. Campbell's bill after debating whether the proposal to increase the track's share would keep the racing industry going.

The proposal now goes to the House.

Narragansett Park closed last year after its owners complained that they could not stay in business under the existing method sharing the daily betting revenue with the state.

Lincoln Downs, which is being turned into a greyhound track, also closed for the same reason in 1976.

"The state lost $4.5 million without racing in 1976," Campbell D-Pawtucket, said. "This bill would also put 1,500 people back to work who are getting unemployment compensation and welfare."

Campbell said his bill was given the blessing of horsemen, members of former Gov. Philip W. Noel's horse racing task force and local merchants in Pawtucket and East Providence.

Under the existing method of dividing up the parimutuel proceeds, Narragansett Park would receive about 12 per cent from 18 per cent. It guarantees the track an average of 17 per cent of the money and the state most of the rest.

The bill also would create a capital improvements committee that would receive 1 per cent of the betting money for five years after which that 1 per cent would be paid to the state.

Campbell also said his bill would generate between $4 million and $7 million for the state annually.

Sen. Michael F. Horan, another Pawtucket Democrat, said Campbell's proposal should have included a provision that requires a fraction of the track's money to go to Pawtucket and East Providence.

"One-half of 1 per cent goes to the cities where they have jai alai and dog tracks," Horan said. "We've established a precedent and I think we should go by it."

Hockey not hip in Beantown

By JOHN ANTONELLI
Collegian Staff

Times have changed.

Did it seem likely as recently as three years ago that the more popular team that plays at the Boston Garden would be wearing sneakers instead of skates? Or that those guys would be performing before larger and louder crowds? Generally, that is what is happening now with the Bruins and Celtics.

Hockey had always been king during Boston winters, but that is not so any more. If a casual fan were to glance at a Boston newspaper's sports pages today, chances are that the Bruins would be mentioned in passing, but basketball and the Celtics would be getting the lion's share of coverage. It is odd that in this below-standard Celtic season that they get so much more press than the Bruins, who have been in or around first place in their division all season long. In addition, the Celts are a much more popular topic these days on sports radio talk shows than the Bruins.

Commentary

Home attendance is down about 4,000 per game for the Bruins, despite their lofty standing. Ads usually appear in the paper advertising available tickets in all price ranges for most games, unthinkable two years ago. Televising so many home games has begun to hurt more than help.

Their only sellout occurred when Bobby Orr was scheduled to make a return appearance with Chicago, but it turned out he was injured again. The Bruins have not even sold out their two home games with powerhouse Montreal, who they have beaten, astonishingly, three times in four tries this year. That has to make it possible for Boston to knock off Les Canadiens in the playoffs, if anybody can do it. But nobody, including Boston fans, thinks that will happen.

There are many reasons for the Boston hockey fan's disinterest: too many teams (too many are terrible), the departure of most of the Bruins' big names, and the mishandling of Orr by the new owners, the infamous Jacobs Brothers. They let Orr slip away to Chicago because of his bad-knee history, but it seemed like they were never really interested in paying the superstar defenseman's salary, even when he was relatively healthy.

So, instead of negotiating with him in good faith when his contract expired, Orr became a free agent, signed with the Black Hawks, and the Bruins got nothing in return. The fact that the Jacobs' got a break with Orr's latest knee problem keeping him out, maybe forever, is not the point. Their antics have kept many disenchanted fans away.

Also, there are a few holdovers from the Bruins' glamor era of 1967-1974. It was fashionable then to be seen at a hockey game, when every night was an automatic sellout. The problem now is that everybody remembers Orr, Phil Esposito, Derek Sanderson, Johnny McKenzie, Don Awrey, et al, and all their swashbuckling activities. The current Bruins try to play a tight, defensive game, and it makes for a rather dull show. The fans cannot yet identify with strangers like Stan Jonathan, John Wensink, Hank Nowak, and Matti Hagman. Something is missing when, on any given day, the goaltenders are the most exciting players on the ice.

Even most of the sarcastic bellowing from the second balcony, which was once a part of the game, is gone. There is no Ken Hodge to pick on. Nowadays, the Bruins are too hard-working to yell at. And hard work can be boring to view. When was the last time you cheered while you watched someone unloading a truck or doing the laundry?

Maybe they need a gimmick, like having, say, D. Leo Monahan skate a shift or two at right wing for a Colorado game.

Still, the Bruins are a winning team, and most cities would be glad to have them. And many financially troubled teams would like to have their attendance 'problems', where about 10,000 or so usually show up. A few clubs are in danger of moving or folding, but Boston, while smarting, is certainly not one of them. It's just that the patrons are used to better, and it is going to take a while to get to know this team.

Meanwhile, back on the court, the Celtics seem to be coming together now. If they go on to win anything this year, the Bruins may go on being largely ignored for a long time. They could use an electrifying ovation or two, or anything resembling fan interest. Where's Don Earle when they need him?

Officials tell why facility unlikely here

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second in a three-part series dealing with the proposed construction of a sports facility at UMass-Boston. Continued is an interview conducted with two UMass officials last week.

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

Question: Does the fact that the Universities enrollment figures have leveled off affect the chances for any construction at Amherst in the future?

MELLEY: "No really, although an increasing enrollment would add to the total amount available for athletics. When enrollment stands still or increases very slowly, the athletic fee, which has not increased in approximately fifteen years, gives less in actual dollars to the athletic department to spend on the increased needs in the department because of rising costs and inflation."

Question: What was the procedure that the University took to get the legislature to vote on the UMass-Boston arena proposal?

MELLEY: "The capital outlay budget is usually the last thing the legislature tackles before prorogation each year, and funds have been dwindling for capital expenditure during the past few years. Each year our campus submits a capital outlay priority list to the President's Office. The Boston and Worcester campuses do the same. The President and the trustees then prioritize the list in terms of what they see as university-wide needs. The Board of Higher Education adds in the requests from the other state institutions of public higher education, and after prioritizing them they go to the Governor and legislature. The legislature votes on the list, (to which have been added the requests of all other state agencies) and the Governor approves or disapproves. The athletic facilities for the Boston campus were part of the building of the entire campus, which was done in several phases."

Question: Does a delay in acquiring a building contractor and beginning construction reduce the chances for UMass-Boston to build the same facility as originally planned?

MELLEY: "Because the money has already been appropriated, and construction costs keep going up, this is a possibility."

Question: Are there any immediate plans for construction of any new facilities on the Amherst campus?

BISCHOFF: "That would be hard to imagine. Some student leaders are opposed to this. These are bad economic times, the President and Chancellor are sensitive to the financial condition of students on campus."

You can draw several conclusions about the UMass-Boston "proposed" plans for construction of a rink, gym and pool.

One, the Boston arena was a commitment by the Board of Trustees that was both made and planned at least three years ago. Also, there is absolutely no relationship between what the University of Massachusetts is lacking in terms of sporting facilities and what UMass-Boston will receive (if the governor releases the tax funds).

The UMass-Boston campus has very few athletic facilities to speak of, and the construction plans are a continuation of the original building plans for the entire campus.

Let it also be known that the proposed facilities for the Boston campus are presently being endangered of ever becoming a reality because of rising construction costs and the fact that Governor Dukakis is withholding the funds.

Bowlers place well

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

Perhaps one of the most successful athletic teams on campus, the UMass bowling team continued on its successful ways this past weekend in the Tri-State Bowling Tournament held at the Willamantic Bowling Lanes in Willamantic, Conn.

In the tournament, the UMass men's team finished tied for second with Central Connecticut State College, behind tourney champion University of Lowell.

Representing the Minutemen were Roger Norcross, Mike Berard, Dave Tursky, Rich Rosenthal, Mitch Foreman and Paul Stutzman. Foreman recorded the top score for UMass, rolling a 235.

The women finished one spot higher than their male counterparts by finishing first in their tourney, 100 pins ahead of the second place team.

Karen James and Amanda Garcia were the winners in the doubles competition with a score of 1040. Garcia was the tourney's over-all winner, while James finished second in the singles with a 527 series.

Beth Schneider, Patty Melanson, Fran Griffen, Jane O'Neil, James and Garcia represented UMass in the women's competition.

Both the men and women return to action this Saturday when they participate in a Regional tournament.

Riders open season

By SUE SCANLON
Collegian Staff

The UMass equestrian team opened its spring season this past weekend with a horseshow hosted by Framingham State. But the UMET had some trouble getting things back together after the long winter break. Since UMass does not have an indoor riding facility as do the other colleges of the region, the team had only limited practices before the Framingham meet.

Despite these drawbacks, UMass came out with a respectable fourth place finish. The team collected four blue ribbons which were won by Cindy Nickerson, Lillian Langlois, Marie Tomkins, and Michele Fedele. UMass coach Sarah Carlson said afterwards that she was "pleased with the performance of the UMass riders, considering the little workout they had prior to this horseshow."

Presently, the UMET is in second place in the region for overall team points. The strong Colby-Sawyer team is leading with 18 points. Confident about the next show, coach Carlson said, "Our riders have the capability to be the region champions, but like all athletes, we need the time and space to practice. With the warmer weather coming, we will be able to accomplish this."

Violence mars sporting world

GUATEMALA CITY — Local soccer fans, angered after their hometown club lost to an army team, attacked the winning players with machetes Friday, the army said. Five persons were killed in the melee.

The slayings occurred as the team was boarding a bus in Santa Barbara, 170 miles from the capital, after downing the squad 6-3, a spokesman said.

By JOHN LOWNEY
Collegian Staff

This UPI report was buried in the "Scoreboard" section of Sunday's Globe. The UPI writers exhibit their syndicated style of deadening an exciting event, as they turn a soccer-machete doubleheader into a nondescript "angry local soccer fans" story.

Of course, "Losing soccer fans retaliate with knives" means nothing to Americans. There are always fights and sometimes even murders after important Latin American and European soccer matches, right? The fans are too hot-tempered, right? They take soccer too seriously, right?

What if these machete slayings occurred after a game in the United States? Or what if the fans started to pelt the players with beer cans, ice cubes, or hot dogs? What if hockey players climbed into the stands swinging their sticks? How about a fan running onto a basketball court to assault a referee?

Now wait a minute; some of this sounds familiar, but how can you compare flying objects or stick-swinging with machetes? Ask that Southwest person who was knocked out by a roll of toilet paper last semester. Ask Ted Green or Wayne Maki.

Violence is violence. The difference between machete stabbing and beer can tossing lies in the politics of the event. Notice whom UPI contacted as its source of information — the Guatemalan army.

Commentary

The army supplies no details about the outburst. Did the army provoke the fans' attack? How many fans and players were involved? Who were the five persons killed?

We rarely hear the complete reasons for such confrontations, because the spokesmen relay only politically safe information. They describe such riots as simple disputes over the outcome of the game.

These foreign sports-related fights occur after contests between teams of different countries, in which nationalism stirs the emotions, or between teams of the same nation, in which internal politics can prevail. In either case political instability and competition can create more than a spectator interest.

In the United States sports are big business. The fans do not support a national team or an army team — they support a franchise. The team's degree of success directly affects the fan in ticket prices as well as in the quality of entertainment.

This system runs smoothly in times of wealth and stability, but with runaway expansion, player-owner warfare and national inflation, the fans become losers.

The increase of player-fan fights is a product of the current chaos in American sports. The players are gaining bargaining power when the money is scarce. The fans pay more for a lesser product, become frustrated and see the players as targets for their frustration.

Some psychologists believe that sports act as a type of catharsis for both participants and observers. According to this view, fans can release their frustrations in watching a game.

It is now more widely believed that sports promote aggression. Fans become violent after a hard fought game despite the opportunities for release during the event.

No matter which view you prefer, you cannot ignore the politics of violence in sports. Whether it be the Guatemalan army or the hometown club, every team represents some one's economic and political interests. When confusion reigns, the fans are usually the victims — and violence is louder than a stadium of shouting voices.

A Peaceful Takeover

On Tuesday, Feb. 15, 1977, the workers at Tech Hi-Fi in Amherst took over complete operation of the store. "The transition was without major incident," claimed Barney Stone, a spokesman for the new firm to be called AMHERST AUDIO. The name was chosen to reflect the local ownership of the area's largest Hi-Fi and Video Store. The sales staff have over twenty years experience in the audio industry. High quality and value will be emphasized at AMHERST AUDIO. Brand selection will be greater and service after the sale will continue as Jim "The Bird" Hemingway and his staff of electronic wizards remain.

against Maine on Tuesday, should be in the starting lineup.

"My hip felt really good," Pyatt said, "I felt no pain at all although my knees were sore from being out of shape."

So now the Minutemen head down the final stretch before the playoffs. It's important that the Minutemen don't experience too many more second half lethargy like they experienced against Maine and New Hampshire. After all, it would be nice going to Philadelphia with a three game winning streak under their belts.

"It will be important that we play good basketball our next two games," UMass captain Mark Donoghue said after the victory over Maine. "If we play well it should give us the needed momentum for the playoffs."

Mike Pyatt will be back in the starting lineup for tonight's game against URI at Rhode Island.

Puckmen prevail; edge Cross, 6-5

By TOM CROWLEY
Collegian Staff

The Minutemen hockey team used a four-goal second period and hung on despite a furious Holy Cross surge to make a successful senior night by edging the Crusaders 6-5, yesterday afternoon at Orr rink. The win upped the hockey team's Division II record to 8-10-1, 8-12-1 overall, as the icemen broke a three-game losing streak.

UMass was leading 6-3 until Fran Bastion scored on a backhander over Dana Redmond's stick shoulder. Jim Murphy at 10:04.

Holy Cross scored 74 seconds later when Jay Parker's shot dribbled over a prone Redmond.

The score stayed that way to the end, but the Crusaders had the puck in the Massachusetts zone for the rest of the period, as this was the only frame where the visitors out-shot UMass 14-11. The Crusaders pulled their goalie, P.J. Costello with thirty seconds left and Jim Benelli off for roughing Bill Bellerose, to give them a six on four advantage.

The momentum changed right after the Minutemen had suberbly killed off a penalty to Billy White for cross checking Costello.

"We needed it bad," coach Jack Canniff said after the game. "Everybody put out today. We used four lines until they caught up with us at 6-5."

The line of Lincoln Flagg-Nick Carney-Kevin Sullivan scored three goals and sparked the Minutemen when they were down 2-0. Peter Annicelli scored the first Purple goal by hitting a slapshot past Redmond to his right through a screen of five players. This was at 5:19 of the first period.

Glenn Gravews tipped in a long slapshot off Kevin O'Quinn at 7:57 again off a screen.

After leaving the first period down 2-0, the Carney-Flagg-Sullivan line went to work.

Flagg poked home a shot from right the slot after a beautiful pass by Carney who took the defenseman down the left wing. The score was at 2:11 and made it 2-1, Holy Cross.

Chris Lamby, from the face off circle to the left of Costello, fed a short pass to Sullivan, who flipped it past the Crusader goalie at 7:10. Here the momentum started to swing to UMass.

Bob Jefferson gave the Minutemen their first lead of the tilt when he fired a slap shot from the blue line at 10:54 and beat Costello to his right.

Bastion got the first of his two goals about three minutes later as he tied the game on a shot through a crowd beating Redmond to his stick side.

Billy White flipped a five-foot rebound of a John Peters' shot through a small space to Costello's left to give the Minutemen a lead they wouldn't give up. The score came at 14:47 of the second period.

In the third period, right after killing off a hooking penalty on Mike Merchant, Bob White skated in and tallied an unassisted goal with just 57 seconds gone in the frame. Bob White skated over the blue line from the left side and fired the puck past Costello.

The biggest UMass lead came at 2:23 of the period when Flagg got his second goal of the day when he picked the puck up right in front of a sprawled Costello and lifted it into the cage. This was after a Carney shot.

This is where the Crusaders made their desperate rally. The goals by Murphy and Parker made it a one goal game and the Crusaders put a lot of pressure on Redmond. Redmond and the Minutemen hung on and time ran out on the Purple.

While UMass was out-shot in the third period, 14-11, the Minutemen out-shot Holy Cross 40-32 for the game.

The pucksters penalty killing was good as they received nine minutes in penalties while Holy Cross had no one in the sin bin all game.

The last game of the season is Saturday night against Salem State at Salem at 7:30.

Hoopmen travel to URI, face Rams

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS

Now that the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team has completed its 1976-77 home schedule, the Minutemen now embark on a two game, season-ending road trip tonight when they travel to Kingston, R.I. to meet the University of Rhode Island, in an 8:00 p.m. contest.

The Minutemen, 15-9 on the year after defeating Maine on Tuesday night, have been playing sporadically of late and UMass coach Jack Leaman looks up the upcoming road games as an important springboard for the upcoming ECBL playoffs in Philadelphia.

"Now that we are finished at home," Leaman said after the Maine game, "we can concentrate on improving our over-all game and Rhody should provide quite a challenge for us.

"No matter what the season records are, whenever we play at Rhode Island the game is always very close."

Last year the Rams took the Minutemen into triple overtime before UMass was able to leave Kearny Gymnasium with a win.

The two teams met earlier this season when UMass defeated the Rams, 77-63 in a game played at the Cage two weeks ago. In that game, Leaman was forced to juggle his lineup because of the hip injury forward Mike Pyatt suffered early in the first half.

As it turned out, even without Pyatt, the Minutemen played an intense and aggressive game and dominated the Rams.

Since the teams met two weeks ago, both teams have been playing inconsistently. The Minutemen lost to UNH in triple overtime and to George Washington by two points, and even though they beat Maine Tuesday night, they certainly had their problems.

Rhode Island hasn't been exactly tearing teams apart either. The Rams, who are on the virtual brink of elimination from the ECAC New England playoffs, beat lowly Brown by only eight points and lost to Syracuse 70-47.

In their most recent outing, the Rams hung on to defeat UNH by one point, 63-62 up at Durham, N.H. If URI has any intentions on sneaking into the ECAC playoffs, a win over the Minutemen is imperative for coach Jack Kraft's Rams.

URI is led by freshman Sly Williams, who is averaging 19.3 points a game this season and eight rebounds. Stan Wright is the Rams big scoring threat from outside, as the junior guard has been averaging 19.3, along with backcourt partner Jiggy Williamson who has been averaging 14.5.

The achilles heel of the URI team this year has been at the center spot where Randy Wilds has been averaging only six points a game and six rebounds.

Also there is forward Irv Chatman, the sophomore transfer prodigy from Tennessee who has begun to blend with the Rams offense.

The Minutemen will be at full strength tonight, as forward Mike Pyatt, who returned to action

Something's rotten in L.A.

The Los Angeles Lakers have been the hottest team in the National Basketball Association for the last eight weeks of play. During that time, the southern portion of California has been in the throes of one of the worst droughts as its recorded history.

"My," you say to yourself, "this yo-yo is really a wealth of information."

I have but two replies to offer in my defense. Firstly, "do you always talk to yourself? and secondly, "oh yeah?"

But I digress.

I considered the Lakers' success and the southern California drought to be not totally unrelated. But how could I prove my suspicions while in the East?

Placing a call to the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, I offered the chairman, Harvey Gogh, 30 pounds of freshly melted snow, personally delivered, if he would cover the cost of transportation and give me a couple hundred dollars as spending money when I reached L.A.

I was in California before the snow even had a chance to perspire.

Spreading the white stuff on the first sidewalk I saw, I proceeded directly to the Los Angeles Coliseum, tarrying neither to pass Gogh, nor to collect the $200.

Ignoring the "Gone to buy Rhode Island" sign on the door, I entered the office of Lakers' owner Jack Kent Cooke, and immediately knew my suspicions were well*founded. The stench was overpowering.*

Cooke spoke through noseplugs. "Who are you?"he demanded.

"Reporter," I mumbled, gasping for breath.

"Huh?"

"Press," I choked.

"Only in the fourth quarter when we're far behind," came the reply.

I ran to a window, opened it and took a deep breath. "I'm from the IRS."

Cooke's face paled. "I give twice a year."

"Never mind that, just answer a few questions."

"Ask away. Oh... and forget that Rhode Island sign. I don't even have enough money to rent Pawtucket."

With that admission, I knew I had him. I decided to go for broke. "Is your ballclub responsible for this repulsive odor, and do you have an extra set of noseplugs?"

Apparently in response, Cooke turned to a back room and called out "Jerry!" Then he faced forward. He was almost sobbing. "I only regret that I have but one set of plugs to give to my country." With that, he removed his noseplugs and handed them to me. His hand shook for a second or two before he fainted.

At that moment, Lakers' coach Jerry West appeared, wearing a custom-made gas-mask that even fit nicely over his nose. He was breathing through a snorkel.

Quickly realizing that West was in no condition to speak, I ushered him outside the office where we removed our respiration paraphenalia.

"Did you hold a team meeting in there?" I asked.

West looked thunderstruck. "How'd you know?"

"It's obvious. The Los Angeles area has a bad dry spell. They begin to ration water. 50 gallons a day simply isn't enought to provide showers for a basketball team. Suddenly, the Lakers start to win...."

"Okay, okay," West interrupted. But it works. When we drive the lane, the other team goes baseline. When we shoot from the perimeter, they clog the middle."

"That's revolting," I observed.

"We tell 'em that the smell is a fresh coat of varnish on the court."

"How can you sleep at night?"

"I look at it this way. We're winning games now. We're hot, and the hotter we get, the more we sweat and the more games we win. Besides, the club played pretty poorly at the beginning of the season. I mean, face it, we stunk before we started to stink.

Groups to protest level-funding budget

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

Seven organizations representing faculty, students and staff at UMass yesterday announced their united plans to lobby against the governor's proposed "level-funding" budget for the University.

At a press conference yesterday morning in the Campus Center, the representatives said they would attempt to get their constituencies to write their legislators in an effort to add to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' proposal of $107 million.

The groups said they were against the governor's $68.1 million proposal for the Amherst campus because it represents an 11 per cent decrease from last year's budget once inflation and other budgetary increases are considered.

The groups represented were: the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, Local 1776; the Graduate Student Employes Union, not a state-recognized group; the Graduate Student Senate, the Massachusetts Society of Professors, the Massachusetts State Employees Association, the Professional Association University of Massachusetts-Amherst; and the Student Government Association (SGA).

Need more money

Jay A. Martus, student body president, said that given the current power structure at the University, UMass President Robert C. Wood's request of $124 million is necessary, due to the inflexibility of the budget.

Martus said the seven groups were looking for "equal status" in determining the University budget request and on policy and management decisions.

Carol Drew of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees said, "Whenever budgets come down the first place they cut is classified employees," who make up most of the janitorial workers at UMass.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery has said that between 300 and 600 classified employees could be laid off if Dukakis' budget is passed by the legislature.

Faculty vacancy

The seven groups also cited the 15 per cent staff vacancy rate, which included 230 empty faculty slots.

"As a result, there is a serious shortage of courses with 5,000 students being unable to complete their required course load in the normal eight semester period," the groups stated in a joint press conference.

In a press statement the groups also said, "The residential college programs, the Honors Program, the Rhetoric Program, the Committee for Collegiate Education for Black Students, the Bilingual Collegiate Program and other special programs have been marked for possible elimination by a recent Faculty Senate report ... " if the governor's proposals are passed.

SGA's town meeting

As part of its commitment to educate students to the budgetary problems faced by UMass, the student groups last night held a town meeting in Mahar Auditorium attended by 75 persons.

At the meeting, Martus said the governor had increased nearly every other category of the budget to some extent, except higher education.

In a statement after the meeting, Student Trustee Paul M. Cronin said the governor's objections to President Wood's One Washington Mall office and to the building of the gymnasium facility at the Boston campus were a "smoke-screen".

Cronin said that even if the president moved to another state building and reduced some of his staff, the budgetary savings would not be that great.

Funds for the Boston gym were allocated "years ago" Cronin said.

The SGA plans to conduct a massive mail campaign to get students to write or visit their legislators during the spring break, Cronin said. Students can pick up budgetary packets explaining the University's financial situation when they vote for SGA president and student trustee in March 15 and 16 elections, he said.

Voting will be conducted in the dining commons for on-campus students and in a centralized location for commuters.

Third World reaction

Raoul Roach, a Third World senator to the Undergraduate Student Senate, said, "The last hired, first fired policy can apply to this situation also."

"My people look at the struggles of the sixties and see a gain, not a lot of gain, but a gain," Roach said.

The 900 Third World students at Amherst cannot tolerate any cuts in the programs which support them.

Susan Birmingham of the Student Organizing Project, a student funded group which is attempting to set up a student union, said that a student union has now become a necessity.

The students need a union to look out for their own interests now that the faculty are unionized, she said.

Student resistance fluctuates in budget fight

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

While carloads of stalwart UMass basketball fans ventured through a cold drizzle and on freezing roads to watch the Minutemen sneak past the Rams, considerably fewer made it to a University Town Meeting to discuss the implications of "level-funding" on the future of their school.

The meeting was called by the Student Government Association (SGA) yesterday to begin organizing students to become involved in the University budget process by pressuring their legislators into allocating more money for higher education.

UMass President Robert C. Wood has asked for a $124 million budget for all three campuses, while Governor Michael S. Dukakis is requesting a "level-funding" budget of $107 million, consistent with the current budget.

Unified, logical action

Student Organizing Project (SOP) representative Susan Birmingham seemed less than panicky at 75-person turnout in Mahar Auditorium though.

"I'm not at all disappointed at tonight's group. I don't think large, emotion packed gatherings are the proper way to deal with these kinds of issues," Birmingham said.

"The whole problem with the protest movements of the Sixties was that they lacked any kind of thrust after the initial gathering. We don't plan to work that way. The basis for our action does not lie in huge meetings or rallies, but rather in unified logical action by various sectors of the University. I'm optimistic."

Birmingham outlined a unified course of action to oppose the governor's budget proposal. She said opposition to the proposal was being organized "piece by piece" using a cohesive network of organizations, including the Student Center for Educational Research (SCER), The Legal Services Office, the SOP, and the Economic Development Office.

An ongoing process

Birmingham said the cooperation of area governments and academic departments is being sought.

"We are in a very favorable position to bargain at this point. We have the tools, the various groups, at our disposal. Right now it's simply a matter of using them. This whole movement does not have a beginning or an end. It is an on-going process," she said.

SGA Co-President Jay A. Martus said both long and short range plans were being considered by the organizations. He added pro-unionization students will be the "keystone" in lobbying efforts.

SGA Co-President Paul M. Cronin said, "We have tried to pick issues that people can organize around."

Those people who did remain listened attentively as a handful of speakers explained the possible impact of Governor Dukakis' $68.1 million budget proposal for the Amherst Campus.

Not all of them shared Birmingham's cautious optimism, though.

"Frankly, I am very disappointed at the number of people here tonight," said Martus.

"Just plain apathy"

Brown resident Robert Melia, one of the early deserters, said he was disappointed at student interest in the budget issue.

"I wasn't really expecting any Seniors to show up tonight, but I figured on more people than this. These people here tonight represent less than one per cent of the university population.

"There is a great deal of potential for strength in numbers at this school, but nothing is going to happen unless there is some kind of central organization," Melia said.

The majority of students at last night's meeting cited widespread apathy as the major potential stumbling block to budget increases.

Armando Parces-Enriquez, a Russian major, said a lack of effective publicity has hampered reform efforts.

"Most students figure other people will do things for them, so they really don't care about what's going on. It looks like half the people here are organizers and their friends," he said.

"Just plain apathy," said James Tabak, an Economics major from S. Hadley, "It's impossible for me to see how people can't get upset over this.

"People can't seem to recognize the correlation between low quality education and a low budget. The only thing people are worried about is getting jobs," said Tabak.

Johnny and the Jukes rock sell-out crowd

Concert review

By CRAIG ROCHE
Below the Salt Staff

Southside Johnny and the Asbury Jukes pulled up at the Student Union Ballroom Wednesday night, a long way from Asbury Park, N.J. where they live. A short time after they took the stage however, Southside himself proclaimed "This place is better than Atlantic City" and proceeded to make himself at home.

The sell-out crowd of 900 must have felt equally comfortable. The opening set by Andrew Gold and his band was energetic and entertaining, but it wasn't until the ten-man band from Jersey's South Shores strolled into the lights that the night turned from a show into a party.

Southside Johnny Lyon's forte is singing the R&B classics that were the heart of party music in the fifties. His hit-or-miss mike technique obscured a lot of the lyrics, but the blazing energy of the 5 man Miami Horn section drove their music harder than any '57 Chevy was ever pushed.

My hand kept assuming the grip I would normally place around a can of beer. The Jukes should have been in a club where the natural inclinations of waving hands and shaking feet could overcome a body. Sitting in hard seats and listening to "Fannie Mae" is almost a contradiction in terms.

Still the party went on. Capped by a loose version of Sam Cooke's "Havin a Party", Southside and the Jukes had as good, if not better, a time than most in the Ballroom. Maybe it was the pinball games they found here or the cheap beers, but they'd gotten off on the University and were repaying in kind.

The songs were culled from both their first album, I Don't Want to Go Home and a soon to be released second lp on which they'll be backed by some of the super groups from the Fifties, including the Satins, the Drifters and the Coasters. The crowd called out for the band's version of Springsteen's "The Fever" but it was really the Cooke tune and maybe "I Choose to Sing the Blues" that captured the night's best moments. Astounded glances greeted the encore arrival of Ronnie Spector to join Southside in singing "You Mean So Much To Me". (I wonder how many people in the crowd knew that Ronnie, wife of Phil Spector, was the No. 1 superstar of the Ronettes about the time many in the audience were born!)

Andrew Gold fared much better on stage with his band than when he opens for Linda Ronstadt. While the association with Ronstadt is financially better, only now is Gold coming into his own in a performance.

Opening with his Beatles-like "Heartaches on Heartaches", Gold showed that his basic roots are in rock, rather than country. While his two Asylum albums are divided between brisk songs and ones that tend toward the sentimental, he wisely chose to concentrate on the uptempo ones here. "I'm a Gambler", "Hope You Feel Good", "Endless Flight" and the Manfred Mann chestnut, "Do Wah Diddy" got through to the crowd, where the slower, quieter "Angel Woman" and "One of Them is Me" seemed to pass them by.

Standouts within Gold's band were Dan Dugmore, who along with Gold, is in Linda Ronstadt's band, on pedal steel and electric guitars, drummer Dave Kemper.

The encore, resurrecting the Beatles' "Dr. Robert", was a good choice to leave on. Andrew Gold can't hope to escape the laid-back LA style entrapping the Eagles and Ronstadt unless he's willing to vary the formula and emerge as a writer-performer in his own right.

The concert, the first this semester for the hard working Program Council, was nothing less than a total success. The ticket price of $2.50 was the best any show in the area has sported in a long time. Good music, good price, and good times are the end result of their efforts. Good show.

The Program Council's next show is David Bromberg in the SUB March 5.

BOG members to support state takeover of CC debt

By JEAN CONLEY
Collegian Staff

At least three members of the Campus Center Board of Governors (BOG) will travel to Boston Monday to testify in favor of the Collin's Bill, a bill sponsored by Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, that would shift payments on Campus Center Bonds from UMass students to the Commonwealth taxpayers.

Students pay a disproportionate share of the costs incurred constructing the Campus Center (CC), argues BOG member Janet A. St. Laurent, in her brief prepared for the hearing. She says that students get the raw end of the deal because they only use the CC facilities for 30 weeks a year, and their prime usage is contained on one or two levels of the 11-floor complex.

Faculty, adminstrators and other university employes utilize CC services, but do not pay a CC fee. In addition, non-paying users of the CC pay the same price as students for most retail items sold in the building, so students do not even indirectly benefit by receiving discounts or lower costs.

Debt service payments on the building will amount to more than $1.9 million each year until May 1, 2011. Payment for this fiscal year will be $1,920,406.40.

But St. Laurent, along with other BOG members and hundreds of students, don't think we'll make the payments next year.

The CC generates over $6.8 million each year from its retail operations. The University Store, which, according to figures published by the National Association of College Stores is one of the largest in the country, accounts for over $3.3 million, while Food Services in the building produces another $2 million.

These revenues are sufficient to cover operating and business expenses, but according to business student Anthony G. Merlo, they are not sufficient to be applied to the annual debt service burden.

Merlo, who has compiled a report on the fiscal situation of the Campus Center, says the situation at UMass is very similar to that at Southeastern Mass. University in that the burden of the debt service lies with the students.

Padula, Carter drop presidential plans

By STEVE TETREAULT
Collegian Staff

Jimmy Carter and Bob Padula dropped out of the race for Student Government Association (SGA) president last night, saying they had "lost sight of why we were running," according to Padula.

Padula said the duo had used "poor judgement in allowing a third person to run with us." The third person, added Tuesday, was Bill Auger, a sophomore political science major.

"By adding Bill and trying to strengthen the ticket, we placed too much emphasis on winning, and not enough on helping students, which is why we ran in the first place," said Padula.

The team announced their withdrawal at a meeting with the SGA Governmental Affairs Committee which was held to discuss the fact that the team had fallen short of the required number of signatures needed to be placed on the ballot.

The team bowed out before any discussion was held.

The ticket fell several signatures short of the 250 total needed to be nominated. However, Padula claimed that was because "nobody told us a cushion of signatures was needed."

"Politics is a dirty game," said Carter. "You won't have Jimmy Carter to kick around anymore."

Referendum to decide SATF tax increase

By STEVE TETREAULT
Collegian Staff

University students will decide whether $7 increase in the Student Activity Trust Fund (SATF) tax is instituted through a referendum which may be held on the same dates as the Student Government Association (SGA) presidential elections.

The referendum will be placed on a ballot because a petition drive collected over 4600 signatures over the past five days. The petitions were presented last night to Sennate Speaker Brian Delima by Peter Graham, chairperson of the Senate Rents and Fees Committee and coordinator of the petition drive.

The SATF is the activity fee paid by all undergrads and is used to provide student services, such as the Collegian, WMUA, and other organizations. The fee is presently $57. The increase would bring it to $64.

"The students should decide whether they want the fee to be increased. There are a large number of student senators who are involved in RSO groups, and they can't be impartial when it comes to voting on whether to increase money that goes to those groups", said Graham. Graham said that about 10 senators and friends collected the signatures.

The Senate at its February 16 meeting passed the $7 increase. However, according to the Senate Constitution, an issue may be placed on a referendum if signatures are collected from 25 per cent of the student population within five academic days of the Senate's original action. The 4600 signatures collected by Graham are 200 over the total needed.

Delima, who is in favor of the increase, last night said that the Senate would follow the Constitution.

"What we will do is present the facts to the students on why there is a need for the increase. Students don't realize the things the Senate funds," Delima said.

"It won't be a pro-$7 thing, but just a highlight of the issues. The issue is a lot more complex than just an increase."

Jay Milender, co-chairperson of the Senate Budgets Committee, which allocates SATF funds, last night said "the referendum is a bad idea. The students have the final say, but in this particular case, the senators have sat through hours of charts and graphs, and are qualified to vote on the issue."

"The referendum is going to be a reality, though, and I wish that every student who feels he must vote on it becomes familiarized with what he's voting for," he said.

According to the Senate constitution, the referendum must be held within 20 academic days of the petition's presentation. Counting spring break and weekends as non-academic days, the deadline for holding the referendum would be March 31.

Graham said it would be logical if the referendum were held at the same time as the presidential elections. Graham said the Senate would finally decide on the date at its next meeting.

China Night

The annual "China Night" event will be held this year on Monday, March 7th, at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. The Program features traditional Kung-Fu demonstrations and the Lion Dance performed by the Boston Chinese Dance Co. Tickets are $2 for students and $3 for the general public. Everybody invited!!!!

Dukakis concludes two-day visit

Governor's visit: how successful?

News Analysis

By MARY BROWN and KEVIN CLAFFEY
Collegian Staff

The two-day visit of Gov. Michael S. Dukakis to UMass accomplished exactly what it set out to do — shift the budget burden from Dukakis to UMass President Robert C. Wood and the Board of Trustees.

At a press conference yesterday afternoon, the governor said he was pleased to learn the University was undergoing internal review in an effort to stay within an austerity budget of $107 million for next year.

The governor has repeatedly said the University should be able to trim the "administrative fat" and survive on his proposal.

In effect, the governor pointed to the same budgetary gremlins he has pointed to throughout the past three years: UMass President Wood's One Washington Mall Office, the planned gymnasium facility at UMass-Boston and the Worcester Medical School.

With his "level-funding" proposals for higher education in the state, he seems to be saying that higher education institutions will have to reorganize this year in order to save their academic programs.

For UMass, this means considerable internal reorganization of decision-making power. However, any such reorganization must be sanctioned by the trustees.

Faculty, student and staff groups said in their morning press conference yesterday, they all want a piece of the action and the faculty have unionized in an attempt to deal with Wood's power. After, foregoing any pay increase for three years, University faculty voted to unionize Feb. 8 and 9.

Dukakis agreed yesterday that some form of reorganization was necessary. In addition, the governor and Secretary of Educational Affairs Paul Parks seem to be trying to force the reorganization of public higher education this year by squeezing its budget so hard it will have to make a special effort to consolidate in some areas.

The squeeze does not stop at UMass, because the state and community colleges also suffer from the level-funding.

Right now there seems to be several solutions to this problem. State-wide reorganization, campus-wide student unionization or a hasty retreat by Wood are all possibilities.

For the present, state-wide reorganization of higher education seems the most likely course of action. Parks predicts a reorganization bill to be passed sometime this summer, but, with optimists come pessimists, and State Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, said he would be "very surprised" if we saw any semblance of reorganization.

Student unionization seems quite a distant goal. There is no precedent for such an undertaking, while the idea, especially at a university where the faculty are unionized is appealing.

Even if Wood moved out of his office and into UMass-Boston or another state building, the effects would be minimal for the University's budget. The only cost that would change is the $145,000 rent.

If the trustees vetoed the UMass-Boston gym, it is doubtful that the money could reappropriated to Amherst. Most likely it would be returned to the Commonwealth's general fund.

The fate of the UMass budget for fiscal year 1978 appears to be in the hands of the state legislature. The only variable to be dealt with is whether the legislators can agree upon a higher budget than the governor proposed and then reach a compromise with him.

So after the two-day visit by Dukakis, UMass seems to be back where it began months ago — elected officials still must be convinced of the need to fund public higher education.

While the governor has momentarily shifted the blame to Wood and the trustees, the immediate problem seems to be an increase in the overall allocation rather than shifting monies within the present budget.

Univ. governance future uncertain

By ALAN LEVIN
Collegian Staff

This is the last of four articles by Alan Levin on the process by which students can have input into the decisions made by administrators and UMass trustees. This article deals with the future of established governance procedures.

Whether University Governance will remain here or a new system of student-Trustee interaction will take its place is unclear, but the problem of student input into University decisions is certain to become an important issue in the future.

With the advent of a faculty union and talk of unionizing the student body, governance will surely be a topic of concern in the upcoming student elections.

Many a student and the faculty union are calling for some type of change in the governance procedure which would give them both a more important role in UMass policymaking.

UMass administrators, on the other hand, have adopted a wait and see policy to determine what their position on Governance will be.

The purpose of University Governance was to give students and faculty a voice in the administrative decisions which directly affect them. But the dissatisfaction with governance, among other things, has caused the faculty to seek a union mouthpiece instead.

In the past, faculty's only redress of grievance was through the governance procedure. Now it is conceivable that a strike could result from an administrative action which was unpopular among faculty, thus making governance outdated.

Dr. Larry Roberts, President of the Local Massachusetts Society of Professors, said he was not exactly certain what would happen to governance now that his union represents UMass professors.

"I can only say what we expect," he said, predicting the future of Governance. "Faculty will be much more in a decision-making role than they were before."

Thomas Kerrins, the Student Government Association (SGA) Treasurer, predicted students would eventually abandon governance procedures in favor of a better way to recommend policy to the Board of Trustees.

"Students will either unionize or form a third party," he speculated.

Herb Tyson, candidate for SGA co-president, believes that governance will indirectly be an issue in the SGA presidential elections because of the large Student Unionization question.

"I'm sure that faculty unionization and all the problems it involves will be a big issue," he said.

As for his stand on governance, Tyson said he was unsure. The abolishment of governance "will change the whole educational processs," he said. "I really don't know — no one knows — what the outcome will be."

In an effort to solve the problem, Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery has proposed a conference where representatives from each governance unit (student, faculty and administration) would meet to discuss the Governance process.

He has proposed questions such as "What should go through the governance process? What decisions should remain within a governance unit? How or should other groups be involved in all decision-making areas for both governance items and for items requiring on-campus approval?"

In a recent telephone interview, however, Vice Chancellor Robert L. Woodbury said he wanted to hesitate before bringing a group together because, "I am just not sure where we (the administration) stand on governance."

Ends with 20-minute conference

By JOHN MORAN
Collegian Staff

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis wound up a two-day visit here yesterday with 3:00 p.m. news conference in Whitmore Administration Building. The governor, Secretary of Educational Affairs Paul Parks, and Assistant Secretary Joan Pinck left for Boston immediately after the twenty minute meeting.

"It has been a very enjoyable and pleasant visit," the governor said. "I'd particularly like to thank the wonderful kids from the second floor of Coolidge for their hospitality."

Both Dukakis and Parks slept in Coolidge Wed. night as part of their visit.

"I can't say we've come to any profound conclusions as a result of the visit, but I think we've opened up some lines of communication that never would have been opened if we hadn't come here," he said.

Dukakis and Parks stayed up till almost 1:00 a.m. Thursday conversing with the members of the second floor. The governor said when he went to bed "the kids were still going strong"."There weren't many around when I woke up about 6:30 though," he said.

Dukakis breakfasted at 8:15 in the Faculty Club yesterday morning with UMass staff members and then toured the Fine Arts Center. He then attended a public administration seminar on the sixth floor of Thompson Hall and guest-taught a class in Greek Classics in SBA 101 at 11:15.

The governor ate lunch in the Faculty Club and spent the rest of the afternoon until the 3 o'clock press conference conferring with various academic deans and Chancellor Bromery.

The press conference was jammed with newspeople yesterday as the governor summed up his visit and answered questions. Speaking on the university's financial situation, Dukakis said a reordering of educational priorities was necessary and that a careful reallocation of funds would insure no money would be wasted in the budget.

"We must seriously rethink where we are going and what things are most important so that what we can do, we do well," Dukakis said during the 20 minute press conference.

Once again the governor cited UMass President Robert C. Wood's million dollar Boston office, the hospital at the UMass medical school in Worcester, and the proposed $9 million physical education complex for the Boston campus as places where the budget might possibly be cut.

Dukakis also mentioned that a new reorganization plan for a higher education board was nearing completion.

"We are now putting the finishing touches on what I think is the first consensus plan," Dukakis said.

"I hope we now have a proposal for a strengthened higher education plan which can be accepted and supported by all the parties involved," he said.

Paul Parks said the plan was due for introduction in the state legislature "around the first two weeks in March."

Dukakis admitted it may be difficult for his office and the legislature to make specific reallocations in the University budget because of fiscal autonomy of the school.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery told the Collegian in a telephone interview last night he thought the governor had been impressed with what he saw here.

"I think the governor will look at the budget much differently now that he has come here," Bromery said.

Not all Senate seats decided yet

By STEVE TETREAULT
Collegian Staff

Vote tallying for interim seats in the Student Senate was halfway finished as the Collegian went to press last night.

Among the winners in spots already counted were:

Dane Kanter, Gorman; Shari Bickel, JQA Middle; Tom O'Connor, Coolidge Lower; Sara Chenetz, Mackimmie; Becky Staiger, JQA Upper; Bob Prybyco, Hamlin; Richard Baga, Brown; John Ferranti; Pierpont; Joe Beminato, Washington Middle; Debbie Mesh, JQA Lower; Edmund Hillary and Skip Fertitta, Cashin.

The winners of this election will serve as interim senators. This means that their term expires when regular Senate elections are held in October, said Karl Allen, chairperson of the SGA Governmental Affairs Committee, which is counting the ballots.

Elections were held yesterday and Wednesday in 21 dorms, and among Greeks and commuters.

Black Affairs

Coming tonight, 2000 Black

By ANGELA THOMAS
Asst. Black Affairs Editor

The play 2000 Black will be presented tonight in Bowker Auditorium beginning at 8:00 p.m. 2000 Black is performed by the Spectrum Theatre Company, a Queens based group under the direction of Carl Clay. The company's theme song entitled "2000 Black" has been recorded and distributed on Roy Ayer's latest album, "A Tear To A Smile."

2000 Black is an hour and a half presentation answering the question, "Where are we going." It is based on social, economic, and cultural projections. Where will America send its Black troops to fight next? What will the increased shortage of Black men mean for Black women? Does abortion today mean extinction tomorrow? What will be the future effects of "partying?"

The message presented in 2000 Black is not just directed to Black people as the title suggests, but to the whole range of human experience and behavior. The themes of the play deal with the positive aspects of Black existence. In these days of super-black entertainment, the Black Spectrum Theatre Company is a true "grass-roots" operation. 2000 Black is a view of life in the Black community in the year 2000.

Tickets for the play are $2, and are on sale at the Campus Center.

Dukakis at New Africa Hs.

By NASSER EGA
Black Affairs Editor

Governor Michael Dukakis visited New Africa House this past Wednesday, February 23. Sources say that Dukakis was visibly impressed with what he saw and who he talked with.

During his one hour visit, Dukakis toured the gallery exhibition of fabric design and printing, put together by professor Olufemi's class. When informed that all of the printing and design was done by students, Dukakis was visibly impressed.

The governor then visited the CCEBS study lounge on the second floor and spoke with some of the students there.

Accompanying the governor were Secretary of Education, Paul Parks, and State Representative of Amherst James Collins. They joined senior faculty members of the Afro Am. department for a closed door meeting.

The meeting was attended by Professor John Bracey, Chairman of the Afro-Am. studies department; Professor Chester Davis, Associate Director; Professor Michael Thelwell; Van Jackson, Director of the cultural center and Earl Brown a UMass student.

The discussions covered a wide range of topics including the general state of higher education, the future direction of UMass, and the Affirmative Action program. At the same time a bigger faculty staff was called for by the Afro-Am professors. Dukakis was also briefed on the Earl Brown-Craeman Gethers case.

When asked about the outcome Professor Davis said, "The meeting was very frank and all parties involved felt it was a positive discussion."

The spirit, where is it?

By ANGELA THOMAS
Asst. Black Affairs Editor

I remember when the spirit of struggle was very noticeable and very very strong
I remember early afternoon emergency meetings that carried well into the night
I remember rallies, demonstration, and sit-ins
I remember many sacrifices, made by many people, for a common goal

It is good every now and then, to reflect on the past. A friend once told me that, "Memories are made to last, for without them there would be no past." The past is important for it is a record of our history. A history that has mostly been denied and hidden from its people. A history that once brought laughter to her people in Africa, and later hard times to her stolen slave descendants in America. A history that has recorded many of our triumphs, and struggles, but at the same time reminds us that there is much to be done.

The conditions that negate struggle has not disappeared. Racism is alive and kicking, mental slavery of our minds has been so perfected that many do not realize that we have been a subjected to it. Unequal portunity in jobs and education still exist for black and Third World people.

In the year 1977, a black person can still be snatched by police from an academic environment, off the streets, or from one's home, and be incarcerated by the flimsiest evidence conceivable. Why?? The reasoning is that a black person committed a crime, and someone black has to be convicted for it. It does not matter that the person chosen by the police as the guilty party actually committed the crime or not. It does not matter as in the case of Earl Brown, that someone supposedly identifying you, insteads picks a photo of a black minister in Springfield. All that does matter is that a black person committed a crime, and someone black has to be convicted for it. The thinking of police seem to be generated along the lines of "all blacks look alike," so anyone will do.

It is these conditions and many more, that tells us that struggle continues. But where are the people vitally needed to successfully continue it? The people are here, but the spirit is not. I'm aware that the black student population is small at UMass, but are black students aware that there are people working to make our numbers even smaller?

It is important that black students pull together in unity, and recapture the spirit of struggle from the 60's. Recapture the spirit my brothers and sisters and let it dwell within your heart and soul. Recapture the spirit and give Third World organizations your support. We need you as badly as you need us.

Three members of the Third World Caucus engaged in struggle. It is often forgotten that struggle also means working to keep what was struggled for. From left to right, Ken Doles, Ellen Smith, and Renee Mobley. (Staff photo: Jesus Nova)

Attention UMass students, South Afrikan support committee

The SASC is organized to increase awareness and to promote support for the National liberation movements in Southern Africa. This will be done through Education, Political Action and the Raising of Funds and Resources in the Five College Area. Our role is to educate our communities about the conditions of repression that exist under the white minority regimes in Southern Africa; to make clear the connection between this country's history of racism and its present role in perpetuating that oppression, and finally to emphasize to each student on these five campuses that they have been made a party to that oppression.

Last fall Tsietse Mashanini, 19 year old president of the Southern Africa Student Organization (SASO), brought campus-wide attention to the crucial role students have taken in the liberation movement in Southern Africa. Southern African students decided last year they would no longer submit to the racist Bantu education system they were forced to attend. Their demonstrations, led by SASO brought courage and impetus to others in Southern Africa and eventually resulted in the SOWETO uprising. Worldwide attention suddenly focused on Southern Africa.

U.S. students played a crucial role in raising national consciousness about the Vietnam war; it is necessary that we now play an important role in educating people about the U.S. economic and military interests in Southern Africa. We are citizens of this country. Our government and schools use our money and channel it into those regimes that keep the Southern African people repressed. The U.S. presently has corporate investments, as well as military equipment located in Southern Africa. We must become aware and use our collective power to end the U.S. role of support for oppression. We must express, through action, our solidarity with student movements in Southern Africa. To do nothing is to support the continued oppression of Black African peoples by the white minority regimes.

New program for Hyde Park school

BOSTON — (AP) — Despite violence at Hyde Park High School, new School Committee President Kathleen Sullivan said Thursday she will push a program to put the focus on schools from safety and security back to education.

"Beyond the pop-off hustlers, black and white, who are making dough out of fancy human relations programs, what people want is for their kids to learn," said Miss Sullivan, facing the first school violence since she took leadership last month of the School Committee.

"That is the one thing that people seem to be able to come together on."

Female workshop

By CHARISSE WILLIAMS

The Third World Women's Center is having a workshop just for women this Sunday, February 27, in the Lumumba Hut at New Africa House.

From our last workshop held last semester, it was realized that we as women are not as unified and supportive of each other as we should and could be. This was evident within the discussion that was held because the men primarily dominated the conversation. Therefore, we are having a workshop just for women so that we can be more unified in our efforts and discussion at the female-male workshop to be held on Saturday, March 5, at the Malcolm X Room, from 12-5 p.m.

Through your ideas and participation we can make this a prosperous get together. Hopefully these workshops will lessen the gap which exists between all of us and we can stand as one.

Please try to make it to both workshops, and spread the word along to a sister who may not have heard about it.

Volunteers needed for Gethers

By EARL BROWN

Volunteers are needed to help with the Petition drive for Craemen Gethers. People are needed for an hour per week to sit at the table we have set up in the Campus Center. Basically, the petition is a pardon from the governor for the release of Craemen Gethers, who was illegally placed in jail for a 1974 robbery. Presently, he has served nineteen months out of an eight to twelve year sentence. People should call the Student Organizing Project 5-2415 or the Cultural Center 5-0794, for hours they can work. The table will have literature on the case, the petition, and a ten minute version of the case on film.

NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL NEWS

E. EDWARD HUNT

Break-in legality unclear to Hunt

BROOKLINE, Mass. (UPI) — Watergate mastermind, E. Howard Hunt, bitter after 32 months in prison, said yesterday he was misled by the Nixon administration about the legality of the 1972 break-in at Democratic national headquarters.

"Yes, I would say that I entertain a pretty good amount of bitterness," Hunt told his first news conference since being released this week from a federal prison in Florida. The Watergate break-in "was just a continuum of my 21 years as a CIA officer," Hunt said. "To some extent, yes, I felt that I was misled in terms of the degree of legality that operation contained."

When asked by whom he was misled he singled out Gordon Liddy, former U.S. Attorney General John Mitchell, former Nixon aides John Erlichman and John Dean. However, Hunt said he "never had a conversation" with Mitchell about the scheme to break into the Democratic National Committee headquarters in the Watergate complex.

"I had thought of Nixon as a strong national leader...but I don't think he was able to conceive of what was happening in realistic terms," Hunt said.

"He (Nixon) is certainly one of those I would hold responsible for having to serve a prison term. He could have brought the investigation to a halt and Watergate would never have become the horrendous tragedy that it did."

Turner approved to head CIA

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate confirmed the appointment of Adm. Stansfield Turner to head the Central Intelligence Agency yesterday. The approval came on a voice vote without dissent.

The 53-year-old naval officer takes control of the CIA at a time when it once again is in the news as a result of alleged convert activities.

The latest controversy involving the agency revolves around published reports the CIA paid millions of dollars over a 20-year-period to King Hussein of Jordan and may have made similar secret payments to other foreign leaders.

President Carter told a news conference on Wednesday that an examination of CIA convert activities had disclosed nothing the President considered illegal or improper.

Train travel now faster than flying

ROME (AP) — Italy has unveiled a high-speed passenger rail track that experts say can make train travel between most West European cities as fast as flying.

An 11-car train powered by an Italian-made electric locomotive that engineers jokingly call the "Tartaruga" — or turtle — pulled out of Rome's Termini Station Thursday for an 83-mile experimental run on tracks that can accommodate speeds up to 150 miles an hour.

As it shot through tunnels and around medieval towns in the hills of Umbria north of Rome, the speed reached 114 miles an hour.

The speed was kept at that for the experimental run but what counts, according to rail experts, is the track capacity. They said locomotive power is easy to regulate in accordance with track conditions.

Plane crash kills gov't. officials

HARRISBURG, Pa. (UPI) — A state plane crashed into a suburban home and exploded in flames Thursday, killing Pennsylvania Transportation Secretary William Sherlock, State Republican Chairman Richard C. Frame and seven others.

Witnesses said the Piper Cheyenne, leased from Piper Aircraft Feb. 1, was flying at a low level through the mist, its engines whining, just before it plowed into the home of Russell Geary.

Firemen found the body of Geary's wife, Beverly, in the gutted home about two hours after the crash. Geary, a postal employe, was at work and the couple's four sons were in school.

The FAA is investigating the crash, that also claimed the lives of William Smith, 59, Sherlock's chief of staff; Chuck Wilson, 55, PenDOT's public relations director; pilot David Wolf, 35, and co-pilot Ed Soisson, 46 PennDOT photographer Larry Pensyl, 30, and PennDOT official John W. Krebs, 36.

Tanker explodes leaving oil slick

HONOLULU (UPI) — A crippled Liberian tanker leaking millions of gallons of crude oil along a slick 50-miles long exploded in flames 360 miles west of Honolulu yesterday. All but one of the 39 crewmen aboard was rescued.

The 846-foot Hawaiian Patriot exploded hours after reporting a huge hole in its hull which leaked more than 5 million of the 30 million gallons of its oil cargo. The Coast Guard said the hole in the vessel may have been caused by the loss of an entire hull plate.

The merchant ship Philippine Bataan rescued 38 of the men who leaped into five-foot seas from the flaming vessel. One crewman died. Those aboard the rescue vessel were reported to have suffered only minor injuries.

The Coast Guard said a C130 reconnaisance plane was over the ship when it caught fire. The pilot said smoke was seen amidships a few minutes before the explosion.

Apology requested by Adams floor

To the Editor:

On February 23, the Revolutionary Student Brigade passed out literature at all of the university dining commons concerning the Governor's visit to UMass and the budget cuts. In this hand out, the RSB makes a reference to our humble abode. The paper reads as follows: "Will you vist the 14th floor of John Adams? (we dare you)."

We the members of the fourteenth found this to be highly derogatory and offensive to the residents. We feel this verbal abuse was unprovoked and unnecessary.

Because of this literature, we feel that the integrity of the fourteenth has been violated. Each member of the floor was a high opinion of his fellow floormate. We are not the disaster area which Governor Dukakis would shy away from. Instead, we would welcome him to come here, although we do agree with his proposed UMass budget.

In conclusion, we the members of the fourteenth floor ask the Revolutionary Student Brigade for an apology.

Collegian asked to make stand

To the Editor:

Once again, those of us in the UMass community who are organizing against the cynicism and sense of powerlessness we are encouraged to adopt in the University have to contend with the misplaced priorities of the Collegian. The specific reference is to the headline given to the article on student and employee opposition to Dukakis' "level spending" budget in Thursday's paper. While the article itself was clearly written and at least got front page space, the headline "Detractors Loud on Governor's Budget" is not only nuclear (detractors from what?) but it also creates negative connotations (to detract is usually to take away from or to undermine) to those who are organizing against the cuts.

Rather than doing all that it can to support progressive movements on campus which attempt to provide people with a vision of gaining more control over their lives, the Collegian tends to take the bogus position of "journalistic neutrality" which more often than not encourages the feeling of powerlessness that are so well cultivated by the institutions in which we work, study and live. There is something wrong with the priorities of a student paper that gives splash headlines to the Governor's concerns rather than to the UMass students and workers who are organizing to maintain control over the institution and our lives.

It is important for UMass students to reject the Governors bid to join forces with him to "trim the fat." The University must not be made to bear the burden of financial pressures generated by the fundamental dynamics of an economic system motivated by maintaining private profits and preserving corporate interests.

While Thursday's Collegian coverage of the growing resistance to the cuts and to the community meeting scheduled in the evening were generally favorable, it is important for students to demand that the Collegian take a progressive stance to aid as best it can our organizing efforts.

Special voter registration sessions

To the Editor:

The Off Campus Housing Office would like to urge all students living in Amherst to vote in the town's special voter registration sessions. Several prospective town meeting candidates are running who share student concerns: the right for more than 4 people to live in a household, no Northeast bypass, rent control, smoke detectors in apartment complexes. The registrations are on: 7 - 9 p.m. Feb. 23 -4, town clerk's office, Mar. 3, 7 - 9 p.m., North Fire Station, Mar. 12, noon - 8 p.m., town clerk's office, Mar. 14, 8 a.m. - 10 p.m., town clerk's office. THE MARCH 14 DATE IS THE LAST DAY TO REGISTER BEFORE THE ELECTION.

Regular registrations are carried out in the town clerk's office Mon. - Fri. from 8 a.m. - 4:30 p.m.

Meeting for Public Health ad-hoc committee

To the Editor:

There has been growing concern among some of the faculty and students in the Division of Public Health concerning the Title IX issue. In response to the meeting on Friday, February 18, concerning the issue, we feel strongly that Affirmative Action is a broad political issue — not a personal issue — which must be dealt with in an objective manner. We regret that conflict occured at the Friday meeting, since all parties can benefit only from a cooperative effort to eradicate sex and race discrimination in the Division.

A meeting has been organized for Tuesday, March 1, at 7:00 p.m. in Arnold 120 to develop an ad hoc committee to deal with Affirmative Action. The committee can act as a research and information gathering group, a "watchdog" on admissions and hiring, and advocate for students and faculty who report discrimination. All Public Health faculty, undergraduate and graduate students, especially Third World and women, are urged to attend.

Atop the ivory tower

We walked through the high-ceilinged, oak-paneled lounge and into the dining room. Under the light of brass chandeliers the students sat around highly polished oak tables and milled around the cold buffet in the center of the room.

Most of the conversations focused on plans for the summer and for next year. I learned the rankings of the "best" medical and law schools, their acceptance procedures and quirks, and how to get a paid internship for the summer in Washington. Two women described to me their "dream weddings", and then stoutly denied that they had any intention of getting married.

Welcome to the homeland of tomorrow's leaders.

This scene is lifted from one of the best (and most expensive) undergraduate colleges in our country. If you have an extra $25,000 to $30,000 you don't know how to spend, you might consider joining the ranks of the new elite.

A close friend of mine will graduate in June from this venerable bastion of the liberal arts; not long ago, he confided that he believed he was getting out "just in time". The college's student population has changed dramatically since he began. More public than "prep" school graduates attend, and women and Third World students have made sizeable gains in enrollment percentages. Over one half of this year's freshman class, however, answered "conservative" when polled about their political orientation.

The entering students are also wealthier than their predecesors; the costs of private higher education have literally sky-rocketed. The increase in cost has squeezed the middle class student out of the picture (since they are often ineligible for aid) and sent them to the financial safety of the state universities. The doors to the private schools have once again been shut to all except those with the money, name, or prestige (and often they are one and the same).

The private schools have shut their doors, and try to ignore the squalid tenaments that lie just beyond their pristine courtyards. These students live in a four to eight year fairyland; a cloistered paradise that prepares them for the closed conference rooms and ivory towers they will soon occupy.

When many of these students learn I attend a state university they are curiously amused. They pretend that worthwhile academics cannot possibly exist outside the realm of the Ivy League. Have you ever been to Amherst or Smith?

"Oh, UMass," is the usual disappointed response. "Is it true that everyone who lives in Southwest is either crazy or parties all night? How many people jump off the towers each year?"

That lovely, condescending attitude. Look at the poor little state university student, wallowing in that ignorant, sexist, racist, culturally deprived wasteland of human life. Sure, we have our share of these and other problems; but what makes us any different from the rest of the world, including the havens for the elites? Are they blind to their own shortcominns, or are they only kidding themselves? Ignorance can only remain bliss for so long.

But, onward they strive, pushing aside those without the tools, prestige, money, or will to compete. Unfortunately, I don't see the conditions disappearing tomorrow. They're too well-ingrained, too well-accepted, and too safe. And we all know that when we fail, we always blame ourselves first. For too long, our focus has been too individualistic, without seeing the problems in a collective sense.

But as idealistic as ever, I hope that perhaps some day when they reach the higher echelons, the new elite will look back and see those they've hurt and those they've forgotten. Maybe they'll honestly evaluate their motives, and find the integrity to not condemn others for the faults that they themselves possess. Finally, perhaps they will have the courage to turn their backs on the elite they strove so hard to attain, and start to learn about what those persons outside the doors are asking.

An easy scapegoat

The first time I saw Michael Dukakis in person was in the summer of 1973 on some obscure Massachusetts beach. A small dark-haired man came hand-shaking by, preceeded by another man passing out pamphlets about the gubernatorial candidacy.

One election and a couple of years of budget cuts and tuition-fee hikes hence find Dukakis visiting a UMass campus where he is somewhat less than welcome. Certainly we have no reason to rejoice at the arrival of a public official whose name has been so closely associated with the demise of higher education in Massachusetts. But nor should we be so naive as to blame our hard times solely on one man. It just ain't so.

Dukakis is an easy scapegoat, and it must be fun to play the game of waving placards in his face and cursing him behind his back. If he is, however, such an ogre, he is nonetheless a victim of circumstances, and not so uniquely evil.

At a meeting with "student leaders" Wednesday afternoon, the Duke made it quite clear how he envisioned the University's future, once the listener scraped beneath the rather heavy layer of political rhetoric. Dukakis' "level funding" program is merely the result of a belief that, in his own words, "the University cannot be all things to all people."

That point may be debatable, but reflects an attitude toward education that has been gaining credibility throughout this country for years, and which has been especially emphasized during the recent depression. This scheme views colleges and universities as training grounds for professional careers where jobs are plentiful.

Such a plan is an understandable reaction to the pressures of increased specialization in modern society. But by implication it also spells the curtailment of many "superfluous" special programs and perhaps the reduction or elimination of departments which presently lack outstanding academic reputations. As one of the student leaders correctly interpreted it, this means changing UMass from 'university' to 'college' status, in effect if not in title.

Even if this new "way of thinking" — to quote the governor again — were acceptable to students or citizens of the state, there is no positive indication that a budget cut would result in the channeling of funds into the stronger or career-oriented departments and-or the trimming of administrative 'fat', as Dukakis seems to envision it. Because UMass operates under relative fiscal autonomy, once the total budget is decided upon, its allocation is determined by the university administration and Trustees, the governor serving only an advisory role. This means that reorganization is left in the hands of inept or wasteful administrators like President Robert Wood.

Thus Dukakis has chosen to ignore the fact that he lacks the power to implement the changes he admits are necessary if his funding plan is to be adopted. What is actually likely to happen is a rather uniform and broad-reaching deterioration of the quality of education here. Even if the rearrangement of priorities were to take place within a few years, the better faculty members would already have left, recognizing the trends that have been developing for some years now.

This state needs many things that cost large amounts of money, including proposed judicial and prison reforms, as well as the removal of some of the present reliance on oppressive local property taxes. These needs have hardly created an atmosphere conducive to favorable funding for UMass. But the people of the state must recognize now that level funding will have serious long-term effects on education that are quite different from the line the governor has been feeding them.

Obviously, the present budget situation is infinitely more complex than the Dukakis versus UMass battle that certain campus factions seem to be promoting. At issue here is what the state's long-run philosophy on higher education will be, as well as the quality of a UMass education. What students must do now is mobilize to fight for their rights on two levels — on a temporary, "survival" basis to ensure that the quality of education doesn't slide to intolerable depths of mediocrity, and on a long-range basis to achieve a real input in determining the role of a university in modern society.

Hopefully Dukakis' visit will stir up some student interest, which is particularly important in light of the upcoming SGA elections. Important projects necessarily include obtaining a legal power base, and establishing some sort of unified outlook on education so that long-term goals can be pursued with the power of conviction.

Let's recognize the governor's proposals for what they are — a threat to our education. But let us also view that threat in the larger context of the rise of the capitalist technocracy and subsequent attitudes toward education. Our foe is not a man — it is a way of life.

Stranger in UMass land

Much has and will be written about Governor Dukakis' journey to Happy Valley and the Land of Zoo Mass. Personally I refuse to yield to a reiteration of the nitty gritty of the Governor's trip, that is the gossip surrounding how he slept, or did he really pass up both veal parmigiana and seconds at the DC, or more importantly did he put to use the UMass rolling papers that Shu the Sandwichboard man slipped to him as he gobbled his Hatch grinder.

I leave these questions to my journalistic colleagues on this paper. God knows they have spent the better part of the past few days seeking the answers to these details. Personally I think that we would all be better off if we pushed aside this media hype and devoted some time to an examination of Dukakis, the man and his perspective.

By perspective I mean mindset, no not a political label attached by political jocks to allow the speedy classification of a politician, rather by perspective I mean a set of preconceived ideas and ideals which an individual like Governor Dukakis brings to bear on each situation which he encounters.

A perspective colors a situation and in doing so makes the individual's perception of reality subject to these colorations. The reality one perceives, be it worldy or as close to home as our own budget situation, is a result of this individual perspective. And the greening of the Duke's UMass perspective was far different from our own.

For Dukakis' UMass perspective had its origins long ago, it was etched by his birth into an affluent South Brookline home, where the family was important, discipline strict and right and wrong clearly defined. Later it was shaded by his enrollment and Phi Betta Kappa graduation from the elite institution of Swarthmore college, and as he moved from his youth to manhood Dukakis saw its tones highlighted by his cum laude graduation from Harvard Law school. Dukakis' perspective is colored by all of these experiences, it is a collage which continue to shape his ideas today.

Dukakis does not know what it is like to be a UMass student; don't be fooled by those who would have you believe that his "perspective" of this University has been changed by his two day visit here. On his visit to UMass Dukakis was an Ivy leaguer in the land of concrete, a winged tip shoe wearer on the stomping ground of frye boots, a member of the "well to do" in the company of those who "do" anything to make ends meet, and one of the "best and the brightest" alongside the average and still learning.

No matter how hard he tries, Dukakis cannot understand our situation because it is foreign to him, he cannot feel for our plight because he has never experienced it first hand. Indeed that may be just the problem with the way our government is run. We keep placing it in the hands of those who's perspectives are different than our own.

Present them the options

I am a student teacher in the Agawam public school system this semester, and my duties take me to the middle school, which educates the town's sixth and seventh graders. A few weeks ago, I noticed posters advocating the adoption of the metric system covering both sides of the corridor. These posters were drawings by individual students who evidently drew them at the behest of their teachers, as part of a schoolwide campaign.

The metric system elitself is a fine, unobjectionable thing, but I could not help being disturbed that the teachers could mobilize an entire school to espouse one side of an important issue, for it is only a short step before a school proseletizes students for or against certain social issues. For example, what if a faculty board decided that America is spending too much on nuclear weapons? The argument is appealing and simple. We have enough weaponry to incinerate Russia several hundred times over, so adding to the overkill is wasteful and redundant.

I could tell them differently. I have relatives who have access to the relevant classified information, and while they may not reveal the exact figures, they have given me the general philosphy behind nuclear warfare, and it goes as follows: We can depend only upon a fraction of weapons, a), to leave the launch site, b), to arrive on target accurately, c), to survive Soviet defense systems (biggest problem), and d), to detonate properly. In addition, a post-strike strategic reserve is needed to maintain deterrence. The truth is that we need a potentially vast overkill to assure that we can destroy Russia once. Otherwise, there is no purpose in having any nuclear arsenal.

To take an example from a radical perspective, one could imagine a faculty board encouraging student support for the capitalist system. They could have students make posters praising profit, productivity, and the fact that private enterprises creates jobs. A radical could argue that teachers, themselves part of the system, are trying to encourage impressionable students to follow in their footsteps.

Teachers on the elementary and secondary levels do not often have access to sophisticated, classified information. By necessity, they must deal in generalities, and with the kind of information available to anyone. But their students do not realize that this kind of information has its limits; they think teachers know it all. I heard a kid say once, "How can a student be smarter than a teacher?" A student may not respect what he is being taught, but he seldom questions a teacher's mastery.

Last semester in the Amherst public schools, I witnessed an example of a school system's promotion of the kind of activity described above. The specific program was a "walk for mankind", where a student got a sponsor to pay a certain sum for every mile he walked on a certain day. Firstly, one could argue that walking in itself is a futile activity, since it has no direct social benefit. If I were a sponsor, I'd rather pay someone to clean my yard, thus obtaining useful work for my charity. More importantly, the school made a fallacious induction, reasoning that because charity is virtuous, this particular charity must also be virtuous.

Now, I know little about this particular campaign. It's very likely that its methods and purposes are noble. On the other hand, this is also the popular opinion of the UNICEF Halloween program; yet some of these funds yearly go to various Communist governments, where any benefit to children is purely coincidental.

In the social arena, public schools have no business pressuring children to act according to some belief a given faculty board or educational association considers desireable. The precedent is too dangerous. Their proper role is to present as many options as possible, so the student can decide for him or herself in the absence of outside pressure.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Cross country skiers racing this Sunday

The Black Bear Cross Country Ski Meet will be held on Sunday at the Orchard Golf Course on Route 116 in South Hadley. Entrance fees are $3 for adults and $2 for anyone 12 or younger. Registration will take place from noon to 1 p.m. the day of the race. The race is scheduled to begin at 1:30 p.m.

The course has been well marked and prepared and will cover 4.5 miles. All finishers will be awarded certificates of accomplishment. Proceeds from this event will benefit South Hadley ABC (A Better Chance) which is a non-profit educational program.

ABC and Eastern Mountain Sports will provide cross country wax.

Ride boards now in Worcester DC

Through the combined efforts of the Food Services Department and the Northeast Area Student Government, a new service has made its debut at Worcester Dining Commons. Two ride boards located outside the Games Room at the north end of Worcester Snack Bar promise to facilitate the formation of student car pools. Whether you need a ride across state or across country, it's a simple task to consult the ride boards and find other students with the same destination in search of company to share the journey as well as expenses.

The "micro" board is a large (8' x 4'), brightly-colored map of the New England states, including eastern New York. Small hooks are strategically located at Worcester, Boston, Hartford and other large cities. For those traveling cross-country, there is the "macro" board spanning the 48 continental states, as well as Canada.

Correction

The headline "Film on Ayn Rand shown Tonight" in yesterday's Collegian "What's Happening" was a mistake. No such film exists.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Friday, February 25 — Born today, you will remain under the influence of other people throughout your childhood and well into your mature years. It will be difficult for you to exert your own independence; even the first expressions of it will come later for you than for most. A docile child, you will grow into a more or less passive adult. Yet there is a fire within that in the end will not be denied. One day, you will have come to the end of your acceptance of other people's rule over your life – and when that day comes, you will very likely surprise many, including yourself, with the force of your rejection of your own susceptibility to the desires and directions of others.

An early marriage is indicated, for it is a reflection of the dependence upon others that will remain with you until you are well past the marrying age. Basically an idealist with high principles and standards, you will ultimately find it difficult to accept without change the mate you chose in the first flush of maturity. Time, however, should effect the changes you will in the end insist upon; time in the long run will therefore make it possible for you to find satisfaction and happiness with the initial object of your interest and enthusiasm.

Although you will develop considerable drive after you pass the mid-point of your life, you will in the beginning find it hard to work with enthusiasm and energy even when you are working toward goals you desire to achieve. Your will be thwarted by your own lack of inspired action and reaction, and only after you have set, unset and reset your aims many times over will you be able to suit your efforts to the benefits you seek.

Saturday, February 26

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Indications of trouble ahead are not to be ignored. Make every effort to follow the signs of the times to a place of safety.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Make this a Saturday for family activity. There is much to be learned from observation of the youngest family members.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — A new adventure early in the day may leave you too weary to carry out customary chores easily later on. Changes in your schedule help.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Before coming to any decision regarding money matters, take into consideration the advice of an expert. One way or another, you've paid for it.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Take care that restless reactions to another's questioning do not put a strain on a new friendship. Reconsider recent moves.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — It's not too late to take the family into your confidence regarding upcoming changes. Get in touch with any who can bring a valid view to bear.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Community activities are in need of support. Lend yours, both morally and financially, and you will gain in personal satisfaction.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Profitable enterprises await the Libra with enough imagination and capital to take advantage of a new opportunity for gain.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Make the effort to contact one who is owed much – if not by you, then by those for whom you are responsible. Debts must now be paid.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — The tenor of the day is reflected first thing in the morning, when your responses may surprise even you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — The recognition of your ability to lead by one who is himself a leader could lead to exceptional new things for you. Evening brings excitement.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — What might be termed a power play is advancing on the home front. Make certain of your own position before entering into the fray.

There's hope for a facility if students fork up cash

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the last in a three-part series dealing with the proposed athletic facility to be built at UMass-Boston.

Where does all this leave those of us at Amherst, in terms of acquiring a hockey rink or a replacement for the ancient structure called the Cage?

Well, according to associate athletic director Robert O'Connell, there were several plans for new facilities that were considered before Robert Wood became President. This was during the Vietnam War (1968), a time when inflation and student unrest were on the rise.

The Student Senate, sitting in on an informal Board of Trustees meeting, vetoes the proposals involving any new athletic construction.

One of the plans was jokingly referred to as the Notre Dame East Complex, or Boston Garden West. It is understandable why the Student Senate rejected this plan, for it was an immense facility, both in terms of size and cost.

Some of the previous plans were a little bit on the "unbelievable" side. Daniel Melley informed me that a few years ago the Chairman of the Facilities Committee came up with a three-fold plan to upgrade the Universities athletic facilities. One of the three options would have been adopted, but these plans never got off the ground either.

Option one involved the construction of a separate skating rink, remodeling Curry Hicks, adding 1,000 seats and carrying a five million dollar price tag.

Option two was a convertible facility, multi-purpose arena (skating, basketball) with eight to 10 thousand seats and a modest price tag of between eight and 10 million dollars.

Option three would have been the construction of one large complex. This granddaddy would have been a multi-purpose center (Basketball — 10,000 seats) with a skating facility included (5,000 seats) at a modest price of 15 million dollars.

Plans like these aren't made in one day, but they aren't approved by Presidents, student senates, Boards of Trustees, legislatures or Governors, either.

Dean David Bischoff revealed that a plan like the Notre Dame East Complex could never happen at UMass.

Bischoff said that "the Notre Dame plan would be un-realistic here. You need external revenue to maintain such a building. Look at the Springfield Civic Center — you can imagine the difficulty. It is just a fraction of the size of the South Bend-Notre Dame complex."

In case you have ever wondered why this University has never won the NCAA division I football championship, Daniel Melley has some ideas on that:

"The UMass athletic program is diversified, with many athletic programs, both intramural and on the collegiate level. We have not put all our financial resources into one or two programs, like a Texas or Oklahoma."

It is becoming increasingly evident that the only "sure-fire" way this university is ever going to acquire new athletic facilities is to appropriate the needed funds without going through the Governor and the state legislature. Once again, Director of Public Affairs Melley knows how UMass-Amherst could accomplish this. But it would depend almost entirely upon the 20,000 plus students here at Amherst.

When asked what the procedure would be that the University could follow to acquire new athletic facilities, Melley stated that —

"The University of Massachusetts Building Authority has built most of the residence halls, dining commons, North Village, stadium and campus center at no cost to the taxpayer. These are called "self-liquidating" structures.

In other words, the authority builds them, floats bonds to pay for them over a period of time, and collects fees on an annual basis to amortize the debt. Part of your room and board currently goes to paying off the dorms and dining commons, part of the athletic fee pays for the stadium, etc.

If students were interested in building a new athletic complex, (skating, basketball, convocation, recreation center), it could be done with a bond issue to be paid for by increasing the athletic fee or increasing the fee in combination with a user fee."

So, there you have it. It wouldn't be easy, but it could be done.

Merwomen edged by Crimson

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's swim team took a 5-6 record to Harvard University and narrowly missed returning home with that elusive .500 mark. But it just wasn't meant to be. The final scoreboard told the story: UMass 64, Harvard 67.

It marked the third straight regular season setback for the 5-7 Minutewomen but the meet was extremely close. Considering the fact that the meet took place only a few days after the New Englands in Rhode Island, in which UMass placed eighth in an extremely competitive field of 28 teams, the merwomen did not require a lot of consoling after the Harvard meet.

One might think that after narrowly losing the meet head coach Eve Atkinson would be unhappy with her women swimmers, but that was not the case. Atkinson had this to say concerning her swimmers performances against Harvard:

"Taking into consideration the number of illnesses on the team, I was pleased with our performance against Harvard. Many of the swimmers get the job done as far as placing was concerned. We just needed another second place or two third places in the swimming events to win the meet."

It was that close. In terms of percentages, Harvard held a 60-40 edge in first place finishes, while UMass garnered 62 per cent of the seconds and thirds.

Deb Schwartz was the lone triple event winner for the Minutewomen. Schwartz recorded a 2:02.443 time in the 200-yard medley relay event, followed by a 34.606 timing in the 50-yard breast stroke heat, and capped it off with a 30.56 time in the 50-yard butterfly event.

Joining Schwartz in the victorious 200-yard medley-relay heat were teammates Mary Ellen Butler, Rachel Mack and Lise Hembrough.

Butler, in winning the medley-relay and the 50 yard butterfly with a 30.560 time, became the UMass double event winner.

Predictably, the divers were on top of things. Linda Schuld won the one-meter required diving with a point total of 142.98, and Suzy Strobel was victorious off the one-meter optional diving event with 163.90 points.

"The divers turned in top performances," summed up Atkinson.

The merwomen will try to turn things around tomorrow at NOPE, versus Boston University.

BU represents the last home meet for the women swimmers. There will be a dedication for the senior members of the team. The meet itself will start at 2:00 p.m. Lastly, the Easterns will be held March 3-5 at the University of Delaware, the last event of the season for the swimmers.

Pucksters face final foe

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

One of the most frustrating hockey seasons ends tomorrow night for coach Jack Canniff and his Minutemen when they take on Salem State in an away contest at 7:30.

"This season has not only been frustrating for me, but also for the players," said Canniff. "We played a lot of good games and lost. The puck didn't seem to bounce our way."

The puckmen are coming off a 6-5 win over Holy Cross. That victory broke a three-game UMass losing streak.

"Consistency to be up and play a tough game all the time was one of our problems this year," added Canniff.

The Minutemen have a Division II record of 8-10-1 going into tomorrow's game. Overall they are 8-12-1.

"We're a better team than our record indicates," said Canniff. "A lot of things like injuries and the inability to produce goals hurt us this year.

"Most of the time only three people (the Frank Snow-Carl Burns-Mike Merchant line) did the scoring for us," Canniff continued. "That line didn't get any goals in the Holy Cross game. "Other people started to break out of their slumps and score like they knew they could."

Seniors Paul Hurley and Bob McCormack, who both missed the Holy Cross game due to injuries, will attempt to play.

"Salem State is a good team," said Canniff. "They have a good record and a rebound to be tough on their home rink. It should be an interesting game."

The Minutemen have had good luck with Salem State in recent years, winning the last two out of three games.

Awesome Rams invade Boyden

By BOB HASKELL
Collegian Staff

The nationally-ranked wrestling team from the University of Rhode Island, the first New England team ever to be so designated, will invade Boyden Auxiliary Gym tonight at 7:30 to do battle with the Minutemen grapplers. Seldom are UMass fans given an opportunity to see such quality competition.

Rhode Island is ranked 18th in the country, a phenomenal feat in a sport usually dominated by western and midwestern schools. The Rams are 15-2 on the season, with both losses coming against Syracuse University by a total of six points.

"URI is outstanding," said UMass coach Dave Amato before yesterday's practice. "They are without a doubt the best team we'll see all year. They are the top mat power in the east, and are strongly favored to win the New Englands."

The best match of the night figures to be the one pitting UMass heavyweight Dennis Fenton, three-time New England champion, against his opponent in last year's N.E. finals, John Staulo. Fenton won that one, 2-1, but Staulo is 16-1 on this season (to Fenton's 15-0), so anything could happen.

Rugged Larry Otsuka (134 lbs.), 13-2 on the season, will have to cope with Scott Arnel of URI, who has lost only one match this season, and that was by a score of 4-3 to the defending N.E. champ.

At 158 lbs. URI boasts the services of Lee Spiegel, former N.Y. state champ, who displays a season record of 17-1. Kevin Griffin is given the dubious honor of facing Spiegel for the Minutemen.

"Spiegal and Staulo are the top performers for Rhody," said coach Amato, "but they are strong all through their lineup. They're just one heck of a team."

The Minutemen are 6-12 in a season full of ups and downs. At one stretch, they won four of five matches and seemed to be on their way up. With their blend of promising young personnel and seasoned veterans, the grapplers are capable of championship performances on any given night, as evidenced by their impressive victories over Coast Guard and UConn.

Last Tuesday, the matmen came from behind, showing some remarkable poise and character, while shocking the UConn Huskies at Boyden Gym by a score of 24-19.

Amato sees this match as a battle of individual matchups rather than stressing team play.

"This is where we find out how we'll do in the New Englands," Amato explained, "The guys are going to see how they stand up to top-flight competition. We will field our strongest team of the season. Senior Pete Sachon has dropped to 118 lbs. for the match, and Steve Jabaut will be back at 142 lbs. I'm really looking forward to this one."

That's 7:30 tonight, at Boyden Auxiliary Gym; don't miss it. How often does UMass get to host a nationally-ranked team, anyway?

Tracksters await stiff test in NE's

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

Tired of mediocrity, the UMass men's track team will be shooting for national-class times this weekend in the New England Championships at UConn.

More specifically, coach Ken O'Brien will be packing his best runners into the middle and two mile relays in an attempt to qualify those teams for the nationals.

Although having a far from mediocre program, UMass in past NE meets has suffered the distinction of winning as many places as the champion, but only finishing 4th or 5th; because they placed 3rd, 4th, and 5th instead of winning the event or placing second.

According to coach Arnie Morse, defending champ Northeastern is the "clear-cut favorite" to repeat as titleists on Sunday. UConn should probably finish second, said Morse.

"We'll have to set new school and NE meet records to win those relays," said coach Gary King, "but we have the personnel to do it."

In the mile relay, the national qualifying time is 3:15. The Minutemen have run 3:19.5; the school record which was set in the Yankee Conference meet a week ago. Having an excellent shot at breaking not only that mark, but the NE meet record of 3:19.1 is the quartet of Rich Thompson, Mark Healy, John Richards, and Joe Martens.

The two mile relay team will have to run 7:33 to make the nationals. Top time this year is the school record 7:14.4, run in the YanCon's. Chris Farmer, Jim Hunt, Jeff King, and Steve McDougall will be making an all-out effort to achieve the national standard.

The only other events UMass has a chance in for an outright win would be the 440 with John Richards and the high jump with both Joe Martens and Bob Fitzgerald being competitive. Richards has run 48.7 for a relay leg, while Martens and Fitzgerald have jumped 6'8" and 6'7", respectively.

UMass could also pick up a few places in the distance events. In the mile, Matty Wolff, coming off a personal best 4:13.8 will be teaming up with Bob Martin. The two mile will see the backbone of the outstanding cross country team; Frank Carroll, Lou Panaccione, John McGrail and Mike Quinn battling a bunch of sub-nine minute two milers.

All trials will be held on Saturday, with finals in the pole vault, long jump, 35 lb. weight, and two mile being contested as well. The remaining field events and a full program of track events will be held on Sunday.

UMass stalls rallying Rams

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I. — It was just another typical UMass-URI basketball game last night at the Keane Gymnasium.

Nothing fancy mind you, just a two-point thriller played before an overflow, roaring crowd that wasn't decided until the final second of the game when URI forward Sly William's 12-foot baseline jumper bounced off the back side of the rim and into the waiting hands of a UMass defender.

The Minutemen dealt URI a severe blow to its quest for the fourth playoff berth in he ECAC playoffs, by defeating the Rams, 69-67, before 5,836 fans.

UMass certainly didn't have as easy a time with the Rams last night as they did two weeks ago, when the Minutemen ran them out of the Cage, but you could sense through the electricity in the air generated by the rowdy URI fans that the game would go down to the wire.

It was a complete reversal of the first meeting between the two teams. In the first game, the Minutemen had to play without star forward Mike Pyatt who injured his hip in the first half. However, the Minutemen pulled together in Pyatt's absence and easily won the game.

Last night, URI was without it's star point-guard Jiggy Williamson, who was sidelined with an ankle injury he suffered in practice on Wednesday, and it was their turn to pull together.

In the first half it appeared that the Rams filled the void created by Williamson's absence, as they matched the Minutemen basket for basket, sending the standing-room-only crowd into complete hysteria!

However, the Minutemen now 16-9 on the year began to pull away behind some strong inside play of senior forward Jim Town and junior Mike Pyatt. The UMass frontcourt duo combined for 19 first-half points, giving the Minutemen a 38-32 halftime advantage.

But the fireworks were just beginning.

Knowing that the outcome of the game had influence as to whether URI will be selected to the ECAC playoffs, the Rams came out scrapping in the second half led by sophomore transfer center Irv Chatman and forward Sly Williams, who scored a game-high 21 points.

Rhode Island began to flex it's muscles under the boards and in the lane, as Chatman and Williams got the Rams back into the game with some strong rebounding.

Rhode Island tied the game at 46-46 with 17 minutes to go in the game on a Chatman stuff after driving the lane from the top of the key. The URI faithful burst into pandemonium at that point and it seemed as if the momentum had swung to the Rams favor.

However, the Minutemen calmly, amid the furor of the crowd, worked the ball around the Rams' 1-3-1 defense and got hoops from Town on a couple of inside hook shots, and Derick Claiborne found a spot to the left of the foul line and just didn't miss.

But Rhode Island fought back, as Williams and guard Stan Wright matched the Minutemen basket for basket, tying it 52.

At the midway mark of the second half, UMass made its surge as Claiborne, who was high scorer for the Minutemen with 17 points, connected on three consecutive baskets, giving them a 62-56 lead.

Rhody made one last ditch effort with five seconds to go. After UMass' Alex Eldridge sank a free throw to give the Minutemen a 69-67 lead, the Rams worked the ball into Williams who dribbled the ball into the left baseline and put up a 12-foot shot with one second remaining, only to have it bounce off the rim, sending the large crowd quietly home.

"It was a good win for us," UMass coach Jack Leaman said. "This game should give us a good springboard into our league playoffs."

Hoopwomen face Adelphi in regular season finale

By JOHN LOWNEY
Collegian Staff

If you've always meant to view a UMass women's basketball game but never stumbled into Curry Hicks Cage to see one, Saturday night is your last chance, as the Minutewomen close out their regular season schedule in a 5:45 battle with Adelphi.

Tomorrow night's game marks the final Cage appearance of senior forwards Nancy O'Neil and Chris Basile. O'Neil and Basile, who have matured along with the women's basketball program in their four years here, have developed into two of coach Mary Ann Ozdarski's steadiest players.

O'Neil and Basile will join Lu Fletcher, Sue Peters and Sue Henry in the starting lineup as the Minutewomen cruise into post-season play at full physical strength. Fletcher, the Minutewomen's leading rebounder, has recovered well from the sprained ankle she suffered two weeks ago.

Ozdarski summed up her team's physical condition. "We're tired," she said, "but there's no time to rest with the 'second season' coming up."

There's no time for mental rest either, but Ozdarski assures that her team is psyched. "We are still upset that we let that Southern Connecticut game go Saturday night," she said. "We just have to work hard on our fundamentals so that everyone will be playing up to their potential."

Adelphi, which will not participate in the Easterns, will provide a good test for the Minutewomen. Coach Janet Ficke's squad defeated UMass 66-62 last season at the Garden City, Long Island campus.

Adelphi has a young team, but it has good size to prepare the Minutewomen for big tournament foes such as Southern Connecticut and Queens. Captain and point guard Lorrie McGill and 5'10" forward Ada Rivera are the senior leaders for Adelphi.

The results of tomorrow's game will not affect the Minutewomen's rankings in the Easterns, but it is important for UMass to gain some momentum for the playoffs.

Post-season play begins next week when the Minutewomen travel to Bentley College for the Massachusetts State championships. The tournament will feature the same teams as last year as Bridgewater State, Springfield and Northeastern join top-seed UMass to determine the top women's team in the state.

The next step for the Minutewomen will be the Eastern regional playoffs at UConn in two weeks. Although the official pairings will not be released until Sunday, it appears that Southern Connecticut will be top seed with UMass, Queens and Brooklyn contending for the next three spots.

The states and the Easterns are in the future, however, and UMass must worry about Adelphi first.

Gymmen host Owls in campaign closer

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's gymnastics team will close out it's regular season tomorrow with a 2 p.m. meet against Temple in Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

And what an opponent for UMass to end its 10-meet season against. The Owls are in second place in the Eastern Gymnastics League, and sport a 4-0 record.

Tom Kovic leads Temple's attack. He averages 8.8 points per event in all-around competition.

UMass coach Dick Swetman is naturally leery about his team's chances for success.

"It will take a super, super effort by us to win," Swetman said.

The 5-4 Minutemen will be without all-arounder Steve Marks for a second straight meet. He fractured a hand during practice before last Sunday's Springfield meet.

Other injured UMass performers include another all-arounder, Angelo Scuderi, who suffered an injury in warmups prior to the Minutemen's last meet; and John Forshay, who has a chronic knee condition.

As a result, Scuderi will be unable to compete in the all-around, as he will sit out two of the events. But Forshay should be ready for action.

Tomorrow's meet marks the last dual and home meet competition for four UMass seniors. Scuderi, Steve and Paul Marks, and ring specialist Mike DiMuro will all be calling it a career for the Minutemen.

Although tomorrow's competition will be the last regular season activity for the UMass gymmen, post-season action will begin next weekend. The Eastern Regionals are slated to be held at Navy and the Minutemen will be tuning up for them tomorrow.

The winner of the Easterns will go on to the Nationals, but Swetman feels that UMass has little chance of qualifying for them. But several gymnasts, should they fare well next weekend, could represent the Minutement in the nationwide meet for individual honors.

Rutgers takes title

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. (UPI) — James Bailey and Hollis Copeland combined for 46 points in the final game ever to be played in Rutgers' 45-year-old gym, and the Scarlet Knights clinched the Eastern Division crown in the Eastern Collegiate Basketball League with an 87-81 win over Villanova Thursday night.

By virture of the win, Rutgers 18-7 overall and 7-1 in league play, earned a top seed for the conference playoffs beginning March 2 at the spectrum in Philadelphia. The Knights will play UMass in the first round

Espo can't produce miracles

We haven't heard too much about Phil Esposito since he was traded from the Bruins to the Rangers in November of 1975. The Rangers have occupied the celler of the Campbell Conference's Patrick Division since that time and hockey fans are finding themselves in the unaccustomed position of not seeing the name Esposito on top of the NHL scoring list.

Esposito has not transformed the Broadway Blueshirts into the playoff contender that the Rangers brass thought they would become when they acquired the NHL's best scorer. They forgot about one thing. It takes more than one individual to make things happen.

Realizing their error, the Rangers brought in a new coach in the person of former Montreal badman John Ferguson and new players like Ken Hodge, Bill Goldsworthy, Nick Fotiu and rookie scoring sensation Don Murdoch. But things still haven't clicked for the New Yorkers.

"We'll make the playoffs this year," vowed Espo in training camp. "We have a solid team, you'll be hearing from the Rangers this year."

There was reason for optimism earlier in the season. Espo was having a good year (he scored 30 goals for the 10th time in his career, which is second only to Bobby Hull's 31), Murdoch was scoring goals at a phenomenal clip, the goaltending of John Davidson and Giles Gratton was good and Fotiu gave them a muscleman they badly needed. The Rangers had a winning record in mid-January and were right behind Atlanta for the final playoff spot, but fell apart at that stage and went on a long losing streak.

I witnessed a game in Colorado against the Rockies when the Rangers, down 3-0 after one period, came back to tie, 4-4 with Esposito getting the final goal with 37 seconds left in the game. My mind drifted back to those days at Boston Garden as I listened to the PA announcer say "goal Esposito, assist Hodge."

After the game Esposito reaffirmed the statement he made in training camp, when asked if the team's losing record was having an adverse affect on his squad.

"No way!" Esposito stated. "We have a damn good hockey club and we're going to make the playoffs."

Had the Rangers been in the Campbell's Symthe Division, they would have been in first place instead of last at the time. But with Philadelphia, the Islanders and Atlanta in the same group, the Rangers have some pretty tough company.

"Phil's right," said former Bruin Hodge. "We are going to make the playoffs. We have 37 games left. Being in a tough division doesn't bother us. We've got the ninth best record in the NHL, so I'm confident we will be in the playoffs."

Right now the Ranger fans are growing impatient and are starting to boo Hodge and Esposito, blaming them for the team's troubles.

"Hodge has done nothing since coming to New York and Esposito has shown that he can only play on a super team," said one Ranger fan recently.

This is a familiar scene for Hodge, who was the target of many catcalls from Boston hockey fans last year. But Hodge says he was received warmly by the fans when he played his first game in Boston Garden as a Ranger.

"The fans were good to me, they didn't forget," he said. "After all, we built a good hockey club there. I wouldn't say it was a dynasty, but we had two Stanley Cups to show for it."

The Rangers are two points behind Atlanta in the battle for the final playoff spot. The final month of the season will determine if the Rangers will either be participants or spectators during the playoffs.

"One thing's for sure, though," said Hodge. "It'll be tough on the club in our division who doesn't make it."

my son comes to me on sun stirred afternoons
he abandons his bicycle in the shade
by the green door and then as a breathless spirit does rest in the gentle arms of the fading day
childhood's headdress still upon him a bold warrior with sturdy bow in hand come to brush a strand of hair from my eyes,
a tender portrait with a perfected glow
Del Sarto's masterpiece of a child running through a valley swept by the wild thunder storms of summer forever a lover in ruffles of white dancing on my bed
But later on as years lessen such lustre when the canvass has been slashed
by countless vandals or perhaps by just one ace of the art
I will pluck from the landscape
one brittle lily and tuck it in his hair.

I draw a fetus on the inside of your thigh curled tight and sleepy like someone's you stare at my artist hand   withdrawn in mind from body's masterpiece behind the sight of blinking eyes lidded against light behind the scars my pen etches in your flesh or my words burning through your ears

By E. Patrick McQuaid

Yes, I'm calling from Below the Salt, the Fine Arts weekly magazine supplement...we're putting together a special theatre issue for this week and I'm doing an article...just a sidebar thing, feature, you know? Anyway, we're calling up people in-the-business that our readers might recognize and asking them to tell us about the worst performance they've ever seen...I mean that it was soooo bad...I mean sooooo bad it was good! So bad that it just shot right to the top! Like Mel Brook's film The Producers...do you follow?...Oh, and also...your top three plays. Not necessarily performances...some people enjoy reading Hamlet rather than seeing it...that sort of thing.

"It was a vaudeville show," Mark Cuddy told us, UMass graduate now with the City Studio Theatre in Northampton, "The big finale was the company singing 'Be Kind To Fine Feathered Friends Cause A Duck May Be Somebody's Mother' and marching in an American flag motif...fifteen to twenty people marching and singing with a big duck on stage...a costume-duck leading the chorus. It was called 'Murphy's Vaudeville '74'; it was really bad but it was really funny.

"Let's see...my top three; I'd say number one, all the plays that I haven't read or seen; number two, what I'm doing now...and, for a straight answer, number three, Shakespeare, The Tempest."

Fritz Steinway, Director of the Fine Arts Center at the University:

"Something THAT bad I usually try to put out of my memory...but i DO have one musical AND one play that I remember. The musical was a summer stock performance of South Pacific. Now imagine trying to do that piece...good music, good acting...well, they didn't have either one. The worst play was called The Frogs of Spring and it was by Benchly, who I think had something to do with the book Jaws. It was a summer stock in Falmouth, Mass. It was just dreadful. The acting wasn't all that bad but the script was really impossible.

"Anything by the Royal Shakespeare Company is good...Emily Dickinson with Julie Harris. That's REAL top theatre. I saw it in Boston and I saw it at Amherst College. It's beautifully written and she's a superb actress.

"The best thing I've seen in thirty years was a musical called Wait A Minin. It was a musical show, it was ethnic, and it was an all white South African cast. It was entertaining, good acting, good music, well danced...everything! Just a perfect show...it's the best thing I've seen since World War II."

Clive Barnes, New York Times theatre and dance critic:

"The worst play ever...well, that would have to be a thing called The Olaf Response. The best moment came when they took their clothes off because they had to stop talking!

"It was a family production and it was UNbelievable. It had something to do with the superman...though you couldn't tell that by the cast...JUST because some fellow sinks twenty-five years into his production doesn't give HIM the right to bore ME for two and a half hours!

"Pain and pleasure...it's like a toothache...you remember but you CAN'T bring it back...thankgod. I don't think I'd care to comment on the better things I've seen."

Alan Light, the director of the Arts Council and the Fine Arts Concert Hall doesn't like to read drama; "You must see it!" he emphasized. His top favorites are Three Penny Opera by Kurt Weil and Bertolt Brecht, Candide by Leonard Bernstein, and Auturo Ui by Brecht.

"I don't read shows...I see them. Most people don't like reading Shakespeare but they do enjoy seeing one of his plays...I remember reading quite a bit as a student and being bored all the time.

"Applause...a Broadway production. A great movie called All About Eve that they made into a play...They ruined it. A fabulous comedy, brilliant movie that they just made into a dog!"

The Chairperson of the Amherst College Dramatic Arts Department has seen some "horrendous" plays in the past. Helene Keyssar couldn't think of one so "devestatingly bad that I enjoyed it. I can think of some bad performances...I've walked out on some...but nothing that bad. Right now I'm more concerned with making the one that I'm working on now a good one...it's a hard question to ask me.

"My three favorites...Endgame by Beckett...Lear, Shakespeare's Lear...and third...Woyzeck by Bruckner."

Avis Yuni graduated from the University last May and is now the Media Representative for StageWest in Springfield. Most of the plays she's seen during the last few years have all been in the Amherst area; a great number of them on campus.

"A couple of things come to mind," she said, "But out of this area I'd say Good Time Charlie; I think that was the name of it. It closed on Broadway and didn't run very long. I saw it in June of '75...it was Joel Grey's last before bringing back Cabaret...anyway the lead woman was a wonderful dancer but as a singer she was a monotone...a horrendous singer! A monotone is just not what you want to listen to.

"I'm a musical fanatic," she continued, "my top three plays...let's see, there was one at UMass not too long ago that was very fine; After the Fall by Arthur Miller...Company, with the music by Stephen Sondheim...and the third...let's see, something I could watch forever...or read forever; there's so many plays...The Tooth of Crime by Sam Shepard. It just closed here; I hope that doesn't sound like a piece of public relations but I DID enjoy it."

A number of other people, both in and out of the theatre business were asked about the worst performance they had ever come across. The titles weren't the same but many offered a similar response. Placing their tongue between their teeth they made a noise, while gesturing with the right thumb, that would be extremely difficult to reproduce here in print.

Dance / Yamini Krishnamurti — South Indian Dance John Wilson — Dance Philosophy

By Risa Graubard

A few weeks ago in the Village Voice, Deborah Jowitt wrote an article on Ethnic Dance. She mentioned that she had toured the West under the name Toguri. She touched on the plight of the talented ethnic dancers, non-natives of their adopted cultures. No one could believe they could be that good.

Yamini Krishnamurti does not have that problem. Generally acclaimed as the foremost exponent of South Indian dance — Bharata Natyam, she gave a virtuoso performance last Thursday night at Smith College.

Bharata Natyam and Kuchipudi were the two forms of Indian classical dancing presented. The 2,000 year old art form originated in the temples in India. The ancient text, Natya Sastra (generally placed between the 4th and 1st centuries BC), handed down by the sage Bharata Muni defines the Hindu dance form, complete with stage craft, dimensions and architecture. Little of the dance has changed over the centuries due to belief in its origin from the god Brahma.

This Natyam (dance-drama) became a holy ritual for presentation to the gods. The dance of the devadasis was performed by women dedicated to the temple in early childhood, rigorously trained and symbolically married to the deity of the temple. Nritta is pure abstract dance, an expression of rhythm and melody through diverse geometric shapes, precise handwork, and continuous movement of the feet. Nritya, the expository dance, is more emotional with stylized hand and facial gestures.

Kuchipudi is the more romantic form. Inspired by the worship of Vishnu and Krishna, it was originally taught only to male actors. Kuchipudi is the rendering of traditional myths and legends through dance-drama and song.

Krishnamurti brought four musicians with her who sat down stage on mats surrounded by flowers. The relationship between dancer and musician was extremely subtle and intricate. A flute, drum, an accordian-like instrument and a vocalist constituted her accompaniment — the timing almost ungraspable to these unexposed Western ears.

What was so phenomenal about watching Krishnamurti was that every gesture was loaded with implications. In the use of the eyes, eyebrows, face and hands, all extremely stylized we have no Western equivalent. The sense of space and weight was very different from ours. A use of angular planes, never jutting out into space or using extension. I felt a sense of containment yet great passion and sensuality.

The only similarity to ballet could be seen in the use of posing. But unlike ballet she went up in order to come down, very grounded and not the reverse.

It is interesting to note the influence that Oriental art and religion has had on Western art. They say that Martha Graham is very well understood in the East Orient.

John Wilson was advertised as a philosopher of dance. Infinitely curious about what the art philosophy of dance could be, I showed up at Mt. Holyoke College last Wednesday night, only to be greeted by the opening remark that there really wasn't a philosophy of dance, per se. Undaunted, I awaited eagerly to hear how Wilson had arrived at that conclusion.

He noted that there were two reasons for an organism to move — pleasure and enlightenment. His two techniques for teaching movement are called "mosaic" and "gestalt."

The mosaic approach takes different pieces, building a class or a dance. Interruptions for kinesthetic feedback are made and the work is both analytical and athletic.

The gestalt approach works with larger perceptual movement qualities. A theme is developed and sustained. He works in progressions of images — auditory, visual and tactile. Technique is used but not intended.

He gave a brief overview of aesthetics from Aristotle to Suzanne Langer, and ended with a note to all dancers seeking their center. Apparently there are three ways of finding it. Firstly, sobbing. Secondly, throwing up. And finally, most successfully, according to Wilson, a quite funny man, laughing.

'...and then a Pink Lady jumped out of a Golden Cadillac and grabbed my...'

By Alice E. Horner

Gone are the innocent days of youth, arrived is the daze of sophisticated mixology. Where once the primeval draft would suffice, now a Pandora's Box of mixed troubles tempt in all their frothy, frosty glory. Not the least of their appeal is found in their names, which most certainly deserve their own special niche in the auspicious annals of great literature. Along with the familiar "Grasshopper", "Rusty Nail", and "Salty Dog" exist the likes of "Montreal Club Bouncer," "Button Hook Cocktail," and "Boomerang." In honor of these anonymous genuises who provide us with such entertaining reading matter during weekly bar-crawling, we humbly submit the following tale.

The Teetotaler's Nightmare

I was walking down the street one day when a —— jumped out of a —— and grabbed my ——. Embarrassed, I ran and hid behind the nearest ——, watching for the —— to leave. When I was satisfied of its none too hasty exit, I stood up, brushed the —— off my knees and made a momentous decision. This town was much too dangerous, I would take the first —— to ——.

No sooner said than done. Safety strapped into my comfortable seat I breathed a sigh of relief; only to be startled by the entrance of a six-foot —— who took the seat across from mine. I glanced at my neighbor surreptitiously, curious as he pulled a —— out of his briefcase. "Excuse me, sir", said I, "but do you always carry a —— with you?" He cast a look of disdain my way and replied "Of course," while rubbing his —— with his forefinger. He then proceeded to take a bite of a ham sandwich, first liberally dousing it with some —— and wiping his mouth with a ——. So much for conversation.

Just then a drunken —— sprawled across my lap, muttering, "Too many ——s, too many ——s." Not sure of what to do, I threw a —— in his face, hoping that the shock would sober him up. Unfortunately, he took great offense to my action, and cursed — calling me a —— —— of suspicious parentage who co-habitied with my —— and was no better than a ——!

I was crushed, literally and figuratively.

But the six-foot —— surprisingly came to my rescue, shooting ——s through a blow-gun at my inebriated lap-warmer. Leaping up, the drunken —— immediately challenged the six-foot —— to a duel to the death, using ——s. Aside from my initial horror, I was reasonably interested on the outcome of the fight, on a purely scientific level, of course. The six foot —— snarled, showing huge, sharp teeth. His opponent responded by pulling a —— from his side holster and aiming it with frightening accuracy. He pulled the trigger and a —— fired out into the —— of the six-foot ——. Great clumps of his —— fell to the ground, as did the six-foot ——.

Oh, guilt! Oh, hindsight! Why had I stood idly by, acting as if my hands were tied back with ——, my mouth filled with ——? What should I do? Acting quickly, I screamed.

I was still screaming when my roommate awoke me. "Calm down!" she said. "You fool, you've been mixing your liquor, what's this about a ——, a —— and a ——?!" "Me?", I queried incredulously, "I never touch the stuff..."

I Am Carious Yellowed

By Pia Talabach and Doris Doherty

Nutrition has importance to good teeth, and teeth are vital parts of one's body. They can be nourished or malnourished in many of the same ways. Therefore, it is indicative that a close relationship exists between your dietary habits and the health of your teeth.

It has been cited that dental caries (tooth decay) can be alleviated through nutritional measures. Two minerals which prove to be of vital importance are calcium and flouride. Though their ingestion is important in their proper amounts in later years of life, a growing concern is the intake of the growing child.

First looking at calcium, one major function is in relation to tooth formation. Calcification of deciduous teeth begins during the twentieth week of fetal life and is accomplished shortly before eruption. Permanent teeth begin to calcify between the ages of three months to three years, where as wisdom teeth, the last to erupt, may not begin to calcify until ages eight to ten. Since teeth don't have the ability to repair themselves once they have erupted, there is no further need for a dietary source of calcium to maintain or repair teeth. A deficiency of calcium during formative period for teeth may be reflected as a weakness in structure with an increase in the susceptability to tooth decay.

Fluoride has been of growing conern, especially with new acts to fluoridate drinking water. The level used is minute, only one part fluoride per million parts water. It has been proven an effective preventive measure in reducing the incidence of caries among young children when fluoridated water is consumed throughout the period of tooth formation. Fluoride is deposited in the teeth in the form of Fluoroapetite, a hard crystaline material which is much resistent to decay than is the hydroyapetite which is normally present. This protection, when established in childhood, provides a continuousing resistence in adult years, also. This is probably one of the most effective and least expensive ways in dealing with the problem of dental caries.

Another major area of concern is the consumption of highly refined carbohydrates, particularly sucrose. These tend to promote the formation of dental plaque by serving as food for the awaiting micro-organisms. Carbohydrate containing foods that tend to stick to teeth for a period of time present the greatest problem because of the length of time they are present in the mouth. An example of these would be candies such as toffee or caramels. If this carbohydrate is eaten with some other type of food that tends to cleanse the teeth, such as an apple, the effects may not be as severe.

Although an increase in sugar may increase caries activity, the risk is greater, as stated above, if the sugar is contained in a substance that tends to stick to the teeth. It also has become increasingly evident that the time at which it is eaten may be a contributing factor. By this we mean, whether the sugar has been eaten with a meal or in between. If eaten with a meal, the other foods consumed may contribute to the cleaning of the teeth, and not allow the build up of the carbohydrate containing foods on the teeth.

So it becomes increasingly evident that if good dietary habits are established early in life, dental caries could be markedly reduced. The low incidence of dental decay will give you all the reason you need to smile.

THEATRE

CST
City Studio Theatre

By Tyla L. Michelove

"There is a mentality that says, well, people,. want to go to movies, theatre is abnormal and is going to be put on a special events calendar, not with the everyday. That's why we want to do theatre every weekend." So says Mark Cuddy, Managing Director of City Studio Theatre in Northampton.

The theatre was started in June, 1976 by Paris Finley and Margaret Van Sant, one-time students at the University. Since this beginning it has undergone changes in terms of management and location, but never in terms of quality theatre.

At prese[illegible] theatre is at 25 Main Street in Northampton, next to Fitzwill[illegible] started in the large room on the fourth floor of this building, but was moved down a flight for a while, into much smaller quarters, there doing small, intimate pieces such as Awake and Sing, Old Times, Home Free!, Purgatory and Two Medieval French Farces. Since September they have had the larger room, which accommodates their growing audience.

Depending on the arrangement of the mobile benches and chairs, the room can seat 120 to 180 people. It is here that City Studio Theatre has presented Play With A Tiger, Lenny, Chicago, Who Killed My Bald Sister Sophie? and Tango. The theatre has also played host to several performing companies that do not get a chance to tour the Valley. These companies include the Celebration Mime, Reality Theatre and The Pocket Mime Theatre.

After a time as a five-person collective, the theatre has formalized into definite management roles. Margaret Van Sant is the Production Director, Daniel Gwozdz, the Technical Director and Mark Cuddy is the Managing Director. However, the theatre has within it a lot of people with a special kind of energy. These people work for nothing or next to nothing to make sure that this little theatre survives.

The theatre itself is one large rectangular room with an undefined floor space for a stage. This lends itself to an openness in play choice and style and has been well-used in the past by this group.

Mark Cuddy says, "There are so many people touching and feeling theatre, sort of in it, but not really doing it. Thinking they're doing, they have some power over it, but there are only a few people I can think of who are really taking risks and trying to do something." He later added that he felt that City Studio Theatre was "doing what they want to do. There is energy and potential there, an openness and a willingness to take risks. There are a lot of possibilities."

"We have a visibility problem...and we have to expand our audience. We are getting the kind of people who don't mind sitting on bleachers, who don't mind some inconveniences," Cuddy says.

These are the working people of the Valley. That is why the theatre has such low ticket prices. On Thursdays and Sundays tickets cost only $2.50, but the peak days are still a low $3.00 for Friday and Saturday performances. The curtain is always at 8 p.m., and you can call the theatre at 584-3978 for more information.

"We don't want to do, necessarily, say, a musical or something to make a lot of money off of, just to support other shows. We want to be consistent." Mark Cuddy's attitude seems to be reflected in the rest of the group. This is the kind of theatre that deserves to survive in the Valley. This is the kind of theatre that deserves to be supported.

University Ensemble Theatre

By James F. B. Sawyer

To many people, college theatre consists of would-be actors and actresses from zoology, astronomy, English or some other non-theatre field of study, nearly ineptly performing Shakespeare or some other worn-out playwright and then moving on into their own lives, looking fondly back on their school days in the theatre.

While this may not be a myth on other college campuses, it certainly is on ours.

The University Ensemble Theatre consists mainly of university students who plan to enter the theatre world in one or another of the many areas of endeavor involved in professional theatre production. From stage lighting to set construction and from role-playing to play writing, UET takes most of its talent from the undergraduate and graduate theatre department here on campus.

Funding also comes from the Department of Theatre, along with ticket subscriptions and box office ticket sales.

Because of this departmental involvement, many outsiders have the feeling that the Department of Theatre, along with its stepchild Ensemble theatre, represent a megalith, inaccessible to valid and talented people from outside the theatre department.

But this is simply another myth that is in need of being dissolved. The University Ensemble Theatre utilizes university and not simply university theatre personnel. Open auditions are announced and held in order to bring in possible talent from outside the theatre department. Granted, maybe theatre majors will have a better understanding of the requirement of a chosen role, but a physics major will be able to understand and work with quantum mechanics more aptly than a theatre major, too.

And UET does not always exclude other theatre allies. The Mother of Us All, an opera by Gertrude Stein and Virgil Thomson, will be produced by the cooperative efforts of the Theatre, Music and Dance Departments.

Performing in the Rand Theatre of the Fine Arts Center, this will be the first opera produced in the theatre and will run Thursday through Saturday, February 24, 25, 26 and March 3, 4, 5.

Mother will be followed closely by the UET's production of Lanford Wilson's The Hot Baltimore, to be performed nightly from March 11 through 19 in the FAC's Curtain Theatre.

The University Ensemble Theatre uses writing talent as well. Michael Melton, a graduate student in the theatre department, has written a play entitled The Executioner's Tragedy. As its final production, running nightly from May 4 through 11, UET will present The Executioner's Tragedy in the Curtain Theatre. The performance of May 4 will be a world premier.

The University Ensemble Theatre provides valid and entertaining theatre experience both for its performers and for its audiences. Since the Curtain Theatre has such an intimate seating arrangement (110 seats), it is recommended that interested parties call 545-3511 as soon as possible for tickets.

StageWest

By James F. B. Sawyer

StageWest is the only resident, professional theatre in Massachusetts. With this going for them, the people at StageWest, on the grounds of the Eastern States Exposition in West Springfield, have come through to this, their tenth season, with a reputation for fine work and accessible, professional production.

A non-profit organization, StageWest makes most of the money needed for its productions through grants, contributions, ticket subscriptions, by sponsoring acting workshops and through box office ticket sales. It is a member of the League of Resident Theatres (LORT) and acquires most of the acting and directing talent it utilizes through the Actors' Equity Association, a professional union.

What does "resident, professional theatre" mean? By resident, it is meant not simply that StageWest is in Massachusetts, but that the shows produced at StageWest are also residents; they start from scratch, right down to the sets, and grow from there. "Professional" means not only that the actors who play at StageWest are paid for their work, but that most of them are affiliated with the Equity union.

But theatre per se is not the only offering of StageWest. A special writers' workshop called Stage Two affords new writers the opportunity to be promoted by a professional theatre group through staged readings of their works. The readings give writers an idea of how their scripts actually sound, rather than look on the page.

The readings are open to StageWest subscribers who may participate in writer-critic-audience discussions of the readings.

Acting workshops at different levels are also offered. Some of these are free while others require an entrance fee.

For student actors and stagecraft people, StageWest now offers a limited number of non-paid student internships. Students have the opportunity to work under and among professionals in the many fields involved in production.

With special student rates and varying box office prices, StageWest brings to the Pioneer Valley a variety of plays and theatre experiences unavailable elsewhere in Massachusetts.

Though StageWest may not be Broadway, it's not as far away, either.

Roister Doisters

By Michael P. Doran

Selling tickets in the Bowker Auditorium box office last Thursday afternoon was a tired and overworked Sheila Mathews, President of the Roister Doister Drama Society "What do you want to know?", she asked between taking reservations. I thought the history of the group was appropriate.

The group started in 1910, on January 10, under the name of the Mass. Agricultural College Dramatic Society. This makes them the oldest continuing college drama society in the nation. In 1912 they presented the play Ralph Roister Doister, written in 1552 by Nicholas Udall, and adopted their present name that year. They have produced an average of three plays a year ever since, with the exception of the years 1917 to 1919, this because women did not act in their plays until 1920 and the men were otherwise engaged. The first production with women was Witching Hours, directed by the group's mentor Prof. Francis Prentiss Rand. The nature of the productions changed under Prof. Rand, as he put it," allowing women in the plays enabled us to do more than just farce." He also wrote plays for the group and induced them to hold original one act play competitions.

Judging from the old newsletters and memos in the archives he was a jovial and well liked person. He is remembered on campus by the auditorium that bears his name in the F.A.C. When he retired he was followed by Prof. Niedeck, who is still teaching in the Theatre Department. Under their new advisor the students took a more active role in running things and today the group is entirely student directed, under the R.S.O. guidelines.

The plays the group has produced in the past vary largely. In 1933 they staged an original "musical extravaganza" called Let's Go Nutty, complete with piano and accordion accompaniment and varsity drag dance numbers. In 1970 the Roister Doisters put on Waiting For Godot, and have staged Shakespeare to modern American drama in between. They first used the Bowker Auditorium in 1916, which is now the site of their present production, Flowers For Algernon. Since that time they have put on As You Like It outside in a wooded scene, a unknown production in a livestock arena (hopefully after the cow judging), and medieval Miracle plays on pageant wagons.

Membership, participation in workshops and casting are always open to anyone in the Five College area. "The Roister Doisters' philosophy is to stage modern drama with people from all majors who have a talent." Sheila feels this is an advantage over the University Theatre as no one gets preference for a part or a position on the crew. The workshops given in lighting, makeup and costume are also aimed at giving people with little experience in theatre a chance to participate and learn. The only things required of a member are attendance at meetings and participation in one out of four Roister Doister activities.

The club's future plans include a production in the Spring and next Fall. The Spring production will hopefully be a mixture of Children's Theatre and Improvisation. Anyone interested in participating may contact the group through the R.S.O. or attend their future meetings.

UM/MTG

By David Ambos

The UMass Music Theatre Guild was founded in 1936 when three separate groups, the Men's Glee Club, the Women's Glee Club and the Orchestra at the University combined for the purpose of producing a Gilbert and Sullivan operetta, "Trial by Jury." The group went on to produce a Gilbert and Sullivan Operetta each year for the next eight years.

In 1944, the group began to do other operettas, and officially became the Operetta Guild. In 1948, the Guild began producing Broadway musicals, which have since become their staple, and in 1970 changed their name to the UMass Music Theatre Guild.

In 1977 the Guild celebrates its 41st birthday, doing 57 productions in 40 years, including numerous collegiate premieres such as "Brigadoon," "South Pacific," and "Bells are Ringing," and the premiere of an original musical.

The Guild now does two full musical productions each year. This spring's production will be the musical, "Godspell."

Karen White, the president of the Guild, described the purpose of the Guild as primarily, "...promoting musical theatre production, and thereby offering opportunities in all phases of production for those interested in such experience." The membership is open to all people in the Five-College Area. Theatre experience among members in the group ranges from little or none to work with summer stock and professional companies. "The variety in background is beneficial to the Guild in that it offers a wide opportunity for both teaching and learning," said White.

The Guild is a University R.S.O. group, and it is the only such group devoted exclusively to the promotion of musical theatre. "We are not part of the University Theatre Department, or the Fine Arts Council," said White, "Nor are we trying to compete with these or any other theatre groups in the area. What we are trying to do is produce the best musical theatre we can. Sometime we don't have the facilities or equipment we need, but we find a way to do or get what is needed. Sometimes we have to improvise."

Working together as a group has always been important to the Guild. In past productions, there have been as many people as seventy in the cast, and as many as three hundred people working on a production. Past productions have even included cooperative ventures with other colleges in the area. "I think two of the best experiences the Guild can offer are those of independent thinking and of cooperation," said White, "we have to solve our own problems and be able to think ahead. Resourcefulness and making the most of our assets is important. One must also realize his or her own limitations. It's at this point that cooperation is the key. We must work together to succeed. Through cooperation, gaps can be filled; what one person can't do, another may be capable of doing. When a mistake is made, there is no magician to make it disappear. We must face the problem together, solve it. It isn't always easy, we aren't always right, but we aren't about to give up trying." Forty-one years of such effort are not something to ignore.

The UMass Music Theatre Guild will present "Godspell," or, "The Gospel According to St. Matthew" on March 31st, April 1-3 in Bowker Auditorium in Stockbridge Hall, once again bringing music and theatre to the hall as it has been doing for the past forty-one years.

Amherst College

By James F. B. Sawyer

The Amherst College Dramatic Arts Department's productions are, if not always preeminent, ambitious to say the least. Witness Amherst's soon-to-be-performed production of William Shakespeare's The Tempest.

Paul Steinberg, a free-lance set designer, has taken this concept and tossed in a bit of magic of his own. Symbolism can establish residence elsewhere. Steinberg has engineered a translation of the Kirby Memorial theatre proscenium with 58 tons of sand. As a backdrop and as a physical ether for the "divers spirites" to travel in and over, Steinberg has provided hundreds of square feet of hemp netting.

For those unfortunates who are unfamiliar with this classic, the entire play comes to us on or in the area of a small, outwardly desert island. The island is actually inhabited by a banished Duke—sorcerer and his daughter, along with myriad spirit servants, diverse conjurations and the creature Caliban, a son-of-a-witch.

Nine carpet-covered cardboard "trees" provide still more medium for the spirits and humans on the island to act and interact in.

Directing this staging of what has been termed Shakespeare's tribute to his own dramatic profession, is Helene Keyssar, Chairperson of the Dramatic Arts Department and the only female department head on the Amherst campus.

Keyssar cites the theatrical magic inherent in this play about magic and conjectured tribute to the world of theatre.

"The magic (in the play)..." she says, "is not the magic of a fairy tale, but the magic of human movement and imagination, including images we might tend to think of as primitive."

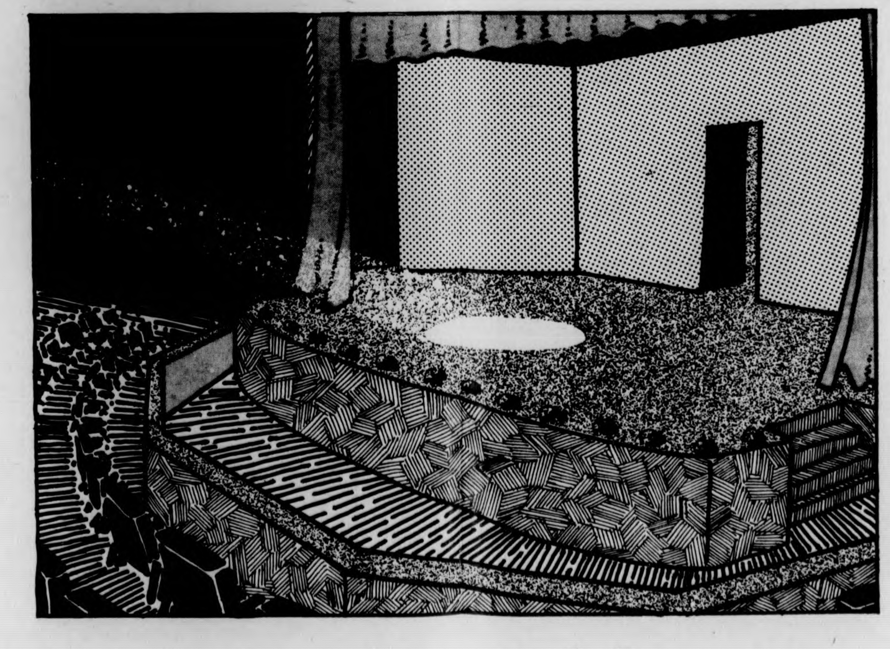
Using talent from the Five-College area as well as from the Amherst College Masquers, The Tempest promises an evening of profuse delight, professing the aptitude of the Amherst College performers for pleasing an appreciative public.

Still more theatre is available on the Amherst College campus in the Fairweather Theatre. A blackbox theatre, the Fairweather is the home for experimental theatre work and student productions and rehearsals.

Movable bleachers here provide for eminent flexibility in productions run in the Fairweather. Audiences can range widely in size from its 100 capacity down to more intimate numbers.

This flexibility in the audience size also adapts itself well to the needs of various types of performances. For small audiences, more stage space is available. The bleachers can serve equally well for theatre in the round as for traditional audience arrangement.

Though Amherst College's productions run fewer and farther between than many would prefer, Pioneer Valley audiences would most assuredly be the less fortunate without their contribution to the Valley theatre experience. The time spent between productions is far from aimless and only affords ever higher levels of professionalism and inspirational theatre appreciation.



Smith College Drama

By Kevin Turcotte

One of the major problems affecting Smith College Theatre is being caused by Title IX legislation which prohibits discrimination based on sex at a graduate school level.

Because of Title IX, the Smith theatre department has had to "suspend" their all male graduate program.

Until recently, this program has supplied most of the male leads for Smith productions.

As Kiki Smith, the recently elected chair of the theatre department at Smith explained, "The inclusion of women in the graduate program would only discriminate against undergraduate women at Smith," making it much harder for the undergraduates to receive good roles in any of the productions.

Kiki Smith, who has been teaching at Smith for three years will assume the duties of department chair on February 28.

Kiki Smith said, "I was made aware of Title IX in January. The lawyers recommended that we suspend the program."

"We try to find plays that use a lot of women," said William E. Hatch, the current chair of the Smith theatre department.

Outlining a brief history of Smith Drama, Hatch said that some form of drama has existed at Smith "almost from the beginning of the college. Of course (in the earlier days) the women played both male and female roles."

A solution that would hopefully avoid a return to the practices of yesteryear because of a lack of males was discussed by Kiki Smith.

"We'd really like to encourage the strong sense of Five-College cooperation. We've retreated into ourselves. We intend to pursue more of an interest in the other schools. We have problems here that Holyoke, Amherst or UMass have solved already," said Smith.

Despite the current problems both Kiki Smith and Hatch are satisfied with the drama department at Smith.

"We are very lucky to have a theatre committee mostly made of alumni. They've arranged meetings with the top people in New York TV and the top people in regional theatre," Kiki Smith said.

Thirteen field trips have already brought Smith drama students in contact with different alumni, "names" and theatre people in New York City

Kiki Smith has only praise for the Alumni, "They're devoted to Smith...of course they're an invaluable resource."

Both Kiki Smith and Hatch also have nothing but praise for Smith's theatre complex, which was completed in 1968.

"We have amazing equipment," Smith said.

"It's ideally suited for Smith in its size and facilities," she added.

"There is one problem, some people feel that students are being trained in a facility they'll never see again when they leave here. It's too ideal," Hatch said.

"We're slightly understaffed to manage it thoroughly, though," Smith said.

Even at its $5 million dollar price tag, Hatch said, "It's a bargain."

New Is Not Enough

Mount Holyoke Lab Theatre

By Scott Haas

"Make it new", insisted Ezra Pound. He was writing about poetry, but his remark pertains to the craft of theatre as well. Pound stressed the need for art to be modern, experimental, risky, and important. He also felt that there could be no proper understanding of the modern without the context of the traditional. Mount Holyoke follows Pound's adage up to a point.

The theatre puts on four plays a year, selected from a broad range of sixteen categories such as, "Classical", "Musical", "Modern European", "Shakespeare", "Very Contemporary", and so on. The titles are submitted by anyone interested, with final decisions made by the theatre faculty and two elected students (from a group of theatre majors). As Mr. Oliver Allyn, head of the Theatre Arts and Speech department, stated, "Any generation of students here will have a chance to see an entire cycle of theatre."

In the Fall of this year, Antigone and Company were presented. This Spring, Tiger At the Gates and Toys In the Attic will open. Toys In the Attic, written by Lillian Hellman, will be produced by students in all aspects.

Of course, Mt. Holyoke theatre is not "just playing around." At the school there are now over 260 students enrolled in theatre courses, seven full faculty, two full staff, and about 15 majors each year. A scant twenty years ago, the department had two staff members, two courses, and was a unit of the English department.

The theatre is housed in the splendid lab theatre building, moved into in 1966.

Where Mt. Holyoke falls just short of Pound's prescription for Art is in its lack of more intensive student involvement. This is not really the fault of the department. Students are involved in all aspects of play production, from building sets to striking sets. Still, there has not been a student written play for years. None have been submitted for years. Nor are there as many plays produced by students as the department "would like to do." And while students gain a vital sense of tradition, few plays in recent years have been modern — like any written by Simon Gray, Tom Stoppard, or the even much, much less known playwrights working today.

Tiger At the Gates will be presented March 11-15 and Toys In the Attic May 5-8. It is probably too late for this season, but for the future, thespians should note that open auditions are the rule.

The Wreck: A Romance
By John Schneider
Directed By Sharon Ott
Hampden Student Center for the Performing Arts
February 17, 1977

By Dail Middleton

While it is far from an earth-shattering experience, The Wreck: A Romance nonetheless has the potential to be a very good play.

It is the portrait of a fisherman only satisfied with life when he escapes into his private world of perfection. He fools himself into thinking that the moments he spends fishing, alone and master of his surroundings, give him enough contentment to last a lifetime, but as the work progresses he finds these interludes of happiness are not enough.

The realization of his less than perfect life is a burden to a man who so many times before has escaped the truth, and searching for a place to hide, he hopes to find comfort in the imaginary world of his dreams.

Although the dream vs. reality problem is not a revolutionary concept to theatre, the way it is put into effect is what separates a play from a work of art and unfortunately for this production, interpreting such an abstract idea is a task too complex for this one-act play. The drama of a man so tortured by his existence that he reverts to a world of imagination is a slice of life needing more of an explanation than this one act play can yield.

The fisherman is soon aware that he cannot justify anything through dreaming, and for an instant the character surfaces as a complete personality. As he grasps at all the realities of life, he discovers that there is "nothing heroic about looking at your wreck in public," and rather than compete with facts, he returns to his fantasy and rearranges the details, content with finding his only happiness in dreams.

A mob of underlying themes about society, loneliness, and the ability to make a choice, only cloud the importance of the dream sequences and jumping from one abstraction to another with little or no lead-in does nothing more than confuse.

Few props, each filled with importance, add to the meaning of the play and visual qualities that explain obscurities in the script are a help in getting the point across. The fisherman's world of reality up front, close enough to touch and the world of fantasy further back, partially hidden by whisps of curtain, draw an imaginary line of understanding. Silhouettes of ghosts that haunt him, secretly dancing behind the curtain, give another dimension to his troubled past.

Effective music lends a hand in setting the stage for the production. Frequently taking the part of a narrator, the music dictates the atmosphere doing more than its part in creating the mood.

Despite a sometimes cluttered presentation of man as he copes with his personal conflicts, the acting ability of the Theatre X Ensemble is the key ingredient that keeps the production together. In creating a universe of feeling through movement and epxression, it is obvious that it is more than the backbone of the play, clearly making up in talent what lacks in the script. As an alternative to standard theatre, this abstract representation is entertaining. But the life-line to any production is a solid story and no amount of talent or technical engineering can shade a weak script. So for those who feel the need of understanding every detail to seize the full meaning of a play, this production is incomplete.

COVER STORY

Some Midsummer's Magic

A Midsummer Night's Dream
Boston Shakespeare Company
Directed by Janet Buchwald
1st and 2nd Church of Boston
Thru March

By James F.B. Sawyer

What happens when human beings get mixed up in the revels of fairies? What happens when fairies get mixed up in the revels of human beings? In Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream, both sides get extremely mixed up. And in the Boston Shakespeare Company's production of this classic, the outcome is a night of magic.

On an otherwise plain stage, four foot-wide strips of cloth ran from the stage up thirty feet. With gold on one side and sequinned and sparkled black on the other, and with an occasional helpful fairy or two, the scene was transformed from the palace in Athens to the woods nearby; from sunny day to starry night. A ten-foot wide backdrop of the same color scheme also helped in this transformation, along with functioning as a curtain for Titania, the fairy queen's bower.

With what is now the near standard practice of doubling the parts of the monarchs of both the human and fairy kingdoms, as well as translating the "rude mechanicals" into graceful fairy servants, the Boston players still have managed to achieve a certain freshness in their presentation.

This freshness sings out at the close of the final act, when Oberon, Titania, and all the fairy company disperse throughout the theatre house to issue Oberon's blessing for the newlyweds. The freshness is that, while the script seems to call for Oberon to bless the House of Theseus and company, Sterling Swann, the BSC's Oberon—Theseus, blesses the house who are sitting, enthralled.

Swann's Thesus—Oberon had the unbalanced effect that would have been obvious had the two parts been played by different actors; his Theseus seemed stiff and nearly sterile, while his Oberon had vitality and zest. When the body went through a costume change, the actor's character change far outdistanced it.

S. Proctor-Gray as Philostrate—Puck performed excellently, though she was the only performer on stage whose transition from human to fairy world was gummed up by make-up. No matter how well her Puck costume fit under the Philostrate costume, her Puckish face gave her away. But other than a slightly forced gleeful laugh, this was Proctor-Gray's only difficulty.

From the passionate Titania, Queen of Fairyland, to the fiery Hippolyta, Queen of the Amazons, Catherine Rust plays both parts equally as if they were her true nature. Her drug induced love for Bottom, a mutated mechanical, comes across without the slightest hint of counter-nature.

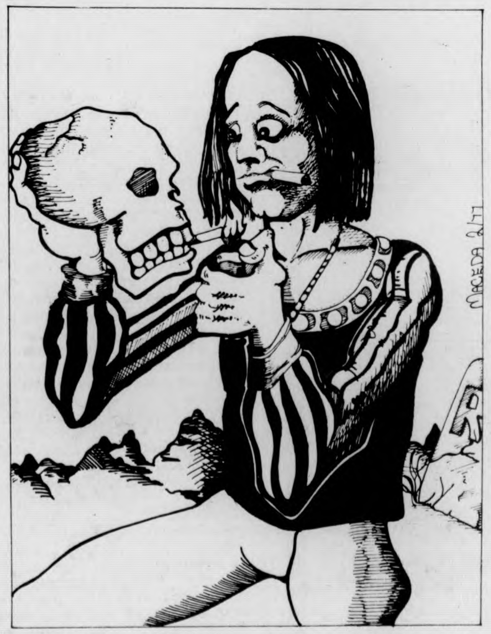
All of the players were equally suited to their parts, with few, momentary exceptions. But one player in particular made his presence more than known. Ramon Ramos as Bottom the weaver hammed and hee-hawed his way through the part as if Shakespeare, more than three hundred years ago, had him in mind when he wrote it. The audience applauded and then sat forward in silent expectation each time Ramos stepped out onstage.

The music of Susan Shore and Robert Fiorentino wove closely throughout the production, filling in any would-be pulls in the fabric of the play.

At any price, the Boston Shakespeare Company, and especially their production of A Midsummer Night's Dream is worth experiencing. No reading of any Shakespearean work can have the effect that seeing the script come to life in their hands does. For ticket information, call (617)267-5600.

Shakespeare in Paperback

SHAKESPEARE
by Anthony Burgess
Penguin Books, New York
272 pps
$4.95 Illustrated



By E. Patrick McQuaid

The paperback re-issue of Anthony Burgess's Shakespeare has appropriately arrived in time for our special issue on theatre. Who else but the Bard could grace our cover and who else but Anthony Burgess could be so bold as to critique the first performance of Hamlet! Indeed Burgess must be "CVRST" for it is more than bones that he has moved here.

In chapter fifteen, "Royal Deaths", the author reconstructs the outward details of an Elizabethan stage performance and also delves into what the audience would have "heard" pointing out the centuries of change that English pronunciation has undergone since Shakespeare made his debut. As a fictitious reviewer he comments on Shakespeare's own acting abilities as well:

"Hamlet, censuring the Danes for their drunkenness, is in danger of becoming dull. Good, the attention of the groundlings is wandering, there are some coughs. Now into that dullness the Ghost thrusts himself again, and the growing inattention is jolted awake. The Ghost beckons Hamlet away, which means that both leave the tarrass and take the stairway quickly, re-entering on the main stage below...So this great speech of the Ghost can be made in the main acting area. The bookholder is ready to prompt, for Will is not always reliable, not even with the lines he has himself written." (196)

"The love of English was not a thing that Shakespeare learned from its literature," writes Burgess on page 43, but most certainly our love of Shakespeare is heightened by this remarkable volume. The prose is refreshing; the material is well-documented, precise, but somewhat informal and light without losing its scholarly merit. It is a slick, well-polished package, an extremely visual production. For all its worth, its modest price is perhaps its most remarkable attribute.

Two New Plays by Edward Albee

By B. R. von Ranson

On a cold, snowy night, Hartford, Connecticut may seem a long way away from UMass, but if you're interested in theatre and playwright Edward Albee in particular, it's worth the hour's drive to see his two latest works at the Hartford Stage Company through March 6.

Albee himself is directing Angela Lansbury, William Prince and Maureen Anderman in the stage premieres of "Counting the Ways" and "Listening."

It is interesting to see Albee still exploring many of the same themes that have preoccupied him since the days of "The Zoo Story" and "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf," although in "Counting the Ways" and "Listening," they have been given a more contemporary veneer.

In "Counting the Ways," he uses vaudevillian techniques, blackouts and a comic framework; in "Listening," two of the characters are approaching old age and the setting is a mental institution (institutions, along with old age, seem to be the rage among playwrights these days. Witness David Storey's "Home" and "Shadow Box" by Michael Cristofer).

In both of Albee's new plays, the possibility of love and intimacy between men and women is explored, and fantasy babies lurk in the shadows as they did in "Who's Afraid Of Virginia Woolf." Language is used as an explicit thematic device, and form is inspired by analogues with musical composition.

In "Counting the Ways," there seems to be a new sense of the possibility for love. The title comes from Elizabeth Barrett Browning's famous poem, and the characters, a typical upper middle class couple, banter over the question, "Do you love me?" in a series of short vignettes, which become increasingly longer and more related, and are punctuated by blackouts.

But such vaudevillian devices as the blackout and a sign announcing the subject at hand receive only superficial treatment. No doubt meant to impose form on the play, they seem like a rather cheap shot at a time-honored theatrical tradition. Too bad Albee didn't take them more seriously as structural devices.

More important, perhaps, is Albee's handling of comedy as something other than black. This seems like a new direction for a playwright who has had a deeply pessimistic view of what the world is coming to, but the commitment to sanguinity seems tentative and the comedy tends to be flat-footed.

As well as Elizabeth Barrett Browning, Albee uses lines from W. H. Auden: "Thousands have lived without love, but none without shirts," and one wonders why. As with the vaudevillian devices, the literary allusions seem trivialized, unexploited except in a superficial sense.

"Listening" is a more ambitious work. Originally commissioned as a radio play, it concerns three nameless characters in a mental hospital. They seem to be a catatonic patient, an institutional cook and a nurse-attendant, but the language they speak, literary and aristocratic, makes it hard to be sure. As in "Counting the Ways," there is an absence of conventional plot and structure, with a loudspeaker periodically booming numbers which one assumes are intended to be a formal device.

The conversations, as always with Albee, are witty and interesting, but where do they lead? Decide for yourself if the hyped up, "deus ex machina," ending is justified.

As a radio play, "Listening" had much greater impact on this reviewer. Using the ear alone, you are forced to imagine who the characters are and what they are doing; hence you are actively engaged in a way that you needn't be when sitting in a theater and watching what is basically a quite static play.

This is not to discredit the performances by Lansbury, Prince and Anderman, which are highly polished (the weakest link is Maureen Anderman, who does not make the catatonic young woman as believable as she might), but merely to ask some rather serious questions about Albee's use of the visual element in theater.

As a playwright whose first ambition was to be a composer and one who states quite explicitly that his plays can be seen as "chamber pieces," one wonders if Albee, a master at the cadences of upper middle class conversation, hasn't neglected his eye for his ear. It is easy to see the musical analogues in the language of both "Counting the Ways" and "Listening," but has the influence of music been salutory? The dialogue is usually self-conscious and too often precious.

At the end of his novel Napoleon's Symphony, Anthony Burgess writes:

I was brought up on music and compose
Bad music still, but ever since I chose
The novelist's metier one mad idea
Has haunted me, and I fulfill it here
Or try to — it is this: somehow to give
Symphonic shape to verbal narrative,
Impose on life, though nerves scream and resist,
The abstract patterns of the symphonist...
As far as possible — if it can be done,
It can't of course, —, and so on, and so on.

Albee might do well to "listen" to Burgess, a real composer as well as a writer.

Mac Attack, Fleet Repeat

FLEETWOOD MAC
Rumours
(Warners)

Rumours, the long-awaited follow-up album to the supra-successful album Fleetwood Mac that dominated charts, hearts, and the airwaves for 18 months, is not as fresh as its predecessor, but is a continuation of the same basic sound. That guarantees its marketability and popularity, and therein lie its faults and virtues.

Although the name and a few of the group members have been around since the formation of an English blues band in 1966, this latest incarnation of Mac burst out in late '75. Along with Frampton, Mac made much of the most popular music of last year. This was a totally new

RUMOURS

Fleetwood Mac, based upon the vocal trio of Lindsey Buckingham, Christine McVie, and Stevie Nicks, where previous albums had men and guitars at the front. It shouldn't be terribly surprising that the band opted to recreate much of the music on Rumours that paid off so well for them on the last album.

It's all here folks, is you loved "Rhiannon," you'll go for "Dreams," and Christine McVie continues her Sugar Daddy hang-ups on "Oh, Daddy." But I am being overly harsh. Mass popular acceptance is something hard to defy. Mick Fleetwood and John McVie have seen ten years of working man's music in the band, and who can blame them if they are giving in to the star making machinery now? The happiness and security they now possess comes through into the music. And while it is ironic that a band that had its roots in the blues makes the big time performing pop music, it also says something when you note that those early prime movers of Fleetwood Mac are gone, and virtually unheard of today. Peter Green where are you?

It is fitting that the one song to rise to any noteworthy height is the first song co-written by the entire band. "The Chain," a spooky piece that comes closer to a personal statement than anything else on the album. Already the subject of an article in People mag, the lives and loves of Fleetwood Mac get a better treatment by themselves here.

It's hard to fault success, if I come on and say, "this rots," and you and two million others go out and make the album number one, one of us is wrong, right? There's no doubt that Rumours will go over big, and though probably not as satisfying as Fleetwood Mac was, the music will still please many people. Like Linda Ronstadt, Fleetwood Mac has found the groove, now it's up to them not to let it become a rut.

One Rypdal

TERJE RYPDAL
After The Rain
(ECM)

After the Rain is a one-man instrumental album on which Terje Rypdal plays guitars, keyboards, woodwinds and percussion, mostly in various overdubbed combinations. Upon reading the credits, and hearing that some of Rypdal's previous work had appeared on Virgin, I listened to this album in hopes of hearing something similar to Mike Oldfield's recent work. In this respect I was disappointed, for Rypdal's music lacks the melodic invention and the delightfully surprising mood changes which characterize Oldfield's. Upon further listens, however, it became evident that Rypdal's music has a style and grandeur of its own.

Most of Rypdal's music evokes the same mood as does the album's cover picture, which shows a peaceful, inviting country field after a Spring shower. Although the album is divided into ten sections with a break between each one, the same tranquil atmosphere is maintained throughout the course of the two sides. Three pieces are particularly notable: The opening "Autumn Breeze" includes the only non-instrumental sound on the album, a chorus of sighing voices which blend in quite effectively. "After the Rain" is a piece which reminds me of the opening movement of Pink Floyd's "Shine On You Crazy Diamond"-there's the same keyboard drone in the background and a similar feeling of subtle tension in the electric guitar. And "Vintage Year" is one of the few places on the album where Rypdal takes the opportunity to step foreward with some assertive lead guitar. As for the other seven pieces on the album, there are some notable moments but much of it has the unfortunate tendency to fade into the background- "Good background music" is faint praise indeed, but proves to be an unfortunately adequate description of Rypdal's lesser moments.

After the Rain is an album which I'd recommend, but not unreservedly. It should serve the purpose of exposing many listeners to Terje Rypdal's musical talent.

British Renaissance

RENAISSANCE
Novella
(Sire)

According to my memory, there hasn't been any band at any time who's used classical music as the framework of their songs to the extents Renaissance has. Cynics may scoof at it all and point out Emerson, Lake & Palmer, but Renaissance has done it rather well. Both Turn Of The Cards and Scheherazade were great albums. And even though it had its problems, Live At Carnigie Hall proved once and for all their worth.

However, Renaissance's dependence on classical works is both their biggest asset and detractor. And it's not that they don't realize it either — Novella is an uneven attempt to show Renaissance as a band of their own. Unlike the past, songwriting chores have been spread around, thus owing to the lack of "lifted" classical themes. The result is a cross of classical imitation and balladry that finds the group ill at ease.

Core Renaissance fans will understand Novella's aims better than newcomers will. Thus the cross-fertilization of influences (old and new) in the thirteen minute "Can You Hear Me?" can be appreciated to the fullest extent. The same goes for the "new style" compositions: "Midas Man" and "Touching Once (Is So Hard To Keep)".

With Novella, Renaissance should be commended for their experimentation with a commercially successful formula. It's a pity that in doing so, Renaissance became too cautious for their own good. (Notice how restrained Annie Haslam is?) Novella will undoubtedly please many, but I've come to know and expect more. I will, however, be around the next time.

'Action' threatened over employe pay

By BERNIE DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

Irritated because it has not received pay increases approved by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, the UMass Employes Association (UMEA) is threatening to take "strong action".

The UMEA, representing more than 1,300 people in administrative, clerical and technical positions on campus, has negotiated for four years with the University for the increases, according to Bernard K. Turner, UMEA president.

Although the governor sent a letter to UMass President Robert C. Wood on Feb. 16 approving the contract between UMass and UMEA, he has not made the money available.

"Without funding of the contract, the contract is worthless," Turner said yesterday.

"If this contract is not funded," Turner said, "we will have to take a very strong action to attain such funding."

Turner was quoted in the Greenfield Recorder as saying that although the UMEA does not believe in strikes, that is the first action that comes to mind.

The UMEA six-member executive board is meeting at noon today in its Graduate Research Center office to discuss the situation. The association is also calling a special general meeting of all UMEA members to "inform employes of the situation and have a vote on what action we should take," Turner said. That meeting is planned for noon Wednesday at the Campus Center.

The contract stipulates an $850 salary increase paid in three stages from July 1, 1976 to June 30, 1977. However, the University had not been able to implement the contract because although the contract itself has been approved, the funds for it have not.

The funds now lie in a $32 million maintenance appropriation for all state employes. The money was set aside by the state last fall to take care of negotiated pay increases, according to John L. DeNyse, University director of Personnel and Financial Services.

DeNyse says the UMass Board of Trustees has requested the state make the money available for the UMEA contract, but the state has not done so.

Turner says the fault lies in Boston with the governor and John Buckley, state secretary of administration and finance. The money would be allocated through Buckley's office.

Turner says "with the judges, magistrates, legislators and congress all getting pay raises, ... the little man not only has to wait for four years to get it, but he's robbed of it when he gets it."

He says the pay increase in the contract accounts for only one-third of the estimated 34 per cent cost of living increase over the last four years.

After the four years of negotiating, Turner said that in effect, "the employes are still without their contract."

The UMEA is the local chapter of the Massachusetts State Employes Association.

Credit Union offers varied services

By H. S. BERENSON
Collegian Staff

There is one service organization on campus that can really give you your money's worth — The UMass Student Federal Credit Union.

The bank distributes food stamps, makes out money orders, carries travelers cheques, and gives out loans. A special convenience for student employees on the UMass payroll is the arrangement for deduction from and deposit of weekly pay checks into individual savings accounts.

Credit Committee Chairperson Peter Bloom commented, "We offer the students many services that they are not aware of; that is why we are here, to service the students. We are service-oriented, not profit oriented.

The union has a computerized accounting system which is equipped to handle more than 1600 accounts and to accommodate hundreds more.

One of the tellers, finance major Michael Bytnar, remarked about working with the computer, "It makes for less paperwork, and more people can be taken care of faster."

To open an account is as easy as filling out your appointed name and appropriate numbers on an official card. A mimimum of $5 is required as a balance to maintain an account, and a membership fee of 50 cents is mandatory.

After an account has been established, a maximum of $25 in cash may be withdrawn at any time, and any amount over that may be withdrawn in the form of a union check.

President of the union, Linda Cote, said, "We give our bank checks of amounts over $25, and for practical purposes our check is more readily accepted than a personal check for cashing purposes."

In addition to the savings account end of the organization, the union offers all types of loans. Cote said, "Students can't just walk in and get a loan, they must have a credit committee interview so the situation can be fully understood."

The union boasts of its interest rates. Cote said, "Our interest rates are higher on savings accounts, and lower in loans, than the commercial banks."

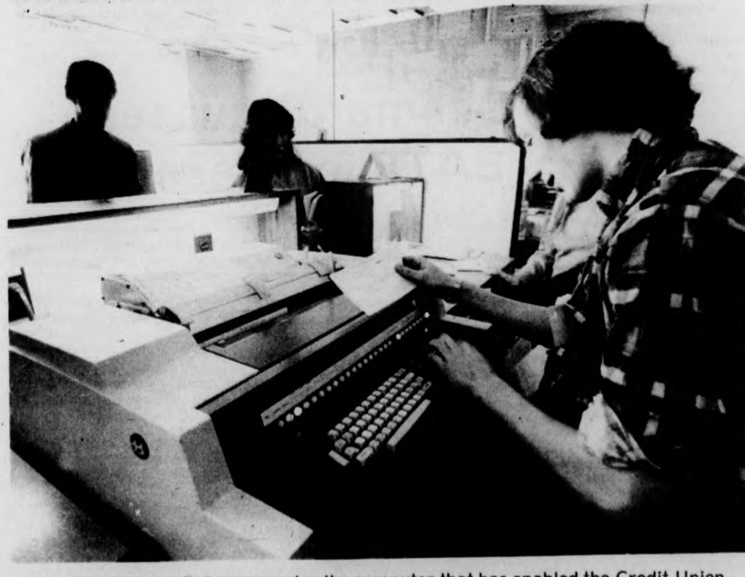
The entire union is run by students on a volunteer basis. The only full-time paid position in the union is held by Anne Smith, the manager. Smith is on an internship and usually works eight hour days.

Most of the staff people work for the experience or for a variety of personal reasons. About 55 volunteers work at the Union.

The people at the Union feel very strongly about their role in the UMass community, putting their needs first, because that is what they are there for.

The union handles $232,000 which is divided among shares, assets, loans, investments, etc. Part of the money is invested in government securities.

Smith said, "In a commercial bank positions are appointed generally by the size of a person's account, but here because we are a co-op, everyone has an equal voice and there is more of a democracy where the members can come to annual meetings and can vote, and have a say in credit committee"



Dan Smith

Teller, Michael Bytnar operates the computer that has enabled the Credit Union to speed up service for its more than 1600 members.

Asparagus Valley Cultural Society

Music, magic, and more at SUB

By PAUL HORGAN
Collegian Staff

The Asparagus Valley Cultural Society brought a festive mood to the Student Union Ballroom Friday night with a lively and laugh-laced performance certain to rekindle interest in the question of "What's in a name?"

The trio of Penn Jillette, Wier Chrisemer, and Teller the Magician rolled their way through a two-hour show which combined their talents into a blend of music, magic, and madness. The only thing crazier than the name of the act was the act itself.

The show, whose origins stem from vaudville and the carnival, seemed to center around Jillette. A graduate of Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey Clown College, Jillette smoothly paced the show with his juggling and comedy. By juggling knives, bowling balls, swallowing fire and delivering a tongue-in-cheek lecture on self-debasement, Jillette skillfully moved the show along. His humor moved from the subtle to the sardonic, but was always well timed and well delivered.

In sharp contrast to the boisterous Jillette was the musician of the group, Wier Chrisemer. Dressed in a conservative suit and peering from behind his dark-framed glasses, Chrisemer gave the impression of a scholarly character. But his seriousness turned out to be only a vehicle for his dry humor, as shown during a two minute summary of the history of Western music using musicological doubletalk.

The silent partner of the group was Teller the Magician. Combining a Henry Gibson-like face under a bush of Harpo Marx-like hair, the quiet magician nearly stole the show. The high point of the entire performance was his trick of swallowing 100 needles and six feet of thread, respectively and then pulling the threaded needles up one by one. Unfortunately not all of his tricks had the same successful effect, due to poor lighting many were marred by shadows.

There seemed to be no shortage of talent on the stage Friday night. All three members of the act took their turn at juggling, stand-up comedy, silent comedy, and the playing of musical instruments: piano, xylophone, and bass guitar. In the end the combined talents of the three produced a night of laughter, mysticism, and just plain fun.

The trio recently taped an appearance on the Mike Douglas show to be aired March 10. They are in the final stages of closing a deal with a producer for an Off-Broadway show.

Belchertown State to mix students with community

By CAROLE BRENNAN
Collegian Staff

There has been a national trend recently to integrate persons termed by the state as mentally retarded into the community explains Mike Hogan, Assistant Superintendent for Planning and Development at Belchertown State School. Although Belchertown is following this trend, Hogan says he does not see the closing of the school as a goal but rather a possible by-product.

"In no way does Belchertown plan to extrude its residents into the community," says Hogan. It is more that the school has come to the realization that the institution and community placement must fully jive in order to best aid mentally retarded persons within the community.

People have begun to recognize the conditions in institutions, says Hogan. And with this they have begun to develop skills to teach mentally retarded persons how to live successfully in the community.

Hogan explains he feels a strong commitment among persons of Western Massachusetts communities to try and place as many mentally retarded persons as possible into the community.

While explaining that community awareness of the problems of institutionalization of those persons labeled as mentally retarded has been growing for a while, Hogan says it is just recently that Belchertown has been able to do anything about it on a large scale.

In August of last year a group of people from Belchertown State School and Region 1 (Belchertown's community placement area), wrote a proposal requesting federal money from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. With the help of this money (should it be awarded) they proposed the planning and development of a community program over a three year period.

During the fall of last year the Western Massachusetts office of the Department of Mental Health was notified it had been awarded a grant in the amount of $355,000 for a one year period. This National Significance Grant was awarded to the school by the Office of Developmental Dissabilities, Department of Health, Education and Welfare. It is renewable on a two year basis, explains Hogan.

Hogan describes the grant as a significant accomplishment in that currently "community services are poorly underfunded."

Money from the grant, explains Hogan, will be used to develop a system of administrations for placing persons now living at Belchertown into the community. Its purpose is also to see that once they are placed there they are properly provided for.

The specific goals of the grant are still in the planning stages says Hogan. But, he adds, one aim will be to locate the area of responsibility for those mentally retarded persons who are placed into the community.

The institution is under state supervision administered by the superintendent of the individual school says Hogan. Yet, he explains, it "is not all that clear" whose responsibility the mentally retarded person placed into the community is.

Hogan explains that there has been an Ombudsman Committee formed to act as a watchdog for this community placement project. The Committee, he says, is comprised of six concerned persons coming from Belchertown and each of the five areas which make up Region 1.

Hogan, who says he is in favor of this committee, explains that he believes "local citizens should watch over the process."

Senate election results

A complete listing of final results for Student Senate interim seat elections were made available to the Collegian today. The successful contestants were:

Bonnie Levetin, JQA Lower; Shari Bickel, JQA Middle; Becky Staiger, JQA Upper; Joe Flynn, Coolidge Upper; Joe Beminato, Washington Middle; Richard Baga, Brown; Joan Piccaro, Knowlton; John Ferranti, Pierpont; Mandell-Eitger, Kennedy Upper; Peter Leary, Brett; David Kantor, Gorman; Anne O'Donne, MacKimmie; Tom Connor and Pat Whelan, Coolidge Lower; Peter Reynolds, Greenough; Jerg Schaeppi, Baker; Linda Veni and David Cowell, Cance; Bruce Palmer, Thatcher; William Fine, Dickinson; Edmund Hillary and Skip Fertitta, Cashin; and Rob Prybylo, Hamlin.

Winners will serve out their terms until regularly scheduled Senate elections to be held in October.

Elections were held Wednesday and Thursday of last week in 21 dormitories and among Greeks commuters.

Amherst primary tomorrow

By TERESA M. HANAFIN
Collegian Staff

A primary election is scheduled tomorrow to narrow down the field of candidates for two Amherst town offices — selectman and school committee.

Three candidates are running for the board of selectmen position vacated recently by Robert Garvey, who left to assume his new post as county commissioner. One year remains on his term.

Six candidates are up for two school committee slots. The incumbents, Robert Fischer and Maria Roberts, are not running for reelection, so new names will be on the ballot.

The purpose of the primary, or caucus, is to narrow the field, because only two names for each elected position may appear on the ballot in April.

William Barnes, Roger Jacque and Kenneth Mosakowski, contenders for the selectman position, disagree most strongly over the issue of a zoning clause which limits the number of unrelated persons living in a household to four.

Mosakowski believes the law should be changed on the grounds it is discriminatory and a "poor way to control behavior." Both Barnes and Jacque favor the zoning clause, for reasons of public health.

On other issues, there is less disagreement. Mosakowski favors spending $500,000 on the proposed Boltwood Walk development in the center of town, while Jacque would be more cautious and Barnes would go with whatever town meeting decides to do. Both Barnes and Mosakowski favor continuing the current dog control program after federal funds run out, while Jacque wants to see a decision by town meeting.

Barnes, 41, lives at 112 High Point Drive, and owns and operates an Arco service station on College St.

Jacque, 30, is employed on the Mill Valley Dairy Farm on South Pleasant St.

Mosakowski, 30, is a library assistant in government documents at the UMass library and lives at 370 Crown Point Apartments.

The six candidates for the school committee slots are Ralmon Jon Black, Betty Brace, Casey Clark, Janice Denton, Nancy Gordon and Loren Howell.

Tomorrow's election is the first to be held since the new redistricting plan went into effect. Voters may find out what precinct to vote in by checking the number that appears in the upper left of town census forms mailed out recently.

Students living in Southwest are in Precinct Four and vote at St. Brigid's church hall. Sylvan, Orchard Hill, Northeast and Central areas (except Butterfield) are in Precinct Three and students living in these areas vote at Marks Meadows School. Students living in Butterfield are in Precinct Two and vote at the North Fire Station.

Delima discusses SATF increase

By JANIS FINSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Brian Delima, Speaker of the Student Senate discussed the possibility of a $7 Student Activity Fee (SATF) increase, at the Sylvan Government meeting last night. The increase would raise the SAF to $64 next year.

A petition was delivered to Delima to put the proposed $7 increase on the ballot at the Student Government elections on March 15th - 16th.

Delima plans to distribute a fact sheet to each of the dorms on campus to inform students of the increase and what it entails. He says with the increase comes a strong possibility of a budget cut in Sylvan.

Herb Tyson and John Foley, who are running together for SGA Co-president, were also present at the meeting. The candidates focused on Sylvan issues during a 20 minute discussion with the government representative.

Ava Lamoieaux, Manager of the Subway, a snackbar in McNamara announced her resignation after being denied a pay increase.

A tentative date of March 11, has been set for the Big Bad Boogie. The event will be held at Worcester Dining Commons featuring Johanna Wild.

Judy Brandt, representing the International Women's Week expressed a need for a donation. Sylvan voted to donate $100 for the March event.

Members of the Sylvan Area Government expressed hope that more of the area's students will become involved in the planning stages of the area's events.

Campus lowers thermostats to 65°

By BERNIE DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

Classrooms are likely to be just a little bit colder now as the campus moves into its final phase of lowering thermostats to 65 degrees.

Jack Littlefield, University director of planning, is meeting with Physical Plant personnel today to discuss specific areas on campus that may or may not be exempt from the 65-degree limit.

The limit was set for all state buildings by executive order from Gov. Michael S. Dukakis on Feb. 1, in the midst of a lengthy cold spell in the eastern part of the country. It came as part of a national effort to conserve fuel for heating.

According to Littlefield, all academic and support buildings on campus were lowered to 65 degrees by the end of last week. These buildings include the library, Whitmore and most classrooms.

Thermostats in these buildings had been set at 68 degrees during winter months since 1973, the time of the oil energy crisis. Before then they were set at 72 degrees.

Exempt from the 65-degree limit are residence halls, the infirmary and certain campus buildings with unique problem, Littlefield says.

Such building, according to Littlefield, included the Fine Arts Center, where pianos would go out of tune if not kept in temperature and humidity — controlled rooms, or buildings that have rooms where animals are kept or where science experiments necessitate controlled temperatures.

Littlefield is meeting today with Physical Plant employes and Ed Simpson, University energy conservation coordinator, to discuss the buildings with specific problems before finishing to lower thermostats.

Littlefield says thermostats will not be turned up again until the warm weather settles in for good in late April or early May.

We try to keep in the "heating set", and would not change thermostat settings for "a bout of warm weather in March," Littlefield says.

When the warm weather finally comes to stay, campus thermostats now at 65 degrees will be turned up to 76 degrees to lessen the amount of air conditioning needed for cooling, according to Littlefield.

Sole SGA candidate quits

By M.B. ALLEN
Collegian Staff

The only single candidate for Student Government Association President, David Cameron, announced Friday that he is withdrawing his name from the ballot.

"As much as I dislike dual presidencies, I've found it next to impossible to run by myself," said Cameron. "It would be unfair of me to use the $200 fund provided by the Student Senate for a campaign that stands little chance of making it."

Cameron expressed gratitude to all of the people who helped him obtain signatures and performed various other campaign chores. "Maybe someday I'll make a comeback," he mused.

Jimmy Carter, Bob Padula and Bill Auger, who were running on the same ticket, dropped out last week. There are three duos left in the race: John Foley and Herbert Tyson; Marion "Pinky" Batiste and Jon Hite; and Charles Pooler and Joel Weissman.

OHAG hits liquor policy

By ARNOLD WARSHAW
Collegian Staff

The Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG) is sending a letter to Dean William Field asking him to take action in repealing the University's liquor policy, which holds the signer of a liquor license application liable for any accident that takes place at or resulting from an event.

In order for liquor to be sold at an event, a license must be obtained, but presently there is a reluctance to sign any licenses because of the liability involved.

At last night's OHAG meeting, it was announced that there will be a candidates night March 13, at which time Orchard Hill residents can ask questions of candidates running for OHAG offices. Elections will take place on March 15 and 16.

John Hite and Pinky Batiste, candidates for the co-presidency of the Student Government Associaton, spoke to OHAG members for about 20 minutes. They gave their views on the present financial problems of the University and other matters.

OHAG president Gary Schuster said that a spring concert will take place some time in May. The exact date and location are not yet known.

There was no new business brought up at last night's meeting.

Dance theatre combines dance with humor, acrobatics

By LEILA BRUNO
Below the Salt Staff

One cannot describe the Pilobolus Dance Theater solely in terms of thematic dancing, for this unique company explores and brings to life energy, movement, and feeling as one artistic unit.

Working with images in the modern style, the dancing is both non-technical while being physically strong with the impetus being an incorporation of group movement together with body linkage.

The choreography is collectively created by Philobolus combining dance, acrobatics, design, and humor in an artistic if unorthodox manner.

Unfortunately Pilobolus was forced to cancel its scheduled performance last Saturday night due to key dancer Moses Pendleton breaking a toe at a lecture-demonstration given at Smith College last Friday.

Nevertheless the company will return on April 9. Information regarding tickets may be obtained at the Fine Arts Council Box Office.

Mark Ross, the company's manager, informed me that the name Pilobolus refers to a fungus that grows and explodes, and that the company was founded in 1971 by two Dartmouth undergraduates, Jonathan Walken and Moses Pendleton.

Both had a strong background in sports and none in dance until they took a choreography class with Alison Chase, after which they began creating collectively with students Lee Harris and Robby Barnett.

Pendleton declared that, "If we use training of any kind, it's more toward choreographic ends than for training itself."

The following year Pilobolus emerged as a professional company entirely managed, publicized, danced, and choreographed by these four men.

In the spring of 1975 the company adopted Alison Chase and Martha Clarke while also replacing Lee Harris (who left for a career in computer science) with Michael Tracy, bringing the company to six members.

The uniqueness of Pilobolus lies in their spirit of working together cooperatively in a style devoid of a standard dance vocabulary.

The choreography initiated by the group is a manner of moving together spontaneously to communal feelings of images and ideas, with the music added later.

"In the beginnings, our work had to do with body linkage — a dependency upon each other," remarked Moses Pendleton in a recent New York Times interview.

"We were afraid to move as independent movers."

Since then the company's style has altered somewhat with the addition of a whole new repertoire of pieces focusing more on time period rather than organic images.

Included are several solos with pantomine and movements that display an awesome degree of energy and agility in the leaps and holds.

Dance Critic Clive Barnes of the Times has cited Pilobolus as "unusual in its choreographic texture, its blend of naturalist movement, mime, dance and downright gimmickry."

The dances explore a wide range of movement with no preconceptions as to their physical limits — instead the body is extended and projected to its absolute physical limit.

The concept of Pilobolus working analogously as a family does not disregard the idea of acquiring new members for its perpetuation and manager Mark Ross feels confident that the choreography will remain valid after the dances have been translated by future dancers.

The male and female roles inherent in the pieces are not unduly emphasized nor are important differences in each role overlooked.

The overall visual effect of Pilobolus is a blending of contemporary, modern dance and mime with points of reference being abstract movements executed with incredible physical strength and ease.

Philobolus Dance Theatre

Pilobolus has performed in ten international tours, a United States tour, along with an upcoming tour of Paris and Vienna, and plans for a Broadway run.

In addition the company is preparing a television special for the PBS Network "Great Performances in America" series to be aired on April 27.

Because of its artistic success Pilobolus receives grants from the National Endowment of the Arts, the American Dance Festival, the Touring Program of the National Endowment of the Arts, and the Mass. Arts Council.

Indeed, actually being able to see Pilobolus perform here April 9 will of course make all of this visually believable.

Seeing is believing.

In order for people to function consistently as a people during this period of pacifism, we must adopt a system of approach and value which will maintain our integrity and accurately analyze the changing political and economic currents and what it means for Third World people. A people cannot function as a people unless they are united morally, and in social awareness.

Each and every Black and Third World person is vitally important to the social atmosphere of Third World people in its role in this system. Each of us must begin by declaring and feeling that our thought and feelings on subject matter is important and should be externalized in all the social mediums. We must not let the trivializing effect of society rob us of our identity as a thinking people. We should not act like semi-conscious puppets. Our nature clamors for the enjoyments of life and we can never quench this. We must get into this nature of ours and begin to define how it could be possible to work for a better society.

People must take the time individually to specifically define how the present power system is governing them and their alternatives. They must take the time to decide if, she or he believes in God, and if so, in what capacity. We must specifically define in our mind, in a simplified manner how and what racism is to us. We must define what sexism means to us. We must decide on how to deal with the man in terms of our future and money. We must wrap it all together so we can function amongst each other as a people with integrity. We must stop giving our primary social concerns to prestige and allow value judgement to decide our affections. We must become better than our oppressors. We must get back our values as a people and not let this institution keep us asleep, disorganized, petty, and acting like a tand of lobsters.

Our women's role is as important as our men's role. We must define these roles to ourselves in the best interest of ourselves as a people, a whole, and let go of the prides and hangups which keep the relationships from developing. We must understand our place in the Third World community, and we must strive to develop solidified relations with the concrete of our best interest. Now is the opportunity for now is the time when people are ready to face and focus on themselves with the possibility of real Third World self satisfaction. This possibility is present now. Our thoughts and motives create society. We must be strong under this pacifist, illusory political cloud, and this is the way to do it.

When we come to the fact that most of us think, want and support the same ideal, we can begin as a people. Opposition people will stand out and be seen. Each of us is vital to the change in society. It all begins in your thinking.

This is what Black and Third World people can do now.

'2000' got to be Black!

By RENEE MOBLEY
Collegian Staff

Saturday night in Bowker Auditorium the Black Spectrum Theatre Company performed an expressive play before an audience of 200.

"2000 Black" is a portrayal of the lives of Black people in decades to come, centering around the basic theme "Where are we going".

In a creatively futuristic outlook the theatre company gave an entertaining performance with meaningful content.

The play stressed certain problems among Blacks all over America. One of the earliest acts dealt with the education of Black youth and how their minds are being brainwashed against self pride and united strength. References were made to such Black leaders as Malcolm X and Martin Luther King.

In a short skit portraying times in the 1990's there were three Black women for every Black man. These acts in particular were effective in carrying the realities of Black homosexuality, interracial relations and wars that are bringing about a shortage of Black men.

The dialogue carried potent messages dealing with broken families and the lack of respect shown to Black women by their men.

The acts progressed and brought us to the 21st century where a Black 'Utopia' is set up. A comic portrayal of the Black upper class conveyed to the audience that forming a Black Nation is not the only answer to the problem and that regardless of the color of the oppressor, a nation will not survive if the working class is not happy.

An expressive piece of choreography was used to represent the mind of the Black man. The essential meaning behind this act was that we as Black youth are smothering and altering our minds with the use of drugs instead of using our minds for creative and constructive purposes. The finale consisted of each performer reflecting one aspect of the 'message' to the audience. These reflections stressed the importance of education, the need for stronger unity between Black men and women, the need for black sensitivity and above all the continuation of the Black race.

The company thus succeeded in fostering awareness with the use of song, dance, recital comedy and audience participation. A truly vibrant performance by the participants succeeded in bringing us the message that 2000 has indeed got to be Black!

A scene from this past Saturday night's performance of 2000 Black. The play was presented in Bowker Auditorium by the joint cooperation of the black-Spectrum company and Orchard Hill's Third World Center. (Photo by Nummo News)

Upward Bound Cultural Day

By MARCIA HOSPEDALES
Black Affairs Staff

A stimulating presentation by UMass history professor, Dr. Dean Albertson, was one of the highlights of the day's events at the New Africa House yesterday. The occasion was the annual Cultural Day celebration of the Upward Bound Project.

Dr. Albertson, in his discussion of "America, 'Melting Pot', Myth or Reality" declared that "the black problem in America is in fact a white problem." He traced the history of the Americanization process of black people in this country. Albertson went on to say that America has been tailored by the majority to be a "white, Anglo Saxon, English speaking, Protestant nation." All immigrants have been treated "like dirt at first," he said, but the concept of 'melting pot' is as much a myth as it is reality. The black situation differs somewhat, in that blacks were brought here by force and not as "losers of their country" as were most immigrants.

Viewing the situation from a politcal standpoint, Albertson questioned the effectiveness of the capitalist system in which a supposedly middle class state will evolve. The fact is, he declared that "no group has actually made it" — the rich-poor ratio has remained the same and there has been no redistribution of wealth in the U.S. since 1910. The situation is one where sons still overwhelmingly take the position of their fathers.

Albertson viewed the concept of 'melting pot' in terms of structural and cultural integration. Culturally, groups have to a large extent, maintained their ethnicity. On a

Pearl Bowser speaks

By ANGELA THOMAS
Asst. Black Affairs Editor

This past Friday, February 26, in the Lumumba Hut of New Africa House, Pearl Bowser in a lecture and film presentation, spoke on how black men and women have been historically portrayed in films.

Before an audience of about 40, Bowser talked about the 1900's and early black independent produced film companies such as Lincoln Pictures, and the Frederick Douglas Company. These and other companies represented blacks in dramatic roles and showed that blacks possess a capability for other forms of acting besides sambo and plantation life.

Lincoln Pictures featured an all black cast. Its theme dealt with professional blacks (the talented 10 per cent) making a profession in society. This theme was present in, The Realization of a Negro's Ambition, and The Trooper of Company K. The first black western was the film, Law of Nature, that was a mixture of love and adventure. A prominent star for Lincoln Pictures was Noble Johnson, a black man who was cast in the roles of Mexicans and Indians but never as a black man.

Not wanting to upset its audience, Lincoln Pictures did not make any controversial films. The films produced were basically social mellow dramas that ignored racism, lynching of blacks, and the working class. Lincoln films strove for mixed audiences for a larger appeal. More successful of its films was, By Right of Birth, that starred Clarence Brooks, with a cast of 2500, and featured a 60 piece orchestra.

It was not until 1918 that the first controversial black film was produced, The Homesteader, by Oscar Micheaux. The film was considered highly emotional for the times. The emphasis of the film was a black minister who played in the role of a deceitful hypocrite, responsible for the death of the hero's wife in the film. In the 1920's Micheaux produced another controversial film, Within Our Gates, A Story of the Negro, that for the first time presented racism and lynchings on film. Black communities across the nation were upset with the racial implications, while whites feared riots, and succeeded in having the movie banned in some areas. Other movies produced by Micheaux include, The Wages of Sin, and A Daughter of the Congo.

The main problems that confronted black independent films, was the amount of financial backing that could be secured, and the distribution of the film. This contributed to many of them folding. Also white crews who shot the pictures, for the most part, were unexperienced and used black companies as training for jobs in Hollywood. These crews did not want film credit given to them for fear of associations with blacks that might have negative effects when seeking jobs in Hollywood.

Bowser pointed out the effect of assimilation, and the taking on of the ambitions of white society by early black film companies, that resulted in light skinned long hair blacks featured as the more serious actors. Darker complexion blacks were presented in comic relief roles, where often the laughter was due to some act of stupidity or clumsiness committed by the actor.

In the late 1930's, Hollywood began to produce movies with black casts whose subject manner dealt with plantation life and the "streets" and dances of blacks. In closing her film lecture film presentation, Bowser pointed out how the stereotypes of blacks in films has continued up to the 1970's.

structural basis however, groups have politicized themselves and manipulated the system.

The issue of upward mobility being measured in terms of white collar vs blue collar workers was also discussed.

Mexicans protest for land

Movement causing battle

JUCHITAN, Mexico (AP) — Soldiers and police armed with automatic rifles have been patrolling the streets of this old Indian town, where a protest movement for land has escalated into a sometimes bloody battle between authorities and townspeople.

Last Tuesday police fired on a crowd of about 350 people who marched on the local jail demanding the release of 36 arrested students. Two persons were reported killed and 20 wounded.

Three days later, in a deep ditch six miles from this southern Mexican town, police found the bodies of three men who had been among the protesters at the jail. They were members of a worker-peasant-student coalition that has pressed the Zapotec Indians' demands that the government give them land.

Authorities said they were trying to find out who shot the three. But protest leaders charged that evidence at the scene indicated police had dumped the bodies there.

Students protesting the police actions in Juchitan demonstrated Thursday, Friday and Saturday in the Oaxaca state capital of Oaxaca City, 100 miles away. They burned two buses, forcing bus line operators to halt service Friday. On Saturday, a man the students accused of being a police spy was tied, blindfolded and locked in the basement of a building at Oaxaca University.

Business and industrial leaders in Oaxaca announced Saturday that they would shut down all commercial activity for 48 hours beginning Monday to protest the student demonstrations and demand proper security by the state.

The Oaxaca State governor says the land movement involves a subversive plot to topple the federal government. Protest leaders say they simply want to improve the lives of downtrodden Indians.

The students whose arrests touched off last Tuesday's violence had been rounded up only a few hours earlier, accused of disorderly conduct. They were being held in a bus parked outside the jail when the crowd appeared.

US monitoring Uganda

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter said yesterday the United States was monitoring the situation in Uganda closely and "trying not to upset" President Idi Amin who has delayed a meeting with Americans in the African nation.

"So far there is nothing to cause us deep concern," Carter told reporters at Bethesda Naval Hospital where he had visited with his new grandson.

"We're just monitoring it closely, trying not to upset President Amin and trying to take advantage of his good wishes that he has expressed," Carter said.

He added the United States has offers from the United Nations and others to intervene in the matter.

Earlier yesterday, winding up a weekend at his Camp David, Md., retreat, Carter bowed his head and prayed silently when an Episcopalian minister called for prayers for Amin during church services.

It was announced Sunday that Amin had postponed from today to Wednesday his session with the 175 Americans, mostly missionaries, who live in Uganda. He also switched the site to the airport lounge at Entebbe, scene of the Israeli raid last year to free air piracy hostages.

Middle East may have peace in one month

NEW YORK (UPI) — President Anwar Sadat of Egypt said in a television interview broadcast yesterday that if the United States uses its influence in negotiations, there could be peace in the Middle East within one month.

"We could have peace in only one month when the United States, as a superpower in which both sides have confidence, takes the lead in the Geneva negotiations," Sadat said in an interview taped by ABC-TV in Cairo earlier and shown in the U.S. yesterday. Sadat himself arrived in Khartoum, Sudan, yesterday for a summit meeting with the presidents of Syria and Sudan.

"The United States should use its utmost power and influence to bring agreement at Geneva on the Middle East," Sadat said. "The U.S. is trusted by me and should be trusted by Israel...I have already asked the U.S. to take a leading role — it is most necessary..."

The issue of Palestinian representation at the peace conference has been a thorny one, since Israel refuses to accept the Palestinians as a separate party.

"The core of the whole problems is the Palestinian question," said Sadat. "We should have the Palestinians with us, and the Palestinian Liberation Organization has agreed to a link with Jordan." The U.S. and the Soviet Union are co-chairmen of the Geneva Conference.

"My relations with the Soviet Union are strained," Sadat said, "but let us all work for peace together."

Asked if there is truth in reports from North Atlantic Treaty Organization and U.S. sources that Egypt still gets military aid from the Soviets, Sadat said that "the Soviets just told us yesterday that we would get some MIC machines for which we have been asking for two years — any information you have must have been leaked to you by NATO or the U.S. officials."

"I will get arms for our defense from anywhere I can get them — from Western Europe or East Europe," he said.

Sadat gave an inconclusive answer when asked if Israel, as reported, has nuclear weapons.

"They have scientists and we have scientists, he said.

"Sure, there should be a nuclear ban in the Middle East," he said in answer to a question. "And if we reach a peace accord at Geneva I would talk about arms limitation."

He repeated a position he often has stated — "1977 should be a turning point in the Middle East; we Arabs are ready for peace."

Responsible for your own education

To the Editor:

The letter of Marielizabeth Leblond is one that I can not ignore. Presumably we are all striving to reduce the barriers of prejudice and discrimination that exist in society today. Seeing that Ms. Leblond should be particularly aware of this, how can she in good conscience advocate a blatantlly discriminatory position? Why should single parents be exempt from taking out loans? Are they anymore prone to poor job prospects than I, a single white male, or for that fact any other student at UMass who will be looking for employment soon? Why is it necessary that I had to take out $6,000 dollars in loans to further my education and she not have to? While I can sympathize with her stand on work-study because of the potential family disruption, I can not tolerate her opinion of loans.

Ms. Leblond's position is also incorrect in the facts regarding NDSL. If a student cannot find employment after graduation she-he can make arrangements to delay repayment of any loans outstanding by simply talking to the NDSL Representative on campus.

In closing I must say that we all take on a certain responsibility in coming to school, one that we consciously and willingly assume. Neither the Federal-State government of School "owes" us an education, we must be able, with any assistance they offer us, to make ends meet.

Rescheduling pool hours

To the Editor:

We have found it impossible to make use of any of the campus swimming pools this semester due to the free swim schedule. Now the hours have been reduced to accommodate the swim team which further limits the time available for swimming.

We would like to suggest that the lunch time hours be extended to 2:00 p.m. or that one of the pools be open from 1:00 until 2:00 so that all the pools are not open at the noon hour.

An evening's tactics

By JAMES DALTON

The following was observed during a small evening seminar on the Massachusetts economy attended by Governor Dukakis.

As he drifted unobtrusively into the room, closely followed by some burly looking aides, my first impression of the Governor was that of his physical smallness of stature, not unlike Napoleon, Burr, Madison, and sundry other political giants. His quaint New England style thriftiness was apparent in his by-now well-shadowed 9 o'clock beard, reminiscent of the free "Good Morning" razors available at McDonalds with the purchase of an Egg McMuffin. He also wore well muddied rubbers on his shoes, demonstrating the 'down-to-earthiness' of the dedicated foot soldier working tirelessly to lead Massachusetts out of its present doldrums and into glories of old.

His sharp, piercing eyes, split by his hawk like nose, feigned interest in the Professor's lecture as he no doubt lusted in his heart after those in the room. Expectant students gathered outside the closed door; faint mumblings could be heard, "Is it him, really?" as some of the bolder students disenchantedly filtered out of the room, their expectations having been dealt a cruelly mortal blow.

The Governor exhibited remarkable endurance, being able to withstand both students' curious glances and the none too exciting lecture on the fascinating effects the tourist industry has on the Massachusetts economy.

The Governor employed several well practiced and finely tuned devices to keep his eyes open, which was better than many others in the room were able to do. First, he sat with crossed legs, carefully situated so as to block circulation to one of the feet, which always occurs before one can fall completely asleep. Thus, the necessity to restore circulation to the foot keeps the body alert and awake. It goes without saying that this is an essential method all heads of state must master in order to endure the countless state functions they must attend. A second method, less noticeable but equally effective, was the holding up of his head with his left hand close to his ear, enabling him to listen to the much more interesting tick of his watch.

My respect for the Governor grew in a direct ratio to the rate the Professor droned on. The first student to speak was a primly dressed young man wearing an HP25 calculator on his belt. He took great care not to repeat the same word twice in the same sentence, blushing appropriately at his inciteful query. The Governor somehow managed to look interested, yet kept the watch close to his ear.

After one particularly feeble anecdote of the Professor's, the Governor forcibly chuckled, yet I'm unsure as to whether the laugh was directed at the joke or just another lustful thought. Towards the end of the lecture, which lasted a half hour longer than usual, due to the unusual amount of knowledge the professor had to share this particular evening, the Governor commented favorably on one of the Professor's points. The Professor grinned from ear to ear — forget the budget cuts — he was on Cloud Nine.

The Politician smiled. Votes; his lust was satisfied.

In support of unionization

To the Editor:

Dan Huse's letter [Feb. 24] doubting the possibility of cooperation between students, faculty, administration and state government clearly raises a most telling argument for student unionization. It is surprising to me that the fact of these four groups having clearly different goals, which seems an obvious point, has never received much attention in public discussion of unionization, budget cuts, etc. Perhaps this point can be made more clearly by looking at the two most commonly stated sets of allies in this situation; that is, the supposed community of interest which many tenured faculty claims exists between the administration and the state government, and the supposed community of interest which these same tenured faculty claims exists between themselves and the student body. There is little evidence to support either of these contentions.

On the question of the administration state government relationship, it is apparent that on issues of real interest to the tenured faculty [that is, salaries, graduate programs, research grants, small teaching loads, etc.], it is not that the administration controls these through a special arrangement with state government, rather that the administration has little power in budgetary areas. If the favorable vote on unionization by the faculty did nothing else, it established for the faculty the potential power to bypass the administration and deal directly with state government on the above issues, those which it feels are crucial.

Regarding the second supposed community of interests, that is the one between faculty and students, it should be clear that the only issues over which a basically conservative faculty would take perhaps the biggest step ever taken by a UMass faculty [i.e., unionization] would be the above professional or personal ones; these being very important to faculty and fundamentally irrelevant or worse to students! The singular interest of the faculty in the above problems, together with its unwillingness to break with the tradition of elite professionalism; that is, its unwillingness to risk its status by rewarding seriously those faculty who work in student affairs, student councelling, undergraduate teaching, etc., make a mockery of the notion of a community of interest between students and the faculty as a whole.

It is depressing that the forces of institutionalized professional elitism exist, but they do. The only way the students will be able to reform the educational system is to bypass the faculty and the administration, and to confront state government directly with their particular educational goals, something neither the faculty nor the administration can do. And the only way to do this is through unionization.

An apology offered

To the Editor:

On February 23 the Revolutionary Student Brigade passed out a leaflet containing a reference to the 14th floor of John Adams. The intention of this statement was to point out that many of the residential areas on this campus are poorly equipped, and in desperate need of maintenance — a fact we felt the Governor would conveniently ignore during his visit [which, in fact, he did]. The statement was in no way intended to imply anything concerning the residents of the 14th floor. Obviously however this was not what came across. Clearly the statement was poorly worded, implying what we did not mean to imply, and failing to make the point we wanted to make.

As the author of that particular line in our leaflet I would like at this time to apologize to the residents of the 14th floor, for having written what I did.

Closet-space

Mary walked over to the group of women standing by the wall. It was cold out, so the gang that usually met by 'F' unit had moved inside to the main building. It was almost time to go to homeroom and the group had been gossiping for the past half hour about Christine's new boyfriend and the senior play romances. Mary and Marsha were late. This was noted in the course of conversation and then forgotten until Mary sauntered into our midst. It was five years ago and I remember it so clearly.

"Hey, you'll never guess what happened to me," Mary began. Her voice was a mixture of excitement and nervous apprehension. "All I can say is don't use the 'G' unit girls' room anymore, they've taken over."

Marsha walked up behind her. She kept agreeing with Mary, shaking her head up and down and repeating, "For sure, for sure!"

"What are you talking about?" I asked, knowing that I was getting myself into something I should have ignored.

"One of them attacked me. It was awful. I don't want to talk about it," answered Mary, eager to go on. Her face was anticipating the next question, but she was silent.

"O.K., who attacked you? Why? How? Get to the point!", I restrained my impatience.

"Well, it was the lesies. You know, that girl from your theatre class, the one with long hair who doesn't wear a bra. She grabbed me. Marsha was there, she'll tell you. It was disgusting. It was awful."

To make a long story short, Mary refused to give details. She thought I was evil for even wanting to know. She and Marsha didn't talk to me for days. I didn't know very much about lesbianism in high school. It wasn't that it didn't exist, it simply didn't affect me. What disturbed me most about the incident was that Mary and I had started a woman's group, a little girls' liberation group. We were supposed to be conscious women, with a feeling for one another's struggles and here was Mary accusing another woman, without any sympathy, without any understanding. What was worse was that it later turned out that the accusation was unfounded. The woman was a lesbian, but she had never attacked anybody. The whole thing was a result of fear on the part of my friends.

Time passes and things change. A little.

A book came into the office where I work sometimes. It was about coming out, things to make it easier, things to let you know you're not alone. Immediately people started looking for someone who was gay to give the book to. Straight people just don't read things like that, right? No, not right.

It is wonderful that people are being honest about themselves, about their lifestyles. What is not wonderful is that people expect 'those people' to stay among themselves. You can do what you want, but I don't want to have to know about it. The lines are still drawn, the misunderstanding is still there. The fear is still there too, read the walls in the women's rooms on campus. It's all there, both sides.

Even the woman's movement is factionalized. There is really no reason for it, either. Straights fear gays, gays will either have nothing to do with straights or fear that they will never understand. Radicals fear conservatives, who, they feel, are selling out the movement. Conservatives fear radicals because of the lengths they go to in order to get their points across. Blacks distrust whites, with good reason perhaps, as we have not always proved much value in that trust. Whites feel unwelcome or uncomfortable in black groups, often because they have never been exposed to a non-white environment. And I am generalizing and you know it, but the point is clear. This kind of problem is not uncommon and communications move slowly.

I don't have any answers. I don't know anybody who does. But I do know for sure that this whole thing is part of a vicious circle. General lack of communication and lack of understanding will never really disappear until women get their rights and women will not get a real equality as long as this factionalization and distrust continue.

Staff meeting

There will be an editorial staff meeting for all writers, graphics people, layout people, and other people interested in the opinion business, Wednesday evening at 7:30 in the Collegian office. We will be discussing International Women's Week, the SGA elections, "level funding", a new Ass't. Exec. Editor and any other items of note. If you can't be there, please call Bill Sundstrom or Judy Kritzman at the Collegian, 545-3500.

Correction

In a letter from the 14th floor of John Adams dorm which appeared in Friday's Collegian, the last sentence of the third paragraph should read, "Instead, we would welcome him (Dukakis) to come here, although we do not with his proposed UMass budget."

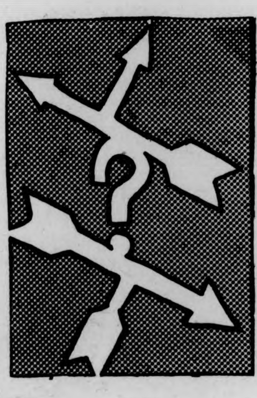
Student unionization

By BOB MELIA

It is widely realized that the faculty's decision to unionize will have far reaching repercussions within the university. That we as students will be affected by faculty unionization is obvious. It is equally obvious that we had best take steps to insure that the faculty, with its dramatic new increase in power, does not ride roughshod, or force the administration to ride roughshod, over students interests.

The question we should be asking ourselves is this: how do we best protect our interests? Two articles concerned with this question have recently appeared in the Collegian. One stressed confrontation with the faculty while the other stressed negotiation with the faculty. Both are wrong.

An editorial representing the opinion of the majority of the Collegian Board of Editors suggested that we students should unionize, thus increasing our power, and then use this power force the faculty to respect our interests.



Several days later Jan Van Tol wrote an editorial which said, in effect, that professors are reasonable people, and rather than unionize and confront them we should sit down with them, act like civilized human beings, and negotiate our differences.

Each editorial makes some valid points. It's true that student-faculty interests are occasionally at odds, and if we sit back and do nothing we might indeed one day wake up and discover that our interests have been sacrificed to faculty interests.

But it is also true that student-faculty interests are inextricably interwoven, and student unionization, by introducing friction into what should be a relatively harmonious student-faculty relationship, could do more harm than good.

But it would be disastrous for students to follow the course of action suggested by either editorial, because each deals only with the most superficial aspects of the situation, and both fail entirely to get at the root of the problem.

By suggesting that we either fight or negotiate with the faculty, both editorials would have us believe that the problem lies within the university and that we can solve the problem by squabbling amongst ourselves.

Wrong. The problem lies outside the university — not inside. More specifically the problem lies with the reluctance of the state government to adequately fund the university. The faculty didn't unionize to wring concessions out of the student body — they unionized because they have not been given a cost-of-living increase in three years, because many aren't being given tenure, and because they've been forced to endure many inconveniences — like having their office phones ripped out.

The quid pro quo of a good university is money, and for the last several years this university simply hasn't been getting enough. Unless this trend is reversed immediately it will take years to repair the damage.

What is the sense of fighting the faculty to get a bigger piece of the pie if that pie is getting smaller every year? The Governor and the state legislators are playing a game, and the game goes like this. If they adequately fund the university they will have to increase taxes and this will anger taxpayers, which means that come November 1978 incumbent politicians will receive fewer votes — an obviously intolerable situation.

The only way to win such a game is to make it even more intolerable for public officials to continue to emasculate the university. American politics is interest group politics. Each group in society must apply pressure to get its interests protected, and the university community is not excepted from this rule.

If we want to graduate from a vibrant, viable university we will have to do something very difficult join together and pressure public officials into respecting our interests. If we want to graduate from an academic island of the dead we have only to do something very simple; shutup and do nothing.

On the state of US

By STEPHEN KLEIN

Chances are you are sitting in the campus center; a majority of you are relaxing in the Hatch, sipping that cup of coffee you're holding in your hand (I'll even go as far as you say you're right hand). I suppose I'm lucky you're taking the time to read this; we all know how god damn precious our time is so let's make it worthwhile.

I was wondering, or should I say, I'd like to propose a purely hypothetical analysis of the current state of US. All of US, you and me, and even those people sitting way over there, the ones in the dark corner of the room; wave at 'em. What type of label can we sew on our generation? We've all heard of the "lost generation", and then there's that bunch of kids known as the "sixty's something," and the ones who made it through the dark depressing thirty's. But who are we? Not some kind of twenty-nine year old creepy skeleton that was left behind during the great gold rush of 'forty-nine. We are not a group of apathetic left overs, and our motto is not let bygones be bygones. We all care about each other. Right?

Ideologies buzz by our eyes and ears at such an incredibly frantic pace it becomes a relatively difficult task to grab one and think about it's value, or it's audacity. We are all aware of the perils of the corporate capitalist system (hope I didn't scare you). You're well aware that the United States supports the white minority's out and out racist regime of South Africa, in fact that all thoughout the civilized world we support oppressing dictatorships in the name of peace, love, and brotherhood; and above all money. But there's nothing we can do because we don't have enough money. What can you do with five bucks in your back pocket? So who owns US? Ford, Firestone, Rockefeller, du Pont, Vanderbilt, Mellon..., that's who. Did you know that in 1970 there were only three blacks among the 3,182 senior officer's and directors on the wealthiest corporations?

Did you know the stockholder's can file suit against the major corporations if they do anything to minimize their vast seas of profits? In other words if they support the black majority, who have every god given right to rid themselves of the oppressing minority, they'll not only lose their businesses and consequently their profits, they'll get sued. That is the law of our land.

What I don't understand is if everyone who is reading this is aware of these discrepencies within our system, why we don't do anything about it. For instance, the administration has just recently informed us of their intentions to close all check cashing facilities on campus. Whatever their ulterior motives, it is at the very least rather inconsiderate. Now there's absolutely nothing naughty about marching up to Whitmore and knocking on their door. Not only is it an exercise of our most important right, it's downright American! It's part of being a freewilled, educated individual. Why the stigma, the hushy hushy be quiet and let them demonstrate attitude?

Let's boil the whole system down to right here, right now. At first it seems like it involves everybody else, then it become the people over there, and eventually it's sitting in your lap. I don't want to demonstrate for you and I don't want you demonstrating for me. Let's demonstrate together Peacefully!

There happen to be a few individuals around here who are very aware, and subsequently very concerned over the current situation, politically economically, educationally, and they are sometimes referred to as radicals. I don't happen to be one of them (the Revolutionary Student's Brigade might not allow business majors amongst their ranks; just as well). Those Progressive Labor people seem to have something to say, I just haven't figured it out yet.

The point is be yourself, stand up for what's right keep your eyes open, and above all, ace your next exam.

News in Brief

Students protest discrimination

BOSTON [UPI] — About 20 Dartmouth College students demonstrated in front of the First National Bank of Boston Saturday, where trustees of the school met to plan fundraising.

A spokesman for the students said they were protesting discrimination against women at the Hanover, N.H., college. Dartmouth has a quota system for female applicants. The group said they represented a committee for "equal admissions" at Dartmouth.

Drug raids continue in NH

By United Press International

Franklin police, together with state police and drug enforcements, confiscated six pounds of marijuana and one pound of hashish valued at $3,000 over the weekend in another in a series of drug raids in New Hampshire.

Police raided a home in the Plastic Hill area of Franklin Saturday night and arrested seven adults and one juvenile in connection with the bust. Police Chief James Nowell said the raid stemmed from a tip there was a big sale planned. All seven adults were released on personal recognizance bond.

Rabin visits US early next week

JERUSALEM [UPI] — Prime MInister Yitzhak Rabin will take no new initiatives with him to Washington on an official working visit early next week, the Israeli cabinet decided yesterday.

"The aim of the visit is to continue and further base the foundations of understanding between Israel and the United States in connection with progress toward peace in the area," an official communique said.

"There is no need for new decisions to guide the prime minister," an official said. Rabin, due in Washington March 7, will be the first of a series of Middle East leaders invited to meet with President Carter.

He told his ministers before their meeting that he intended to consult with the new administration as part of Carter's efforts to arrange a peace agreement in the region.

Rhodesia left 'rudderless' with eased segregation

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (UPI) — A senior official of the governing Rhodesia Front party Sunday accused Prime Minister Ian Smith yesterday of leaving Rhodesia "rudderless" with his plan to ease segregation laws.

"The ship of state is rudderless because the government no longer stands on any principles," deputy party chairman Harold Coleman told the Rhodesian news agency IANA.

"Rhodesians want positive leadership because they are tired of the uncertainty and indecision which is bedeviling their country."

Educators seek full US recognition of China

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A group of Chinese-Americans, primarily educators, initiated a campaign yesterday seeking full U.S. diplomatic recognition of the People's Republic of China.

They chose the fifth anniversary of the Shanghai Communique, signed by President Richard Nixon and Chinese Premier Chou En-Lai, to place full-page advertisements in several major U.S. newspapers comprising an open letter to President Carter.

The group planned demonstrations today at the White House, State Department and Capitol to bring attention to their cause.

"The United States and China should have full diplomatic relations now," the group said in its open letter.

The statement objected to the continuing relationship between Washington and the Nationalist China government on Taiwan.

THE FASTEST WAY UP IN NUCLEAR ENGINEERING.

If you want to get into nuclear engineering, start by getting into the Nuclear Navy.

The Navy operates more than half the reactors in America. So our nuclear training is the most comprehensive you can get. You start by earning your commission as a Navy Officer. Then we give you a year of advanced nuclear technology, training that would cost you thousands if you could get it in graduate school. During your career, you'll get practical, hands-on experience with our nuclear powered fleet. Maybe you'll work on a nuclear submarine, maybe a nuclear cruiser. But wherever you work, you'll really get to prove your worth—as a young Nuclear Propulsion Officer entrusted with the most advanced technical equipment known to man.

If that sounds like the kind of responsibility you're looking for, speak to your Navy recruiter. He can tell you if you qualify as a Nuclear Propulsion Officer Candidate. Or call toll free 800-841-8000. (In Georgia, 800-342-5855.)

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Band to play April Fool's Day

Orchestra Luna has been signed to play the Fine Arts Center concert hall on April Fool's Day.

The band, which includes four singers and four musicians, is popular in this area. They have broken attendance records at both The Hatch and Sunderland's Rusty Nail in the past few weeks, drawing crowds of dedicated "Lunatics."

The April 1 concert was spurred by Luna's leader Rick Kinscherf's request, made on-stage at The Hatch, to play the 2048-seat auditorium. Sponsored by John Q. Adams Lower and Washington Middle dorms, the show will begin at 8 p.m. Tickets go on sale at the FAC box office and Ticketron on March 14, and will sell for $3, $4 and $5, with reduced rates for students.

If pressed to pigeonhole Orchestra Luna with a musical lable, they would be best termed a "theater rock" band. Most of their numbers combine short humorous skits with powerful rock music, some of which is jazz-tinged. Besides their strong local following, they are also a big act in New York, and are favorites at CBGB's, the most important rock club in New York City.

Senior photos

SENIORS — Have you made an appointment yet to have your yearbook picture taken? Appointments are filling up fast and the photographer will be leaving on March 18.

Make yours now by calling 545-2874 or come to the Campus Center 9th floor between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. Don't be left with a yearbook without your picture in it!

Scholarship

Cloverdale Parent Cooperative Nursery School, located at the Florence Congregational Church, announces a scholarship for a child to attend the school three days a week for the 1977-78 school year. Cloverdale, in its 28th year, is a parent cooperative nursery school for three and four year olds.

An important requirement for the scholarship family is the interest and the ability to actively participate in the program. Also their child would be unable to attend Cloverdale without the scholarship.

The deadline for applications is March 25. For an application for further information please call Beth Gaskill at 584-5782 or Linda Vitols at 586-4577.

American saint focus of talk

Mother Elizabeth Seton, the first American saint, will be the subject of a talk tonight at the Newman Center. Sister Madeleine Wheeler, a professor in the College of Food and Natural Resources here at UMass, and a member of the Daughters of Charity, the order Mother Seton founded, will give this talk. All are invited to attend this evening at 8:00 in the Front Lounge of the Newman Center.

Survival issues group forming

Everywoman's Center and the Psychological Services Center are co-sponsoring a supportwork group for Third World women over 25 years of age. The group, coordinated by Vickie Mays, a Black woman, will share and deal with many of the day-to-day survival issues such as how race, age and sex affect Third World women in dealing with each other and with men and women of all races.

The group will meet once a week for two hours and will begin the first week of March. Anyone who is interested in joining or getting more information can contact Vickie Mays at the Psychological Services Center in Tobin Hall, 545-0041.

Competition open in Jewish arts

The Five College Jewish Arts Festival is announcing a competition in the Jewish arts. Students in the Five College area are invited to submit an original piece of work dealing with some aspect of Jewish experience. Entries are welcome in two categories:

— Literary Arts — Short stories, essays, poetry, drama.

— Graphic Arts — Paintings, drawings, photographs.

Prizes will be awarded in each category. First prize is $25. The works of all winners will be appropriately published and-or displayed in the Five College area.

Submit entries to: Hillel Foundation; 302 Student Union; University of Massachusetts; Amherst, Mass. 01003. Entries are due by March 15.

Applications for intern program

The Environmental Intern Program announces that it is currently accepting applications for students and interested individuals for its 1977 spring-summer program. EIP handles paid internships throughout New England and New York. Internships deal with a variety of projects in environmental management, and candidates from both natural sciences and liberal arts are invited to apply. Applications are available at Placement Offices, School Departments or from EIP headquarters, c-o Massachusetts Audubon Society, Lincoln, MA 01773. The deadline for receipt of application is midnight, March 16, 1977.

Hillel sponsors occupation film

The B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation at UMass will show the French film "Les Violons du Bal" at 8 p.m. in Thompson Hall 104 tomorrow night. This deeply moving and brilliantly acted film, released in 1974, deals with the German occupation of France during World War II.

The story is based upon the actual childhood experience of the director, Michael Drach, who escaped from Paris with his family one step ahead of the Nazis. Cinematically, Drach employs an interesting technique of a film within a film; present day scenes are shot in black and white and the pas in color. David Drach, son of the director, plays the part of his father as a child. The cast also includes the director, who plays himself, Jean-Louis Trintignant, Marie Josee Nat, and Gabrielle Douleet.

There is no admission charge to the screening and the public is invited. The film is rated P.G. and is part of the third annual Five College Jewish Arts Festival.

Death for dealers

AUGUSTA, Maine [UPI] — Convicted dealers in hard drugs would face the death penalty or a 30-year prison sentence if state lawmakers pass legislation proposed by Rep. Stanley Laffin, R-Westbrook.

Laffin said over the weekend his bill would allow a judge to impose the death sentence on pushers convicted of dealing in drugs such as heroin.

"If the people go along with my proposal to re-establish the death penalty, I want these hard drug pushers, these slime of the streets, to be included," Laffin said.

The alternative to the death sentence would be a 30-year prison term with no chance for parole.

"We've got to teach these people a lesson," Laffin said.

"And if we can't get the deterrent of the death penalty, then the 30 years is better than what we've got now."

Laffin has introduced a bill to reinstate the death penalty in Maine for the first time since 1887. Capital punishment was repealed in that year after a man was found to be innocent just weeks after he was hung.

YOUR BIRTHDAY by STELLA WILDER

Monday, February 28 — Born today, you are somewhat inflexible in your views on life -- at best, an attitude that works against you during changing times. On the other hand, your inflexibility is reassuring to others in times of crisis, for it means that you can always be counted upon to behave in a way that is proper under the circumstances. You are not one to give way to emotional upset; rather, you stand firm, whatever the conditions that surround you. Friends and family -- those who know you best -- are never surprised to find you behaving in an absolutely civilized way while all around you chaos reigns; strangers, on the other hand, have been known to stand transfixed with amazement as you carry on in adversity.

One who believes absolutely in principles of right thinking and doing, you cannot be persuaded by any means into decisions or activities that go against such principles. You will suffer great hardship if need be -- but you will not compromise your principles merely to gain for yourself something better in life. Nor do you take any credit for such staunch behavior; for you, it is completely natural behavior, requiring no mental effort, though it may at times demand of you great physical stamina and emotional courage.

You possess an excellent memory -- and fortunately for those who may have crossed you at times, a forgiving nature. You do not hold grudges; indeed, you are quite as willing to come to the aid of one who has not served you well as you are to help a friend in need. Such an objective attitude in your personal relationships may cause difficulties at times, for there will be friends who will resent the fact that you make little if any distinction between friends and strangers.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Tuesday, March 1

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Romance is in the air today -- and you would be wise to leave it there. This is no time to upset a domestic apple cart.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Take care not to give away your major weakness to one who appears to be seeking your Achilles heel!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Statesmanship will take you far in your relationship with other people today. Depend not on personality but on diplomacy.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Your interest in people and their problems may place you in an uncomfortable position early in the day. Stand up for your rights at evening.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Another's inclination to gossip must be squelched today; otherwise, you may find you may find yourself the subject of an embarrassing and untrue tale.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Unless you can think of something good to say about another's recent efforts, you would do well to keep silent. Tact sugarcoats the truth.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept 22) — Your inability to be satisfied with a mediocre success should spur you on to a considerable triumph by evening hours.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Take effective action against one who is attempting -- sometimes successfully so -- to spoil your efforts. Defend your position.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — The situation on the employment scene may not encourage you to expect advancement. You may, however, be surprised in the near future.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Your efforts to influence another in your favor may fall flat -- unless you are able to offer rewards without seeming to do so.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — You may be successful in your efforts to bluff your way out out of a difficult situation. After all, you bluffed your way into it!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Taking another to task because of your own failure is not the way to win friends and influence people. Accept deserved blame.

We need certain college majors to become Air Force lieutenants.

Mechanical and civil engineering major ... aerospace and aeronautical engineering majors ... electronics ... computer science ... mathematics majors. The Air Force is looking for young men and women with academic majors such as these. If you're majoring in one of these areas, you may be eligible for either the two-year or the four-year Air Force ROTC program. And to help with the college bills, two, three, and four-year scholarships are available. These scholarships pay tuition, textbooks, lab fees, and $100 tax-free dollars a month. The Air Force ROTC program leads to an Air Force commission, an excellent starting salary, challenging work (with some of the finest equipment in the world), promotions, responsibility, graduate education and much more.

Find out today about the benefits of the Air Force ROTC program. It's a great way to serve your country and to help pay for your college education.

SALEM — The UMass hockey team's second half swoon reached its woeful climax here Saturday night, as Salem State downed the Minutemen by the score of 3-2 in the season finale.

The puckmen dropped 10 games while winning only four since coming off a six-week intersession layoff. They finished the season with an overall record of 8-13-1, including a Division II total of 8-11-1.

Salem State used second period goals by Bob Smith and John Baldassari and a third period tally by Ed Sousa, while Frank Snow and Bill White scored for UMass.

The teams played pretty even in the first period, with UMass coming out on top in shots, 10-7.

Smith opened the scoring early in the second period with a goal at 2:52. Baldassari made it 2-0 with a powerplay goal at 10:36 with assists going to Smith and Kevin Flynn.

Snow closed the gap to one with his ninth goal of the season when he tipped in Bob Jefferson's shot from the point with 46 seconds left in the period. Mike Merchant also assisted on the play.

The Minutemen needed to get the next goal, but it wasn't to be as Sousa made it 3-1 at 4:52. Mike Clasby assisted.

Minutemen goalie Dana Redmond went to the bench in favor of a sixth attacker with 1:10 left in the game and the White brothers combined for a goal with 58 seconds left. The goal was Bill's fifth of the season.

Redmond stayed on the bench, but the Minutemen could not pull the trick twice and left with a loss. The shots were as even as the game with the home team having a 32-30 edge.

The pucksters didn't hit the net often enough Saturday night as they dropped a 3-2 decision to Salem State. (Staff photo by Patrick Dobbs) meter required and optional diving events with point totals of 122.55 and 146.4, respectively. Linda Schuld took two second place finishes, registering a 121.05 total in the requiring diving and 146.1 points off the one meter optional board.

Diving coach Doug Forsythe stated that, "This last meet was not one of their better meets, but I think that they have done a good job all season long."

Boston University placed ninth in the New Englands, but head coach Ray Wetmore did not have a lot to be pleased with following the UMass meet, with the exception of Micki Heddi, a double event winner for B.U. Heddi was victorious in the 50 yard backstroke event (30.5) and the 100 yard backstroke (1:06.8) heat.

Coach Wetmore stated that "We have had a better season than I anticipated. We lost some good swimmers last year. We knew we did not have a star swimmer, aside from Micki Heddi, but the team has come along."

As soon as the merwomen had the meet won, into the water went Coach Atkinson. An extremely wet but pleased Atkinson summed up the season by stating: "The season went really well, even though we were 6-7. Two meets were lost by 3 points and it could have been an 8-5 record with those wins. I think that the season was very successful and we think that in the Easterns (March 3-5. Univ. of Delaware) we should have really good times."

And thus the Merwomen ended the 76-77 season the same way they started it — on a winning note.

Rams halt matmen

By BOB HASKELL
Collegian Staff

Although the score may not reflect it, the UMass wrestling team made a creditable showing last Friday night in a match with the powerful University of Rhode Island Rams. The host Minutemen lost 27-12.

In the feature event of the evening, heavyweight Dennis Fenton showed why he has dominated his class in New England for the past four years by defeating his arch-rival and chief competition in the upcoming New England championships, Rhode Island's John Staulo, by a score of 4-1.

In last year's New England finals, Fenton beat Staulo 2-1 to capture his third consecutive crown in the unlimited division. Friday night, Fenton had control of the match all the way, as he appeared quicker and more poised than his towering opponent.

Minuteman coach Dave Amato found himself in the position of having to juggle his lineup when senior Bob Spaulding, the team's regular 190 pounder, came up with an injury before the match.

The only other UMass grappler besides Fenton to emerge victorious was Steve Jabaut, who continues to sparkle at 142 lbs.

Freshman Bruce Rhodes (150 lbs.) found himself with the unenviable task of facing the Rams' Frank Puccino, New England champion last year. Despite his relative inexperience, Rhodes made a tremendous showing. The large crowd worked itself into a frenzy as the match came down to the final seconds before Puccino was able to cement his 7-4 decision.

"Bruce looked really good tonight," said coach Amato after the match. "Fenton and Jabaut looked especially strong. This match was closer than the score indicates. Rhode Island is the class of the east; and I think we did well against them."

At 7:30 on Tuesday night, the matmen from Harvard will visit Boyden Gym in the wrestling team's last regular season encounter.

Tracksters tumble

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

In a performance that typefied its dismal indoor season up to this point, the men's track team was disappointed and disappointing as it compiled only 9 points good for 8th place in the New England meet held over the weekend.

The team could only manage two seconds and a fifth place as it was well back in the field. Northeastern, as expected, won the team title with 71 points; with UConn, Providence, and BU trailing.

The consistent Joe Martens was one bright point for the Minutemen, as he took second in the high jump at 6'8", trailing winner Pat Augeri of UConn by 2 inches. Bob Fitzerald finished sixth in this event, one place away from scoring a point.

The other second was taken by the 2 mile relay team. Expected to have a shot at qualifying for the nationals, UMass held the lead throughout the race until Providence overtook the UMass anchor runner with a half lap to go. Providence's winning time of 7:40.9 bested UMass by 2.1 seconds, as the Minutemen finished in 7:43.

The splits were not the best that these runners are capable of. Jim Hunt ran a 1:54.5, Jeff King a 1:55, Steve MacDougall 1:56, and Chris Farmer a 1:57.5. The Minutemen will have one more chance to achieve the national standard in the upcoming IC4A meet.

The only other point came on John Richard's fifth in the 440, after he was nipped for second place. Richards faltered in the stretch and was passed by two other runners. His time of 50.3 was only one-tenth of a second out of second place.

In what coach Ken O'Brien termed "a perplexing and discouraging turn of events," the mile relay was disqualified after winning, and the two milers came up empty handed in a race that saw PC's John Treacy run a NE meet record 8:40.4.

The relay squad, keyed by Martens anchor leg of 48.5, came from behind to win, but was disqualified when it was ruled that third leg runner Richards had cut in too soon on a Maine runner. Brown was declared the winner in 3:21.8, but according to O'Brien, UMass' time was at least a second and a half better.

The two milers employed "poor strategy" in trying to follow the early pace, which saw a 2:05 first half run by the leaders. This "suicide pace" was responsible for the relatively slow times run by Frank Carroll (7th-9:04), John McGrail (8th-9:07), and Lou Panaccione (10th-9:09).

"We had hoped to do a lot," said O'Brien, "but we didn't do a thing."

Rimwomen win in last Cage game

By JOHN LOWNEY
Collegian Staff

If Saturday night's regular season finale was a tune-up for the playoffs, then the UMass women's basketball machine better return to the garage. The Minutewomen showed little of their usual explosiveness as they sleepwalked to a 65-60 win over Adelphi.

A crowd of close to 400 viewed the final Cage appearances of forwards Nancy O'Neil and Chris Basile, but the Minutewomen put on a disappointing show, throwing the ball away enough to keep Adelphi within reach.

Although it was the senior forwards' final Cage game, it took an energetic performance by center Lu-Ann Fletcher to hold back the Panthers. Fletcher, who will return next year, played like it was the final game of her life during the second half, as she scored 15 of her game high 21 points.

Neither team could maintain any consistency throughout the first half. The Minutewomen would hustle up court only to turn to ball over, while Adelphi would work for the good shot only to miss it.

As has often happened this season, UMass was unable to warm up quickly. The Minutewomen did not score for over three minutes. Cheryl Carey came off the bench to provide some ballhawking and passing spark, but no one had the hot shooting hand.

Adelphi, applying full court pressure like the Minutewomen, could not hit from the outside. Only when the Panthers worked the ball inside to forwards like Linda Frisby (18 points) and Nadine Reid were they successful, as Frisby hit at the buzzer to give them a 32-30 halftime lead.

The Minutewomen played the same lethargic, frustrating ball at the beginning of the second half. A typical play such as Fletcher resoundingly stuffing a Kathy Leddy shot only to travel soon after characterized the UMass frustration.

Fletcher was making her presence felt inside, however. Her solid rebounding and effective short jumpers kept UMass in the game. The junior center's foul shot with the score tied at 47 put the Minutewomen ahead to stay.

The Minutewomen went on to stretch their lead to six before Adelphi's Barbara McCormick hit from the outside. Then with about four minutes left, O'Neil went to work. The co-captain's two jump shots and one foul shot fittingly landed the death blow on Adelphi, as UMass pulled to a 58-49 lead.

Fletcher's dominating inside play was enough to stop the Panthers' comeback hopes. She calmly sank three foul shots in the final minute to sink Adelphi.

Coach Ozdarski said that her team played flatly, possibly overlooking this game before the playoffs. She described Adelphi as "a good little ballclub," however. She said, "Adelphi complemented its inside game with its outside game very well. We were lucky to get by."

For UMass the game was dangerously close to an upsetting loss. A repeat performance in the playoffs would be disastrous. The 18-4 Minutewomen will have a week of practice before the first round of action begins. They will battle Bridgewater State in the four-team state tourney at Brandeis Friday evening.

UMASS — Basile 3-1-7, O'Neil 6-1-13, Fletcher 8-5-21, Henry 2-0-4, Peters 8-0-16, Carey 2-0-4, Supinski 1-0-2, Peebles 0-0-0. Totals 29-7-58.

ADELPHI — Frisby 8-2-18, J. Kelly 7-0-14, G. Kelly 4-2-10, McGill 3-0-6, McCormick 2-0-4, Reid 2-3-7, Leddy 0-1-1, Totals 26-8-52.

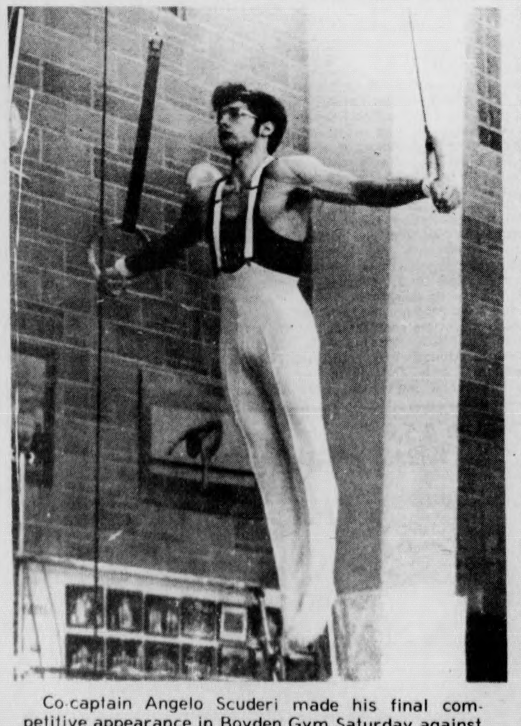
Gymmen finish with style

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

It was the last meet of the regular season, the last dual meet, the last home meet, and the last time seniors Angelo Scuderi, Steve Marks, Paul Marks and Mike DiMuro would be competing in Boyden Auxiliary Gym for the Minutemen. The gymmen took advantage of this last change to come up with "the best meet we've had all season" according to Coach Dick Swetman.



Co-captain Angelo Scuderi made his final competitive appearance in Boyden Gym Saturday against Temple. (Staff photo by Patrick Dobbs)

Temple, who holds second place in the Eastern Gymnastics League, won the meet with a 209.1 point total but the underdog gymmen combined for a very solid 205.9 total.

"I was really kind of surprised after the Springfield meet but the team really pulled hard and looked better then they have looked all semester," commented Swetman.

Senior co-captain Paul Marks came through with a very strong final effort and totaled a 52.10 all around score. Marks' strongest events were the horizonal bar and side horse where he received identical scores of 9.0. Paul received an 8.8 on vaulting but it was overshadowed by brother Steve's amazing 9.45 in vaulting despite a fractured hand. Paul's remaining scores were 8.5 on the floor, 8.45 on the rings and 8.35 on the parallel bars.

Senior co-captain Angelo Scuderi came through with a 51.8 all around total despite a reoccuring should injury and a sprained ankle. Scuderi performed strongly on the rings and parallel bars where he received scores of 8.8 and 8.75.

John Forshay, continually bothered by a knee ailment, scored a 9.2 for his floor exercise. This was only the second meet Forshay has performed on the floor.

Dave Kulaloff continued to excell in his specialty, the side horse, and received a 9.35 for his routine. Kulaloff is one of the individual gymnasts Swetman feels has a real chance to qualify for the national championships.

The eastern championships are next on the schedule for the gymmen. In two weeks, at Navy, the gymmen will have the opportunity to qualify for team and individual positions to represent the east at the national championships. Swetman feels his 5-5 Minutemen are not out of the competition because at the easterns, the teams are required to do compulsory routines. During the regular season, optional routines (routines selected by the participants) are used, so this will be an entirely different meet.

NU hosts Cagers; playoffs lie ahead

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team concludes it's regular season play tonight when the Minutemen travel to the Back Bay section of Boston to take on Northeastern University in a 7:00 p.m. contest at Cabot Gymnasium.

Tonight's game against the Huskies will serve as a final tune-up for the Minutemen, now 16-9 on the season, before they head to Philadelphia this Wednesday for the opening round of the ECBL playoffs. UMass, which finished fourth in the ECBL's Eastern Division, will meet first-place Rutgers in the opening game of the playoffs.

However, the focus of attention right now is on Northeastern.

The Huskies bring into tonight's game an unimpressive 11-13 season record, although they are amidst a three-game winning streak.

But don't let Northeastern's record deceive you because the Huskies play predominately a Division Two schedule, with some Division One New England teams mixed in. The Huskies have held their own against Division Two teams, but have been blown out of their games against teams like Syracuse and other Division One teams.

The Huskies are led offensively by 6-foot-4 swingman Dave Caligaris, who averages 21 points a game. Other than Caligaris, the Huskies have very little scoring punch.

Defensively, Northeastern plays mostly a 2-3 zone and is led in the rebounding department by frontcourtmen Dave Sheehan and Keith Motley, who average less than 10 rebounds a game.

Last year, the Minutemen defeated the Huskies 75-64 in the Cage. As a matter of fact, UMass has not lost to Northeastern in basketball since 1969. Between 1969 and 1976, UMass has beaten Northeastern seven times.

Northeastern plays a very deliberate style of basketball; something that has given the Minutemen trouble recently. Two weeks ago, UNH brought its slowdown basketball into the Cage and beat the Minutemen, and last week Maine gave them fits.

So, if anything else, tonight's game will give UMass one final chance to smooth out a few rough spots in their game before the league playoffs begin Wednesday.

Merwomen win big

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

The 1976-77 edition of the UMass women swimming team closed out the season with a relatively easy 78-53 victory over Boston University last Saturday at NOPE.

The win gave the merwomen a final seasonal record of 6-7 and lowered B.U.'s record to 5-4. Head coach Eve Atkinson summed up the last meet of the year accurately in stating, "everyone had really excellent times. It was good to end the season on a winning note."

Senior swimmers Roxanne Balducci of Fitchburg, Diane Perry of West Medford and Jane Welzel of Hopkington were honored by Coach Atkinson just before the meet got under way. Atkinson introduced each senior swimmer and also presented each swimmer with a bouquet of red roses.

The Minutewomen jumped off to a quick 7-0 lead in winning the 200 yard medley-relay and never looked back. Swimmers Rachel Mack, Lise Hembrough, Mary Ellen Butler, and Deb Schwartz recorded an excellent 2:01.0 time.

Deb Schwartz was the official quad (4 event) winner for UMass following the medley-relay with a 2:24.8 time in the 200 yard individual-medley, a 1:04.8 time in the 100 yard butterfly heat and capped it all off with a 1:17.0 clocking in the 100 yard breast-stroke event.

Triple event winner Mary Ellen Butler followed up the medley relay win with a 29.6 time for the 500 yard butterfly heat and she won the grueling 500 yard freestyle heat with a five 5:58.0 effort.

Rachel Mack, Hembrough and Suzy Strobel were all double event winners for the Minutewomen. Mack added a 58.7 time in her 100 yard freestyle victory to her previous medley-relay win. Hembrough won the 50-yard freestyle event in 27.1 seconds to go along with her medley-relay win.

Suzy Strobel won both the one

Selectmen ponder changes

By MICHAEL MCHUGH
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Board of Selectmen last night listened to proposals from Kurt Hertzfeld, a member of the Community Facilities Building Committee, concerning the renevation of the Odd Fellows building into a Community Center.

"This is a key building in downtown Amherst. The cost to renovate is minimal, according to the architects. I am totally supportive for costs to rehabilitate this building, which amounts to $1.1 million. It is needed to maintain Amherst as a livable and viable area," Hertzfeld said.

"There has to be a reason to get people into this area and downtown. The Community Facilities Building should be a core commitment of Amherst. The Amherst Redevelopment Authority and Boltwood-Walk, Associates say the same thing. Otherwise," Hertzfeld warned, "the Senior Center will move out if the town votes it down."

Hertzfeld explained that the matter would have to become a bond issue before the selectmen could act, and that this would hopefully be done in the near future.

The Boltwood Walk project is designed primarily to provide elderly residents of Amherst an "alternative for living," according to John H. Roetter, chairperssn of the Amherst Redevelopment Authority. The project will drastically alter the face of downtown Amherst.

Selectmen Chairperson Nancy B. Eddy expressed the hope that the building would be used as a Health Center and Multi-Purpose Center in addition to the Senior Center.

Selectmen William Atkins expressed fears raised by constituents that Town Hall agencies might move into the Community Center and new agencies would grow in the vacated space.

In other action, the selectmen voted to endorse a warrant for a Special Town Meeting and approved an amendxent for Traffic Rules and Orders.

The selectmen shelved a Committee Handbook presented by Peter McManus until the town of Arlington comes out with its version. Action was also delayed concerning policy on fiberglass gasoline permits.

Edward Kaynor outlines in his Shady Tree Policy proposal to the selectmen "a need to separate the Public Works Department and the Parks and Recreation Department." Kaynor said he feels there is a need for a separate department to grow and maintain trees in Amherst. "For someone qualified to say that a tree is diseased," as he says.

Eddy said a centralized Public Works Department is set-up to share equipment, and Atkins said, "There are checks and balances within Public Works and thus, no need for added bureaucracy."

The matter was rescheduled for next week.

Town Manager A. Louis Hayward gave a report on Economic Development. Eddy and Romer said it wasn't time to "leap into" the matter until "we know how the community feels."

Selectman Michael Sullivan added, "let's see how existing businesses feel."

In other matters, the legal complications of Farm Development Rights and Reports on its funding, was also brought up by the selectmen. The selectmen report that John Murphy is looking into the legal problems concerning funding. Hayward added that "the state statutes show it's a very gray area." Specific parcels of the Farm Development Rights were scheduled for Executive Session.

In miscellaneous items, Hayward reported that the residents of 47 Carriage road are now complying to zoning by-laws and a "cease and desist" order had been withdrawn. The Superior Judicial Court of Hampshire County ruled in favor of Amherst in a dispute with Hadley over a 1912 Sewer Act.

SW to host as candidates debate

By STEVE TETREAULT
Collegian Staff

The first public clash between the candidates for Student Government Association (SGA) president will take place tonight when Southwest sponsors a presidential debate.

The debate will start at 9 p.m. in Hampden Student Center.

However, due to last minute organization by coordinator Berylee Bubly, member of the Southwest Assembly, the candidates yesterday said they were uncertain about the importance of the debate and how they should prepare for it.

"All we know about the debate is that we've got to be there. We'll just go in with our platform," said Charles Pooler, who is running as a team with Joel Weissman. Both Pooler and Weissman are members of the Revolutionary Student Brigade.

Candidate Pinky Batiste said yesterday that she was "nervous" about the debate. "We really haven't sat down and talked about strategy," she said. Batiste, member of the SGA co-ordinating committee, is teamed with Jon Hite, former speaker of the Student Senate.

John Foley, running with Herbert Tyson, yesterday said, "We're going to go in very off-the-cuff. We'll just press for student services. The debate hasn't really been played up, so I don't know how important it is. It won't be that important in context of the campaign."

Students really don't take debates into account when they vote," Foley said. Foley is co-chairperson of the SGA Budgeting Committee. Tyson is also a member of the committee.

Although the candidates have been campaigning at dorm government and area government meetings throughout campus this week, Bubly said that the debate would be the best time for residents to view the teams.

"The debate will be more important to the candidates, though. It gives them a testing ground before a group, and will help them meet more people," Bubly said.

Bubly said the debate will not be aired over WMUA.

The debate format, according to Bubly, will consist of a four-minute opening statement by each team, a panel question period, and a general audience question and answer period.

The debate will be moderated by Southwest Assembly President Chris Durkin.

The seven person panel will consist of Diana Fessenden, representing Southwest, Gregg Wilson and Steve Tetreault, representing The Collegian, Jim Posgay and Lily Hu, who are associated with the Student Senate, and student debaters Jerry Zarrilli and Steve Silverstein.

The three teams still in the running are all that remain from the six that completed nomination papers. Jeff Allen and Arthur Fleitman dropped out hours after submitting their nomination papers. Jimmy Carter, Bob Padula, and Bill Auger bowed out Thursday, and the only person to run as a sole candidate, David Cameron, quit over the weekend.

Student towing proposed

By JAMES DALTON
Collegian Staff

Roger Sturgis, a UMass student, has completed the preliminary budget for a proposed student run towing service he hopes will be adopted by the Student Senate. A similar proposal was defeated in the Senate last spring.

Sturgis' estimated budget consists of an initial $27,000 capital budget and a $51,700 operational budget for the first year.

The capital budget includes expenditures for two new tow trucks, an office trailer, and fencing to enclose lot 13, the site for his proposed towing service. The operational budget consists primarily of funds for salaries, which would amount to $42,000.

Sturgis expects a first year income of about $49,000, based on the towing of 4,000 cars at $12.00 each and a one dollar storage fee after 24 hours. Amherst Towing towed 4600 cars in 1976 at $15 each with a three dollar per day storage fee.

Amherst Towing is currently appealing a January Department of Public Utilities decision that ruled their $15 towing fee illegal. Amherst Towing refused to comment on the situation, saying only that "we're not giving you any information."

Jim Starr, of legal services, is still researching the possibility of a class action suit against Amherst Towing for alleged refund policy violations. He plans to first present the case to the administration in the hope they will reconsider the relationship between the University and Amherst Towing.

Starr stated that "if we feel that what is going on is not in compliance with student's constitutional rights then we'll negotiate with the Administration, if that proves unfruitful then we'll decide on the suit." He added that "we won't take it (the suit) unless we feel we can win it."

Amherst Towing is presently the only company willing to tow at the University due to the general ill will associated with the job, a factor some opponents to the proposed student run service expressed concern over, feeling that it "could really give the Senate a bad name."

With the upcoming senate elections, the Senate is not expected to take action on the proposal for some time.

A proposed student run towing service could present some competition for Amherst Towing in the future. (Staff photo by Dale Griswold)

Security tightens in gyms

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

Security in women's locker rooms at UMass gymnasiums is being tightened as a result of recent complaints of male intruders harassing females using those facilities.

The alleged incidents occuring in the locker rooms range from "peeping toms" to a man masturbating and ejaculating into a woman's clothing.

David C. Bischoff, dean of the School of Physical Education; Justin L. Cobb, assistant to the dean in charge of facilities; Arlan F. Barber, head of the Northeast Physical Education (NOPE) gym; and Athletic Director Francis P. McInerney met last week to implement immediate interim security procedures and to discuss long-range permanent improvements at their facilities.

The incidents first became public when a woman writing under the alias "Teresa Morgan" wrote a letter to the editor of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian which appeared Feb. 16. In the letter, the woman warned other women on campus to "be careful" and encouraged them to report all incidents to police.

When contacted by the Collegian, the woman said she had an encounter with a male caucasian in NOPE Feb. 7, at which time she alleged that when she returned from the shower, she confronted a white male masturbating and ejaculating into her clothing.

In a similar incident at Curry Hicks during the same week, a woman entering the locker room from the pool allegedly found a "lean" caucasian male wearing a woolen cap in a corner, also masturbating. When she left the room to inform lifeguards on duty at the pool, the man moved to a shower and continued masturbating while watching a nude girl shower, unaware of his presence. He fled when he heard others enter the room.

The Sunday proceeding these two accounts, another woman, unfamiliar with the maze of isolated corridors at NOPE said she allegedly was deliberately misguided and accompanied by a "small, black man with white cotton in his ears" into a dark corner of a hallway in the NOPE basement. When he allegedly grabbed her arms, she said she screamed, threatened him with a pencil and finally pushed him away there, and also later on a stairwell where he attempted to block her path. After finally escaping, the woman was accompanied back to her dorm by three men who had been waiting to play basketball upstairs, beyond hearing range of the encounter.

Bischoff said after meeting that Cobb, who has been assigned the task to study the current structural handicaps of the buildings, will be submitting his findings and subsequent proposals by early April. These plans, which Bischoff speculated would include arranging controlled entrances into the buildings and also the locker rooms, will be fulfilled before the 1977 fall semester.

These episodes have not been confined to the gymnasiums. A woman said she had a similar experience in the woman's restroom by the check cashing windows in the Student Union during the afternoon of Feb. 21. She alleges that while she was in a stall, she heard a noise in the next stall. Upon looking at the floor, she said she noticed a penis protruding under the partition. As he proceeded to masturbate, she said she dressed hurriedly and fled from the room.

Job bank to create own economy

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

The newly-formed Students Economic Development Committee yesterday announced their proposals for economic stimulus on campus through the creation of a student job bank.

Committee Media-Coordinator Brian Harrington at WMUA radio studios said, "We are announcing the formation of the Students Economics Development Committee, an ex-officio committee of the Student Senate designed to set up a job bank for students who normally wouldn't be able to find work in the area." Harrington said.

Harrington said the bank's target group would be students ineligible for financial aid, but not so affluent that they wouldn't have to worry about money, "The middle-class student" said Harrington.

"Hopefully we can create an economy of our own right here at the university. It has been estimated that students spend somewhere in the neighborhood of $20 million a year in the valley. By taking money already in the hands of university students and moving it towards the creation of student services on campus, we can create new jobs here at the school. We should be able to offer quality services at prices competitive with local merchants," said Harrington.

Committee Research Coordinator John Fischer said extensive research into the feasibility of various services was still being conducted, but said prospects for the future seemed favorable.

"Right now over 130 students are working at programs like the Student Senate Lecture Note Service, and a number of co-ops. There is the potential for tremendous expansion of services of this type" he said.

Harrington said a student run towing service could be established on campus using student-owned tow trucks and lots. In addition to eliminating outside towing concerns, said Harrington, the Candidates speak at CAG meeting

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

Central Area Council last night hosted a candidates evening which featured two teams running for the Student Government Association presidential office: Pinky Batiste and John Hite, and Joel Weisman and Chuck Pooler from the Revolutionary Student Brigade, represented at the CAC meeting by spokesperson Scott Caulfield.

The Batiste-Hite team stressed to the CAC that the student body should unite during this SGA election through a strong voter turnout to strengthen the student lobbying effort with the state legislature for the maintenance and improvement of the academic program at UMass-Amherst.

Speaking for the Revolutionary Student Brigade platform, Caulfield attacked the existing foundations of student organization (SGA, Student Organizing Project, and the student trustee setup) saying they were not good enough. He also assured the CAC that the RSB is not pushing for a "revolt," but were fighting for the interests of the students.

Prior to the question and answer period with the SGA candidates, the CAC was informed by its treasurer, Rob Cannon, that its present funds stand at $1501, not a low $163, which was a speculated total last week due to misinterpretations of CAC financial obligations. It then allocated $100 to the Central Area Women's Center for a day trip to New York to view a Broadway play, "For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide When the Rainbow is Enuf". It also provided a Central Orchard Hill figure-drawing colloquium with $45 for supplies.

Present Co-Vice Presidents Mark Zinan and Andrew Topalian were nominated at this meeting for the offices of treasurer and president respectively for the March 28 CAC officer elections, which President Janice Perry noted are open to all Central Area residents.

Topalian reminded his colleagues that the CAC sponsored blood drive is currently underway. He has scheduled tonight for Greenough donors, Wednesday for Wheeler, and Thursday for Brooks.

It was announced by newly elected Activities Coordinator Dave Kantor that the bands Ellis Hall and the Bailey Brothers have been chosen to play at the combined CAC-OHAG spring concert in early May. He added that other groups are still being fielded.

Tabled until next week's meeting at Chadbourne was a request for $100 grant to finance an automotive maintenance and overhaul colloquium to be held in the Orchard Hill-Central area. Mark Richardson, the out-going, artisan resident at Greenough, will be appearing next week with a job description for his post and also applications for those interested in managing the crafts shop.

Student, guard in altercation

By JOE MAGLITTA
and BRAD GOVERMAN
Collegian Staff

A UMass student was arrested on disorderly person charges yesterday following an altercation with a University Store security guard, who claimed he had caught the man shoplifting a magazine from the store.

Winthrop Cummings, manager of the University Store, said the individual, in addition to being charged with disorderly person, would be prosecuted by the University Store for assault and battery, and larceny under $100. He said an arraignment in Hampshire District Court was scheduled for sometime today.

Dennis Lee, 1501 Washington Tower, said he was involved in the altercation with the security guard. Lee said he believes he was arrested for disorderly person, but said he was not aware of the store's intention to press additional charges. Lee said he was "looking around" when he was confronted by the security guard.

UMass police declined to comment on the incident, as did Amherst police.

Lee denied he had provoked any violence. "You saw how much bigger than me this guy was. I wasn't about to tangle with him" Lee said.

Witnesses reported Lee's jacket has been torn during the altercation.

"I don't make it a habit of swinging at people" the security guard said. "I generally try to talk to people."

The guard said he witnessed Lee taking a 75-cent magazine from the store without paying for it, and followed him from the store before confronting him. Lee resisted, said the guard, saying he was in a hurry to get to class.

Eyewitnesses said the guard attempted to physically restrain Lee. When Lee resisted the guard began yelling for someone to get additional security guards from the store.

A crowd of more than 30 people watched as the guard attempted to restain Lee. The two men struggled through a lobby facing the parking garage and out onto the steps of the Campus Center. Two security guards then emerged from the building and brought Lee into an office in the University Store for questioning.

Feminist dispels popular rape myths

By D.A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

"The rapist can be any man...the rapist lives where you live," said Del Dobbins, a member of a black feminist group in Washington, D.C. at an informal gathering last night at Mount Holyoke College to discuss rape.

Dobbins is also president of the Chapel Hill chapter of the National Organization of Women and deals mainly with counseling of rape victims.

"Rape has been on the rise since 1969," she said, and crimes of reported rapes have risen higher than other crimes. "The focus is on the offender, on men and why do men rape. She focused on the control, power, and politics of rape and not just sexual assaults.

Dobbins discussed some of the myths of rape. "I haven't heard a woman say she wanted to be raped," she said responding to a popular myth. "I think there is a lot of homework to be done."

Some people don't believe that rape occurs in marriage," she said. "Some women feel it should be dealt with by the law.

"Racism has been used particularly in the south to persecute blacks. The history of rape and the black male has caused another set of myths," she said.

Dobbins said that one of her personal goals in educating people to the facts of rape are "to enlarge the issue. Have folks consider rape a violent infringement."

She also feels that it is important to have women prepared to defend themselves against rape. "I'm very serious about protection. We have to be ready to automatically respond to protect outselves."

Dobbins asked the question "Can you anticipate rape? You can rely a lot on your instincts if you train yourself to. I don't think there is a computerized rapist."

She encouraged the group "to require certain things in people you associate with, be aware of where you are in terms of travelling.

"There are certain things you may not think of doing that you ought to think about doing. You can choose to be aware and you can choose to protect yourself."

Dobbins suggested that police departments participate in role-playing activities where they act the roles of the victims, and that hospitals have emergency room training for their medical technicians to deal more effectively with rape victims.

GSS discusses group funding

By D. PETERSON
Collegian Staff

Discussion of the budget for fiscal year '78 dominated the Graduate Student Senate (GSS) meeting last night, covering allocations to over a dozen campus organizations.

Among the groups receiving allocations from the GSS are the Collegian, The Legal Services Office (LSO), the UMass Transit Service, Counseling Assistance for Older Students (C.A.O.S.); University Child Care, the UMass Federal Student Credit Union, Student Center for Educational Research (S.C.E.R.), and the Off-Campus Housing Office.

Anthony P. Armelin III, business editor for the Collegian, and Teresa M. Hanafin, former news editor, represented the paper at the GSS meeting. Armelin admitted that the Collegian has had undergraduate leanings, but he stressed that the paper is a "student newspaper of the University."

Armelin stressed that there should be weekly meetings with the GSS, that there should be an amendment to the constitution of the paper to allow graduate students to serve on the board of editors, and that the paper should strive for a greater perspective of graduate student activities.

In response to comments made about the Collegian staff, editor-in-chief Ron Arena said last night, "We should make it known that graduate students can work for the Collegian. And if they can work for the Collegian, they should be able to serve as editors."

In response to a statement that the paper could provide better coverage, Arena said, "If we are not giving adequate coverage, we should do something to improve that, regardless of whether they funds us or not."

Legal Services Office was granted $21,389 by GSS. Vice president of GSS. Tim Austin said, "L.S.O. has aided in drafting GSS in drafting our grievance procedures, and has aided our office in various other ways." Austin expressed strong support for the group.

C.A.O.S. received $12,217 from GSS. Dave Bailey, representing the group, said that over 50 per cent of the people seen are graduate students.

The total budget approved at this meeting is $82,211. Treasurer Dan Fisher said, "This does not bind next year's senate. They must vote on the budget also."

In other action, Barbara Stack, secretary of GSS, showed a copy of a letter she had sent to Gene Piedmont, concerning graduate student issues:

"First issue is (the lack of) effective graduate orientation counseling on campus. It is quite clear to me that, while there may be a few conscientious graduate program advisors, they number few.

"Most grads don't know that the Ombudman's office exists.

"While the optimal solution might be the establishment of a T.A. in every department ... it is not feasible."

Stack also requested the release of information concerning the distribution of T.A. and R.A. monies according to sex.

Tim Austin announced that there are two, possibly three openings on the Graduate Senate Finance Committee. Nominations are open to fill these seats until March 14. Members of the Finance Committee urge women and Third World people to apply for the openings.

Internships change pace

By DUKE SIMONEAU
Collegian Staff

Would you like to take a semester away from UMass, applying some of the theories you've guzzled in various classes? Does the idea of working in Washington D.C. and getting a full semester's credit do good things for your brain? Then the Office of Internships has a deal for you.

At 8 a.m. in room 168 of the Campus Center tomorrow and Thursday nights, Lynda James, Washington Internships coordinator will explain the hows and whys of the five years old project that's given 263 students a chance to work in the nation's capital.

"Now is the time for students to set up their internships for the summer and fall," said James. "Basically, the students pick where they'd like to work and we try to set it up. Our placement rate is good."

Past UMass interns have worked in Congressional offices, for common cause, and many other governmental and public service groups. "And new interns aren't necessarily limited to where the others have gone," said James. "If someone decided it was in their major to work at the National Zoo, we'd write them a letter, work on them through the Washington Center for Learning Alternatives (WCLA), and try to set it up for them." The WCLA is a non-profit organization founded by William Burke, the father of UMass' Outreach program. Outreach was the forerunner for the Office of Internships.

"Most of our students use the WCLA, and we encourage them to," explained James. "They have living facilities for students from all over the country, it gives our interns a good chance to meet people from all over, and Bill Burke keeps an eye on them. If a job doesn't work out for some reason, WCLA can immediately switch them into another job. Since we're so far off, it'd be difficult for us to move as fast as he can."

Students aren't abandoned once they are placed in Washington, though. James and internship counselors Rob Levy and Linda Mitchell hold seminars in Washington with interns three or four times a semester. Both Mitchell and Levy spent last Spring in Congressional offices. Levy, a senior Political Science major, said, "Most of the Congressional internships are constituancy orientated. You spend a lot of time answering requests and questions of people from the Congressman's district, I worked for Congressman Joe Moakley, and got to see a lot of the inside dealings of government."

Mitchell, an Economics senior who worked for Congressman Mike Harrington laughed. "Some of it (class theories) applies, believe it or not."

Some internships are paid, either in stipends from Congressmen or if a student is work-study eligible, and the agency will pick up 20 per cent of the allowance. "All these internships are credited, though," said James. "It varies from department to department, but usually it's a combination of UMass 200 practicum credit and independent study in the department."

"Most of the Washington interns come from the social sciences; political science, journalism, anthropology, history, whatever. We do have students with all majors, though."

Students on internship have roughly the same expenses as a student on campus. Tuition and fees must be paid so the University will accept the credits earned.

"Expenses are about the same for a semester," smiled James, "But there's a lot to do in Washington, so people spend more than they would here. But it's worth it, to take advantage of the city."

Sometimes an internship results in a job, but usually students come back with graduate schools on their minds, to make themselves more saleable.

"We had one woman, though, in NBC-TV as a researcher," said James. "They offered her a job and she dropped out and went to work full-time. That's not quite what the program's all about, but internships as a rule make a student look good on job interviews."

Exchange promotes Five-College unity

By EILEEN CUSHING
Collegian Staff

Are you tired of treading around this familiar campus to the same classes day after day? If so, the Five-College Residential Exchange Program may be for you.

According to Bill Hunter, chairman of the Residential Exchange Program, "The program is one way for the Five-College student to experience different educational and living conditions without taking the big step of transferring." Operated by the Five-College Student Coordinating Board, the program was originally designed to promote a greater interchange and interaction between students of the Five-College area.

Within the exchange program, the student pays the normal tuition and fees to his home institution while receiving the benefits of attending another five-college school. Interested students should obtain applications in the Student Housing Office in Whitmore before Wednesday, the official application deadline.

Although UMass students are encouraged to apply for the exchange program, in recent years there have been some serious operational problems which could indicate a breakdown of the UMass program.

By necessity, the program operates on a system where equal numbers of students must be entering and leaving each school on exchange. This means that for each UMass student to exchange to Hampshire College there must be a Hampshire student willing to exchange to UMass. And according to Hunter, this just hasn't been happening.

"First of all," Hunter explains, "applications are down to discouraging levels all through the Five-College area this year." This may or may not be the result of ineffective publicity campaigns for the program. And as former chairman of the UMass Exchange Board Jerry Treshinsky asserts, "There are just so many more people trying to exchange to schools like Amherst and Hampshire while less and less people are willing to leave these schools on exchange. This creates a real breakdown in the system."

With fewer than 1 5 applications being received so far, the prospects of obtaining an exchange, especially to Amherst or to Hampshire, may be very slight for the UMass student. Slight, but not impossible, and Hunter encourages UMass students to apply.

Voter information

One selectman's position — William Barnes, Kenneth Mosakowski, Roger Jacque.

Two school committee seats — Ralmon Jon Black, Betty Brace, Casey Clark, Janice Denton, Nancy Gordon, Loren Howell.

Southwest — St. Brigid's church hall.

Sylvan, Orchard Hill, Northeast and Central (except Butterfield) — Marks Meadow School.

Butterfield — North Fire Station.

Above are the positions up for election today in Amherst and the polling places for students living at UMass. The purpose of today's caucus is to narrow the candidates to two per position. The survivors will appear on the town ballot in April. Polls are open from noon to 8 p.m.

One helluva dishwasher

"It's a job, and after a long day of classes, I'm glad to have a job where I don't have to think."

This story is a first in a series of interviews done on students that are working their way through college in one way shape or form. Collegian reporter Duke Simoneau reveals some of the more unique methods.

By DUKE SIMONEAU
Collegian Staff

Bonnie Lewis is in the midst of her job, a dishwasher at the Top of the Campus.

Buspans rattle, grease fires flare from the broilers, and the monster chugs with steaming efficiency as Bonnie Lewis feeds dishers through it.

Lewis, a park administration senior, is working her way through UMass as a Plongeur Extraordinaire at the Top of the Campus (TOC). In simple English, she's a helluva dishwasher.

Since September the 23 year old Rockport native has scrubbed and sterilized crocks and pots in the 150 degree steam fed dishwasher in the kitchen of UMass' answer to Boston's elegant Top of the Hub.

"It's a job," she shrugs. "After a long day of classes, I'm glad to have a job where I don't have to think."

Unlike the cooks and all the "out front" people on the 11th floor of the Campus Center (i.e. bartenders, buspersons, waiters, etc.), Lewis can do her job more or less automatically.

"I don't have to keep a half dozen drink orders straight or make sure everyone's water glass is full. I just keep the cooks in pans and the bar in glasses. I can work at my own pace and nobody hassles me."

What's a "typical" night for Bonnie? "I tend to work Tuesdays more than anything else, so it's not exceptionally busy. On Fridays and Saturdays, there are two dishwashers, one to load and one to unload the machine."

Lewis punches in at 4 p.m., slides her apron over her head, and launches into the pile of accumulated pots and pans from the "set up" cooking the three chefs have been doing since 3 p.m.

"They have to get all the sauces and gravies, etc., prepared," explained Bonnie. Some of the pots have to be run through two or three times, with intermittent steel-wooling. While the pots are touring the steam and water jets cycle, she has to reorganize the plates, cups, and other dishes stacked up by her lunchtime counterpart.

After roughly 45 minutes of scrub, scour and stack, she completely breaks down the machine and cleans it out for the evening rush.

"I have to shut down the steam valves, pull all the catch trays underneath, empty and refill the water tanks. After a while, you get it down to an easy system. But if you set things up wrong, especially the steam valves, you can screw the whole thing up."

About 5:30, just as the front doors open and the first soups and salads are being enjoyed, Bonnie slips down to the Coffee Shop for her supper break.

"That's one advantage of working for the Campus Center food areas. If you work through a mealtime, they give you a pass for a freebie downstairs. It saves the cost of buying dinner," said Bonnie.

When she gets back to her station, the dishes have already started. If people have overestimated their appetites, she scrapes the garbage into the disposal and starts the almost continuous roar of the dishwasher.

"Around 7:30 it's busiest," she said. "Most of the meals are finished then. At 8:30, the closing rush starts. When the front closes at 9:00, the salad bar crocks and all the dishes are dumped on the counter. Once I catch up with them, it gets fairly slack. All I have to do after the kitchen and restaurant people go home is keep the bar stocked with glasses."

Her career as a plongeur is only one in a series of jobs Bonnie has had at UMass and Essex Agricultural and Technical Institute.

"Most of my jobs have been either cleaning or kitchen," she smiles. "I've been a nursing home diet aide, a short order cook, dishwasher, and this summer a utility person at Look Park in Northampton. That was fun. My major job was to drive the mini-train there. I don't know why, but people who've had one job like this (dishwashing) end up cleaning or cooking all through college. I don't mind. I'd rather do physical work."

Would she recommend dishwashing as a way to finance college?

"Well, there's no glamour in garbage and sweat, but it does pay the bills."

Two more related incidents apparently involving the same man —a five-nine inch black, about thirty years old, claiming to be a Harvard graduate and a current post-doctorate fellow in the physics department occurred at the Fine Arts Center Feb. 5, a Saturday night, and the following afternoon on the 21st floor of the library was an engineering student with a 3.9 cum and she withdrew from UMass as a student two days later.

She explained that this encounter, coupled with her heavy course load and other tension she had been experiencing, compelled her to sit out the rest of this semester to think about her future. She added that she will probably return to UMass in September.

Although the self claimed post-doctorate had only verbally propositioned her, the previous night, she said her friend was not only approached by a man fitting the exact description and employing the same conversation, but was also grabbed by him. This woman was unavailable for comment.

Department of Public Safety date from the years 1974 through '76 show that the numbers of reported indecent exposures declined from 14 during the year of streaking to only 2 in 1975. Five incidents were related to the police department last year.

Although the February '77 statistics and the following accounts have not yet been compiled, the month of January witnessed two acts of exhibitionism.

Saul Chafin, Assistant Director at the UMass Department of Public Safety, noted that the low arrest record of alleged exhibitionists (once since 1974, a summons last January) is usually the direct result of understandably poor descriptions of these male flashers. However, he also said that many of the grievances the UMass Department of Public Safety receive are sometimes reported several days, if not a few weeks, after the incident occurred, causing inaccurate accounts by victims. He stressed that all events should be relayed to the police immediately.

The UMass police have undertaken security steps to complement those of the physical education officials.

necessity of having drivers and lot attendants would generate many new jobs. He said he expected opposition from commercial towing companies, but none that couldn't be overcome in court.

The establishment of a student run check cashing service is high on the group's priority list, said Harrington. In addition to creating jobs, it would offer a replacement for the Student Union check cashing service scheduled to close shortly, he said.

Harrington said the committee has scheduled a meeting for Thursday to further elaborate on possible services to be offered to students.

SGA presidential co-candidates John Foley and Herb Tyson participated in yesterday's press conference, but said they were acting "not as candidates, but as concerned students".

Governors meet with Carter

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Worried about undersupplies of energy and an oversupply of poor people seeking medical care, the nation's governors brought their problems yesterday to one of their former colleagues, President Carter.

Forty-seven state chief executives, gathering for the annual winnter meeting of the National Governors' Conference, met with the President, Vice President Walter Mondale and the Cabinet in a two-hour closed "working session" at the White House.

The governors opened their meeting with a session on energy and Medicaid. On the latter, the conference adopted a task force report warning that "explosive" costs in the federal-state program for the medically needy are reaching the breaking point.

Georgia Gov. George Busbee, head of the task force, said Medicaid has gone from $4.7 billion a year in 1970 to $14.7 billion in 1975 "and by fiscal 1980 it is very likely that we will spend in excess of $27.8 billion."

But Busbee said he was concerned that interest in Medicaid centered on cost control and elimination of fraud, while "true reform ... must meet broader tests of quality and equity."

"It is important at both the federal and state levels to recognize the legitimate health care needs and services of the country's poor and to provide programs to meet these needs," he said.

The task force report included proposals for consolidation of the 53 different Medicaid programs into a "single organizational entity," stronger efforts to detect and punish Medicaid abuses, and incentives, instead of penalties, to encourage efficient administration.

The governors heard Chairman Henry Jackson, D-Wash., of the Senate Energy Committee predict passage in March of Carter's proposal for a new federal department of energy, but warn that it alone would not solve the problem..

"The nation's energy crisis has returned with a vengeance," Jackson said. "A national energy policy cannot be created overnight — there is no magic formula and the specifics are not easy. There must be some hard choices and painful tradeoffs."

Carter sends message to Uganda

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter has sent a personal message to Idi Amin thanking the Ugandan president for his assurances of the safety of Americans in Uganda, the White House said yesterday.

Press Secretary Jody Powell also said Carter is considering whether to send State Department observers to Amin's Wednesday meeting at the Entebbe Airport with the 240 Americans he has forbidden to leave Uganda.

Powell said, "The President continues to follow the situation in Uganda closely," and disclosed Carter sent a brief message to Amin last Saturday expressing his appreciation for Amin's "public and private assurances that the lives and safety of Americans" in Uganda are not endangered.

The message was transmitted through the Federal Republic of Germany which handles U.S. relations with Uganda.

Besides statements over Kampala radio and public declarations, Amin had sent word of the Americans' well-being to the White House and State Department through the Ugandan embassy here.

"Those expressions from Amin did serve and do serve to help although there is concern here and we are continuing to watch the situation closely," Powell said.

In other White House developments, Powell said:

— The Washington Post asked for White House guidance prior to disclosing alleged CIA payments to Jordan's King Hussein. Carter regretted a report members of the congressional leadership leaked word he had met with Post reporters about the story.

ORAL TEST

March 10

All students should report at 8 p.m. in Bartlett 310.

A student may take either the written or the oral test for a three credit exemption. A student may take both tests for a six credit exemption. Only in a few exceptional cases will a student be awarded a six credit exemption based on the written scores. (If you have taken the test, passed it, and been awarded three credits, you may not take it again.)

THE WRITTEN TEST consists of two parts (both of which are to be taken on the same night). The first part of the test is a multiple-choice test of rhetorical skills. The second part is an essay. Students will be given three topics, asked to choose one and write a 500 word essay on the topic.

The oral test consists of two parts (both of which are to be taken on the same night). The first part is a short-answer test which asks speakers to reveal the rhetorical decisions made in preparing their speeches. The second part is a persuasive speech. The speech is to be PREPARED IN ADVANCE. A copy of the assignment may be obtained in the Rhetoric Office (Bartlett 308C).

News in Brief

China limits population growth

TOKYO [AP] China, the world's most populous nation, says it is successfully limiting growth by following the birth control advice of the late Mao Tse-tung and not his disgraced widow.

Neighboring India, the second most populous nation, meanwhile is abandoning a sterilization program under political pressures.

The Chinese rate of population growth "has gone down year by year since 1965 because of the promotion of birth control," Hsinhua, the official Chinese news agency, said over the weekend.

It said annual growth rates of 2.5 per cent in Hopei and Kiangsu provinces in 1965 had dropped to around one per cent, while the populous cities of Shanghai and Peking showed rates below 0.6 per cent.

The agency gave no figures for China as a whole. No exact figure has been given on China's population, but Hsinhua and other publications usually set it at 800 million.

Trains collide in Spain suburbs

BARCELONA, Spain [UPI] — Two crowded passenger trains collided in the Barcelona suburbs yesterday, killing and injuring numerous persons, the local railway company said.

The national news agency Cifra said at least 12 persons died. Other sources put the death toll higher.

An early check with several hospitals put the injured at least 63 of which a dozen were seriously hurt.

The Catalan railways company said two trains collided and survivors confirmed that there had been a collision.

Earlier the fire department in the suburb of Sabadell said the crash involved only a single train and was accompanied by an explosion.

Rescuers took the dead and injured from the wreck — 12 miles west of Barcelona — to numerous hospitals and morgues in the area.

Child abuse ends in death

WICHITA, Kan. [UPI] — Herbert Smith Jr., who lost a legal effort to keep his stepdaughter artificially alive, was charged yesterday with premeditated murder for the death of the 19-month-girl.

An assistant prosecutor filed a first-degree murder charge, the maximum possible, against Smith, 31, charging that on Jan. 31 he hit his stepdaughter, Janeen House, in the face so hard that she suffered brain damage and went into a coma.

The girl died Friday, a few minutes after she was removed from a respirator at the direction of her mother, Yvonne House Smith, who was told by doctors there was no chance for recovery.

Mass. Senate Pres. must make decisions

BOSTON (AP) — The shakeup in leadership of the Massachusetts Senate got underway yesterday with the burden of decision weighing on Senate President Kevin B. Harrington.

Harrington's worst fears were realized Friday when his hand-picked successor, Majority Leader Joseph J.C. DiCarlo D-Revere, was convicted in federal court on charges of extorting money from a management firm being probed by a legislative committee at the time.

DiCarlo and Asst. Senate Minority Leader Ronald C. MacKenzie, R-Burlington, face prison if their legal appeals fail.

Replacement of MacKenzie by the seven-member minority party in the Senate is no major political chore because there are so few members of the GOP. But Harrington has a sticky problem in selecting a replacement for DiCarlo because there are many Democrats grasping for the brass ring.

Inspectors search for alleged extortionist

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — Postal inspectors and State Police searched yesterday for a dark-haired man suspected of planting bombs, writing threatening letters and leading authorities on a wild goose chase in an alleged extortion attempt against a family operating a Worcester food chain.

Irvin Peterson, special bomb investigator for the postal service, said the unidentified six-foot white man between 25 and 30 years old gave himself away Feb. 17 when he sent a threatening note by special delivery from the Worcester post office.

The note arrived two hours after he posted it. The clerk's recollection of the man's description still was fresh when inspectors rushed to the post office to ask him who sent the mail, said Peterson.

Peterson issued the description yesterday and said he believed the man placed a bomb under a Massachusetts Turnpike bridge near Westboro Friday night.

Peterson said authorities believe the same man has been threatening the owners of the Iandoli food chain since last November when a pipe bomb was found unexploded in a supermarked at the White City Shopping Center, Shrewsbury.

Elizabeth J. Iandoli, wife of Wilfred Iandoli, president of the Honey Farms stores, was injured Jan. 26 when a device which she received in the mail exploded in her hand.

Peterson and other postal inspectors found the bomb under the bridge as they followed an unidentified member of the Iandoli family on a fruitless journey to deliver $10,000 demanded by an extortionist.

As they followed, the family emissary went to two different telephone booths to receive anonymous calls and instructions which led him to a bridge near Westboro.

There, he found a box and the instructions to put it end up in his car trunk. The authorities found a bomb inside it.

Peterson said the suspect may be a disgruntled former Iandoli employe or a person who may have been prosecuted by the chain for theft.

Worcester police Detective Capt. Willis Junilla said the letters and bombs apparently were directed toward the family and not to any individual and that the extortion attempt originated in the area.

"The telephone calls have been local calls," he said.

The authorities insisted they had coordinated their investigating efforts after the State Police found out about the bomb under the bridge almost accidently when two State Policemen came across Peterson and a bomb squad from Ft. Devens trying to explode it.

"At the present time, all agencies are cooperating in the investigation," said State Police Detective Lt. Ralph DeFuria.

WHY IS SIGLINDA STEINFÜLLER DEAN OF BEER?

WHY NOT?

Fellow Beer Persons,

Life is full of unanswered questions such as: Is there intelligent life elsewhere in the universe? And if so, do they wear socks?

In beer, however, there are no unanswered questions. Because there is only one word for beer, and you know it.

Schlitz.

Therefore, as your Dean of Beer, I suggest you research the essential rightness of the word for yourself at your next social function. Or even your next antisocial function.

And please note: The recommended source material for locating the word can be found in any phone booth. In other words, look in the Yellow Pages. Under "Beer."

Thank you.

WHEN IT'S RIGHT, SCHLITZ YOU KNOW IT.

The unionization revival

To the Editor:

A recent report by the Student Center for Educational Research asserts that the state of Massachusetts has plummeted from 28th to 48th in money spent per student in higher education since 1975. Indeed, nearly everyone at UMass has felt this decline through overenrolled classes, increased staff workloads, stagnating salaries, increased expenses and an ever deteriorating physical environment. If Governor Dukakis' proposed fiscal year '78 level-budget of 68.1 million dollars is accepted the present situation can only get worse. Along with the continuing toll which inflation will take, the well deserved pay increases for faculty and staff will have to be absorbed within the "level-budget." It seems apparent, then, that UMass students will have to tow-the-line.

The students position in all of this remains sufficiently vague, in so far as we possess — through the SGA — no real power in terms of effecting an alteration which is likely to be pleasing to us. A plan has, however, begun to take form. It is one which would grant students the right to bargain with the administration and trustees over the substance and conditions of their relationship to the University. It is called student unionization. Student unionization is a concept which has been set in motion by the Student Organizing Project, an agency which operates under the auspices of the Student Senate.

As it stands now, students at UMass are in the national forefront in their quest for a recognized, legitimate union of students, as such has not been the case in the past. The union would act as a collective unit, whereby students could negotiate a contract with the administration of any issues germane to their immediate existence as students. Such issues as tuition, course offerings and academic requirements would be determined in large part by students through their negotiations with the administration and trustees.

At this point the future path to the formation of a union of students has been paved through the institution of such student agencies as the Student Organizing Project, Student Center for Educational Research [SCER], Legal Services Office [LSO], and the Economic Development Center. A single objective is shared by each of these organizations, that is, the ultimate formation of a student union.

This week, in the Campus Center, the SOP is sponsoring a unionization drive. A table is set up in the CC with much literature describing the concept of a student union and what the formation of one could do for students [as well as what our not forming one would do]. There is information on such issues as the effects of faculty unionization on the student community, departmental and dormitory council organizing, and the new Campus Communications Network — a mechanism by which student groups can disseminate information on issues which effect the conditions of students quickly and efficiently. A copy of the SCER report cited above ["Level Funding: The Decline of Quality Education at UMass-Amherst] is also on hand. If you have any questions as to what was mentioned above and how you could possibly get involved, drop by the SOP, in the Student Union rm. 426, or call 545-2415.

R.S.B. replies to Field

To the Editor:

The following letter was received by the Revolutionary Student Brigade on Monday, Feb. 20:

> To the Members of the Brigade:
>
> I was pleased to note the interest of the Revolutionary Student Brigade in the check cashing services on campus. The matter has had extensive review and investigation during the past two years.
>
> I would be pleased to receive an invitation to attend a meeting of the Revolutionary Student Brigade and to discuss this matter with you in depth.
> Sincerely,
> William F. Field
> Dean of Students

We were pleased to receive Dean Field's letter. We were also interested to hear of his two years of "extensive review and investigation". We feel that this information should be presented to the student body as a whole. One of the problems on this campus is that everything is handled by a few people behind closed doors, without involving the students.

In two days of investigation, we found that students need the check cashing service, and are opposed to it being cut. We also found it linked to the cuts of other services on the campus, as well as the tuition and fee increases.

We suggest that Dean Field's "review and investigation" be released to the Collegian for campus debate.

In closing, we have a few questions. Why wouldn't the representative of the Administration sign the petition opposing the closing of this important service? If Dean Field were so 'pleased to note our interest', why were we met by the police, instead of by Dean Field, when we came to present the petition?

These and other questions can be presented in the Collegian. We are also willing to send a representative of the R.S.B. to speak with Dean Field in the future.

Idi's time has come

By PAUL YANOWITCH

Slowly, but surely, it is becoming painfully obvious that Idi Amin Dada has got to go. Bluntly put; but true. Some time ago, Daniel Patrick Moynihan (the living anomaly — the only effete Harvard intellectual snob with charisma and charm), while U.S. ambassador to the U.N., denounced Idi Amin as a murderer, and made subsequent disparaging remarks, not fit for the gentle reader.

Outraged by this rare seething condemnation, our new ambassador of good will and charm to the august body of appeased, miscreant, puerile politicians, Andrew Young, replied to Moynihan's attack. Young declared that Daniel (formerly of the lions den), was 'picking on' Amin, simply because the King of Scotland was Black, and that the attack, not only being racist, was another example of incogitant thinking. After all, we have never seen Moynihan attack other leaders in power, who are afflicted with tertiary syphilis!

Well Andy, you goofed. Not in office one month, and already eating your own words; a faux pax at this early stage! It seems that now, after Idi's little trick with a gun and an Archbishop (the Archbishop on the wrong end of the gun), Andrew Young, too, has issued a vitriolic condemnation of Idi and his games. Obviously, Young's statements were not racially motivated; the question is what did motivate them!

I have always labored under the gross misconception that the past has taught us valuable lessons. No longer would mad, insane megalomaniacs rule, or practice genocide in our modern, humanistic world. Yet look at the front pages; thousands on thousands of people, tortured, maimed, imprisoned, even killed, and we stand by and shake our heads.

I am convinced that Idi has seen a copy of the Guinness World Book of Records, and is attempting to gain top honors in the category of "Most People Killed per year by a Seasoned Performer in Power". I should warn him that he faces an imposing threesome; Mao, Stalin and Hitler. This formidable trio, in solid control of the category, is as lethal as Ruth, Gehrig, and DiMaggio!

But why is this crazed pestilent still allowed to ravage an already ravaged land? Why you ask? A few reasons:

1. My theory is that the CIA is paying Idi to dispose of unwanted U.S. political prisoners (like Andre Sakahrov). At night, the U.S. government is shipping the remonstrants over to Uganda, where Idi dispatches them in fine fashion. If Cardinal Cooke is found alive, my theory could be shot to hell, though.

2. The U.S. government is waiting till Idi steps on our soil, in which event they shall crucify, then indict, try and convict Amin for crimes against humanity (Telford Talyor is still around, and for hire, I am sure). So, in order to assist my government I shall perpetrate a ruse; I openly invite Idi Amin Dada to come to UMASS and be our Speaker of the Senate. Then we could nab him!! Actually, how much more a dictator could he be than.......

The Amherst— New York connection

Over the weekend of Washington's birthday I travelled to Long Island to visit my family. On the way home and on the way back to UMass I spent some time in the Big Apple, New York City.

Since then I've thought about the city itself quite a lot. It's one of my favorite places in the country, and I've done some travelling, and I would love to have the opportunity to live and work and play there at some time during my life. Yet with all this affection for the littered, crime ridden financial failure, I still find it very difficult to come up with a plausible, personally satisfying theory as to why New York City is one of my favorite places.

One reason might be the same reason why I like UMass so much, and that is that while I live and work (go to school) in a densely populated area which consequently is supportive of discourse and exchange and high in its offering of activities, the repose of Mill River or a cow pasture is close by. And the transportation away from the city of UMass is easily enough accomplished.

In New York City, however, it is costly and time consuming to leave the city for a nice place to relax. Therefore, one gets used to going to Van Cortland Park or Central Park or the Bronx or Prospect Park zoos to throw a Frisbee or a football or to take a walk at a pace slower than that of Manhattan.

Both UMass and the Big Apple alike have their holy elders. We with our venerable professors (though all are not sixty years of age they do have much to offer because of their life experience) and the Apple with its life long residents, for surely they've seen some sights worth beholding. And so both cities have much to offer the person who would come to understand the dynamics of life.

And while each city has its offerings of high culture, each also has its own crime problem, its own poor and ill-taken c re of residents, and its own merchants that fleece residents.

So, if each has the same ingredients, what then are the differences that make up the final piece de resistance? The differences are time and volume. New York City has simply existed for a longer period of time than has UMass and the cosmopolitan Amherst. And New York City has also handled and still does handle a much larger number of people and a much larger number of people and a much larger number of people who remain in the city after indoctrination is completed.

As a result of these two variables, the Apple is exceedingly visible and blatant. You know there are poor not because you have checked with the welfare and unemployment offices in Northampton to get the statistics but because you see them on the street and outside your place of employment everyday. You know there are demagogues collaborating with landlords not because you see your rent has risen but because your rent has risen in a rent-controlled building. And you know about the good samaritans not because you read about one in the Collegian or in the Daily Hampshire Gazette but because you've seen hundreds of them doing their samaritan thing.

While UMass and New York City are similar metropolises, the security and beauty of New York is in its blatancy. Black and white and in between, its all there and bigger than life, as all encompassing as an encyclopedia's countless pages, impossible to know it all, but easily understood and loved.

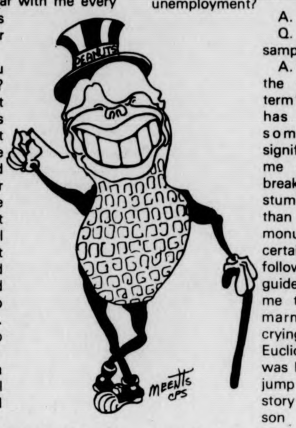
Dear Jimmy...

I must confess that last week I wrote to Jimmy Carter. I figured that in his role as Washington's new Miss Lonelyhearts he'd be able to answer a few questions for me. Well sure enough, the President promptly sent me his replies. I thought of sending his answers (along with my questions) to the Globe, but I decided that my first responsibility was to those enduring souls who bear with me every week. What follows is the text of our correspondence.



Q. Where do you stand on frontal nudity?

A. I am somewhat behind (ha, ha) on this issue. Still I believe that anyone should be allowed to go around neked (naked) if he or she so desires. I have always maintained that everyone has equal rights so if frontals want to go around neked (bare) they're entitled to. Personally I sleep with my jammies on.

Q. Why does Amy go to public school?

A. Well Mark, I have a little secret to tell you. I tell everybody that all our children have gone to public school in the past and that Rosalynn and I are strong believers in public education but the God's honest truth is we can't afford to send Amy to a private school. I mean two hundred thousand a year can only go so far — what with my two sons welching off the old man by living in the White House, Amy's optometry bills, and the bail money I'm always putting up for Billy. But remember Mark, mum's the word.

Q. What do you think of necrophilia?

A. It's fine between consenting adults.

Q. How does one go about determining the sex of an animal cracker?

A. I brought this question up at the supper table and it was a stumper. Chip suggested a magnifying glass and Amy wanted to know what sex meant. I told her that I couldn't answer every question put to me.

Q. What do you plan to do about unemployment?

A. Unemployment?

Q. Have you ever sampled drugs?

A. Once again mum's the word Mark. The term "hash browns" has taken on a somewhat more significant meaning for me since Chip fixed breakfast last week. I stumbled about higher than the Washington monument all morning, certain that I was being followed by a Sherpa guide who kept asking me to open a jar of marmalade. I kept crying "Where are the Euclidians?" Thinking I was Birdman, I tried to jump out of the second story window but my son restrained me. From now on I stick to poached eggs.

Q. What are your thoughts on alleviating the drought in the far West?

A. Get the National Guard to raid Billy's refrigerator. He's easily got enough beer to quench every thirsty throat from Carson City to Sacramento.

Q. And finally, do you have any particular slogan in mind for the 1980 presidential election?

A. Welcome back, Carter!

National government looks after your health

By KATHY RUSSELL

After forty years in the hanging, National Health Insurance may become a reality under the Carter administration. Each Congress since that of Franklin D. Roosevelt's administration has had a proposal in the form of National Health Insurance before them. Could it be that this Congress will find it imperitive to enact a National Health Insurance bill to reform the present Health care system? Congressmen such as Senator Edward Kennedy (D-Mass.), believe it is inevitable.

There is no precise definition for NHI, but in general a National Health Insurance plan would: (1) establish a plan by law or provide substantial incentives for its voluntary establishment, (2) use some type of insurance mechanism, (3) potentially affect the majority of the population and (4) specify the type of medical services to be included.

There are eighteen different proposals before the 95th Congress which are categorized as National Health Insurance. They range from the Kennedy-Corman bill, which is a comprehensive Federal takeover of the health-care delivery system to the Long-Ribicoff bill, which offers catstrophic protection for long-range illnesses costing over $2000 and-or for hospitalization over sixty days.

To understand the delay in the enactment of NHI, one must have an understanding of the legislative process. There have risen over the past forty years many special health interest groups which all lobby for their own proposals. With all of these conflicting groups testifying at NHI hearings, you can imagine how mind-boggling it is for the Congress to reach any decision.

What is becoming apparent on Capitol Hill is that Jimmy Carter, who has stated his approval of a form of NHI, will have a proposal of his own brought forth through the Department of HEW. Nevertheless, Carter has stated that he will take no action towards this for at least another year. Consequently, there will probably be no action taken on the other eighteen proposals awaiting the 95th Congress.

A run-down on some of the bills usually starts with the Kennedy-Corman bill which is the most 'socialized' or nationalized of all the proposals. It proposes a complete federal take-over of the medical care system including the role of private insurance companies and the fees and rates paid to doctors and hospitals. This is why this bill has such a bad reputation among insurance companies, the AMA and the AHA which have their own NHI proposals before Congress in which they play a key role. Kennedy-Corman is sponsored by the AFL-CIO and the United Auto Workers. It is also supported by Common Cause — which can be equated with much consumer backing.

The Long-Ribicoff insures against catastrophic illness. This bill is not very practical for those who do not have a government approved insurance plan like Blue Cross to insure them to the $2000 mark or before sixty days in the hospital. The bill does make certain provisions for the poor and medically indigent. The major benefit of this proposal is its safeguarding effects against bankruptcy from costly illnesses; however, this may also increase the likelihood of people using this insurance for unnecessary surgery. Because the bill makes room for the private insurance companies, it seems to be more accepted with them.

Representative Al Ullman's bill is basically a compromise between the Kennedy-Corman and Long-Ribicoff bills. Besides offering insurance benefits, it incorporates local health-care corporations very similar to Health Maintenance Organizations — services offered on a pre-paid basis — now in operation throughout the country. Doctors receive salaries or are paid capitation fees — so much per member patient — as is done in England. This is done rather than the conventional fee-for-service arrangement which sometimes leads to overcharging and unnecessary surgery. The AHA backs this proposal because hospitals will receive the key role of managing the health-care corporations.

Of course the bill the AMA supports — the Fulton bill — will promote the interests of doctors. They continue the fee-for-service practice and the private insurance role. The only federal role would be to mandate the size of premiums paid. It also offers tax credits for those who buy insurance and subsidies for the poor. There are many variations on these bills. What is for certain is that each proposal has their supporters playing a key role in the health-care delivery system.

What is it that is so drastically wrong with the present health care system? Of the 215 million people in the United States, 25 million do not have any health insurance of any type. Only 60 per cent of the population are covered by Blue Cross-Blue Shield or medicare-medicaid; of these only 35 per cent are covered for hospital costs. Also, of the government's $400 billion budget, only 10 per cent of this goes to Health Care. According to economist Saul Waldman, who compiles WHI literature for HEW, the government would have to raise its health budget to $60 or $70 billion if NHI were enacted because national health insurance will increase the number of people with insurance and also increase their benefits according to which plan is chosen.

Even if NHI is enacted, it will be inefficient if the uneducated remain that way and fail to detect symptoms of diseases before it is too late. Cleanliness and common sense cannot be legislated. Health education is an imperitive if the government wishes to make the best plan work successfully. Individuals can become more aware of the new health proposals before Congress by simply writing to their Congressman-woman for up-to-date information on any issue.

National health insurance aims at the people who need it the most — the majority of citizens who do not have financial protection under current public-policy. It will basically turn a very dispersed, profit-seeking health care system into a monolithic, bureaucratic profit-seeking system.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Ethnographic films

The Tuesday evening anthropology dept. film series continues, with showings on March 1 and March 15. A diverse set of cultures are included in the March 1 presentation of three films. "Ishi in Two Worlds" shows the plight of a California Indian man who was the last living member of his tribe; "Yanomamo" takes the viewer to the tropical forest of Venezuela for a glimpse of the life of the Yanomamo Indians; and "Discovering the Music of Africa" offers a sampling of the musical traditions of several cultures of sub-Saharan Africa.

The theme for the showing on March 15 is traditional crafts. The "Basketry of the Pomo" (California Indians) examines the skills of Pomo basket makers, whose work is among the finest basket-weaving in the world, while "Acorns" shows such baskets put to work in the preparation of food by California Indians. Then "Loon's Necklace" briefly relates a Salish myth through the use of the intricate carved wooden masks of Northwest Coast Indians. Finally, the craft of a Yucatecan Maya potter is illustrated in "Ollero Yucateco."

Both presentations will take place at 8 p.m. in 102 Thompson Hall. No charge.

Grant deadline soon approaching

Less than one month remains for artists to return their fellowship applications to the Massachusetts Arts and Humanities Foundation. March 15, 1977 at 5 p.m. is the deadline for painters, printmakers, sculptors, photographers, poets, fiction writers, and playwrights applying to this year's Artists Fellowship Program. To be eligible artists must be residents of the Commonwealth over 18 years of age and not enrolled as a student in a degree granting program. Several $3,000 fellowships are awarded annually in each category. The work is reviewed anonymously by panels of three out-of-state artists whose only criterion is the quality of the work submitted.

For more information please contact the Foundation: 14 Beacon Street, Boston 02108. 617-723-3851.

David Bromberg in concert at SUB

David Bromberg and his band will appear in concert Saturday night, March 5, at 7:30 and 10:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. Tickets for the shows, sponsored by the Program Council Music Committee, are on sale now for $3.

David Bromberg's concerts are always highlighted by the wide variety of musical styles that he and his band venture into. They shift gears easily from country ballads to bluegrass to western swing to full-tilt "country" rock and roll.

Bromberg is as versatile a musician as you'll find. He is at home on acoustic guitars, fiddle, banjo and mandolin. His long list of musical credits is another clue to what's coming on March 5. Apart from his own albums, David has had close associations with Bob Dylan, Vassar Clements, George Harrison, Jerry Jeff Walker, Jim Ringer and others.

Self Exploration workshops to begin

Six free workshops will be offered Wednesday evenings 7:30-9:30 in Campus Center 811-815. March 2, "Coping with Anxiety and Depression" by Andy Saykin; March 16, "Dreaming: The Sleep of Symbols" by John Shibley; March 30, "Getting to Know Me-You" by Gina Ariosa and Georgia Noble; April 6, "A Question of Self Awareness: Sexuality" by Marcia Lovell, Maureen Stanley and Jill Berkson; April 13, "Massage, Healing, Wholeness" by Georgia Noble and Jerry Jacobs; April 20, "Exploring Your Family Role" by Larry Ruhf. For further information call Room To Move at 545-0400.

SOP sets up information table

The Student Organizing Project will have an information table set up on the Campus Center Concourse from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.. It will be disseminating information regarding budget cuts, level-funding, faculty unionization and its effects on students, student unionization and collective bargaining, departmental council organizing, and the formation of the Campus Communications Network, as well as to launch a student union endorsement drive.

Clinical experience to be offered

The Northampton State Hospital is offering Five College students an opportunity to obtain clinical experience; students will learn positive behavior modification techniques and will apply them in a project focused on socialization and dining behaviors. The dining program, part of a large project designed to create a therapeutic milieu for an entire ward, will operate during lunch and supper hours. Between meals, activities programs will be available for the residents and for those students who may wish to participate.

Anyone who can give at least three hours per week is encouraged to attend the meeting in the Bodman Lounge in the Helen Hills Hills Chapen at Smith College tonight at 7:30.

If you are interested and are unable to attend this meeting or if you are interested in other volunteer opportunities available at Northampton State Hospital, please call Jim Kwiecinski, Director of Volunteer Services, at 584-1644, ext. 282 or 284.

Pardon does not include all veterans

Although President Carter's first official act after his inauguration was to announce a pardon for Vietnam-era draft resistors, it should be noted this pardon does not affect veterans or those liable to violations of military law; it covers only draft violations that occurred between August 4, 1964, and March 28, 1973. Violations involving "force or violence" were not pardoned nor were "related violations" of law, such as bail-jumping.

However, the executive order did instruct the Justice Department to cease all prosecutions for draft violations committed during this period. This means the unconvicted resistor can come home. Also, the Carter pardon replaces the Ford clemency program, although the status of military resistors who may have been included in the Ford program will be unchanged.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Tuesday, March 1 — Born today, you are by nature somewhat timid, especially in the presence of strangers. On the other hand, once you are able to open up, to feel free and easy with people, you are a fun-loving, outgoing, seemingly extroverted individual. You are at your best when you are in a situation that enables you to take on the character of another person, when you are, for instance, on stage. You would make an excellent actor. If you should choose such a career, though, you will have to learn how to get over your initial fears of trying out for any one production and recognize your talents.

Past successes do not usually spur you on to bigger and better things in the future. You seem to have to begin all over again each time you set out toward any goal -- even if it is the same kind of goal you have achieved before. Friends and family often come to your rescue, however, and even the smallest "shove" from behind is usually enough to put you into forward motion safely and securely. It is important to your career, therefore, that you have friends and family members who understand your nature and your needs and who will stand by you, ready to offer encouragement when the time comes.

You may have difficulty during the years of your young adulthood distinguishing between real love and infatuation. You may, in fact, at some point in your life find yourself trapped in a situation that you once thought romantic but which, upon maturation, you find impossible. To avoid such an outcome, weigh your emotional needs carefully before taking any step toward a permanent relationship with any member of the opposite sex. Allow time to have its say.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Wednesday, March 2

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — A susceptibility to flattery may cause you joy in the morning -- but disappointment by day's end. Be objective about yourself.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Be warned against false friends today. Be sure to get in writing whatever is owed you; otherwise, you may find yourself without expected gain.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Though you may receive great praise at this time, you stand in danger of being thought a flash in the pan. The remedy lies in hard work.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — This is a day when through your own efforts, you may transform an old enemy into a new friend. Approach a problem logically.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — A handicap to your advancement on the employment scene may not be apparent. Study the situation well before passing judgment on it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Your consideration of another's plight may lend just the degree of moral support that is needed. Express your concern.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Your taste for criticism may run only one way. Take care as you give criticism to another not to set yourself up for future emotional scarring.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — You must have the courage of your convictions today; otherwise, you will be unable to persuade others into decisions you wish them to make.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Conviviality carries you far today, especially when your goals are bound in with your ability to get along with other people.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Energy expended in an effort to aid another is energy well spent. Don't give up your own goals, however, to offer help; merely shelve them.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Your own problems demand your attention today. If you cannot find enough time for yourself without slighting another -- then slight another.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb 18) — So long as you have received adequate compensation for your efforts, you should have no complaint. Turn your attention to the young.

Bucyk eager to return

BOSTON (UPI) — John Bucyk has been in an unaccustomed and uncomfortable position the past few weeks — flat on his back.

The Bruins' winger, who had missed only 15 games the past nine seasons, will miss his 15th straight game tonight when his club hosts the Detroit Red Wings.

The ailment is similar to the injury that stopped him nine years ago — lower back spasms. He is in Massachusetts General Hospital, spending his time between traction and lying flat. He allows few visitors and no reporters or photographers.

"When I'm injured, I don't like talking about it. That's why no one has heard much about me," Bucyk said Monday in a telephone interview. "I'm starting to feel a little better now, but I still don't know when I can go home. I've been here a week now and sure hope I can get out of here soon."

In his 22nd National Hockey League season and 20th with the Bruins, Bucyk had recently found his scoring touch when the injury cropped up. The NHL's second all-time leading scorer had 20 goals and 25 assists before being sidelined.

"The problem actually started against the Islanders" in a Jan. 20 home game; "then I got hit against Colorado" Jan. 27, said Bucyk, who will receive the Lester Patrick Trophy next Monday in New York if he can get out of bed. The award is given for outstanding service to hockey in the U.S.

"Then on Saturday Jan. 29 I drove to the Garden for our afternoon game against Toronto and I couldn't get out of the car. I finally got into the dressing room and put some heat on it and went out on the ice for the warmup. That's when I realized it was more serious."

Still, the durable Ukranian tried to play. After sitting out the Toronto game, he accompanied the team to Pittsburgh the following day. The back began bothering the 6-foot, 215-pound forward again and he wound up listening to the game from his hotel room. He has not played since.

Originally the Bruins thought Bucyk would be out three or four games. But he wound up aggravating the condition each time he would make the 45-minute drive from his Boxford home to take treatments at Boston Garden.

"Finally, I checked into the hospital last week and I've been flat on my back ever since," said Bucyk, fourth in the NHL in career goals with 551. "Maybe I could go home now but the doctors and the Bruins want to make sure I'm completely over the injury before I come back to play.

"They're afraid if I get hit hard or hit somebody, I'll get hurt again and be out for the year. I want to make sure I can get back and be in good shape for the playoffs. But I'll have to win my job back."

Coach Don Cherry surely will find a spot for Bucyk, the left cornerman on Boston's sagging power play. The Bruins' biggest problem in Bucyk's absence has been an ineffective power play. Bucyk's biggest problem during the same stretch has been learning to watch the televised games quietly from his hospital bed.

"It drives me nuts," he said. "I hate it, especially when I watch it on TV. I say, 'Gee, if that had been me, I would have scored,' or, 'I could have helped out there.'

"It's tougher off the ice than it is playing."

If lying around is hard, retirement would be unbearable for Bucyk. That is why he is talking about coming back, although he will be 42 in May.

"I'm not thinking about retirement," he said. "I'm trying to get out of here and start playing again."

Stage set for Finley's suit

CHICAGO (UPI) — Post trial briefs and proposed findings of fact were filed Monday in U.S. District Court in behalf of baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn and Oakland A's owner Charles O. Finley, setting the stage for a final decision on Finley's $3.5 million damage suit by Judge Frank J. McGarr.

Testimony in the suit ended in mid-January and McGarr, ordering both sides to file final papers Monday, said he would hand down his decision "as soon as possible."

Kuhn's brief, running 137 legal pages, summarized evidence produced on his behalf at the trial and requested 'judgement for the defendant, dismissing the complaint with prejudice and awarding appropriate fees and costs to the defendant."

Finley had asked that Kuhn be required to pay Finley's legal costs in the suit.

The proposed conclusions for Kuhn summarized the legal issues of the trial and asked that Finley's complaint be "barred and judgment entered for defendant Kuhn."

The suit was filed because Kuhn voided Finley's sale of outfielder Joe Rudi and pitchers Rollie Fingers to the Boston Red Sox and Vida Blue to the New York Yankees for a total of $3.5 million. Finley charged the action exceeded the commissioner's authority and was "capricious and arbitrary."

Conclusions of law submitted by Finley specified he had been damaged $2 million by Kuhn and asked for that amount plus interest from June 18, 1976 to the date of decree. The amount requested was reduced presumably because Finley retained contract rights to Blue, while he lost rights to Rudi and Fingers, who played out their options and signed with other teams as free agents.

Witnesses for Kuhn during the trial testified owners had granted unlimited authority to the commissioner since the office of commissioner was established and Kuhn's action, which he took "in the best interests of baseball" was within his power.

Finley challenged Kuhn's authority to void the sale under the clause of "best interests of baseball."

Both briefs filed in behalf of Kuhn Monday covered every point brought up during the trial as well as citing previous legal actions which might be applicable to the case.

"There can be no question that the plaintiff failed to meet its burden of establishing that the commissioner's decision was arbitrary, capricious or motivated by bad faith," the brief said. "The evidence clearly established that the commissioner's disapproval was a reasonable good faith exercise of the discretionary power vested in him."

Dave hopes to sign

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (UPI) — Dave Kingman, hitting one long drive over the left center field fence to prove he has not lost his skills, followed his first workout with the New York Mets Monday by meeting with General Manager Joe McDonald. He came away still unsigned.

As gracious as he has ever been in a 20 minute meeting with the press, Kingman said it is his hope to be signed by the end of spring training. He added that "I hope to hit 50 home runs this year. I think I am capable of that."

Kingman refused to discuss any salary figures with newsmen, insisting "that is my private business."

The Mets' No. 1 slugger, who slammed 37 home runs last year, is reportedly asking for $3 million.

Kingman said he has every desire to play for the New York Mets and has no intention of playing out his option if he does not sign for 1977. But he refused to rule out that possibility. "I was raised in California and eventually I would like to go back there," Kingman said. "I am single and I have no ties. There is nothing to prevent from picking up and going."

Kingman also said that although he has not brought an agent into his negotiations. So far he has advised the Mets of that possibility in the event the salary negotiations drag on.

With the arrival of Kingman and Felix Millan, the entire Mets squad was in camp one day before the official March 1 reporting date. All players are signed with the exception of Kingman and catcher Jerry Grote.

Women hoopsters in EAIAW tourney

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's basketball team has been seeded third in the Eastern Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (EAIAW) regional tournament, it was announced Sunday.

The tournament, which will take place from Thursday, March 10 to Saturday, March 12 at UConn, will send its winner to the National tournament. The Nationals are slated to be held later this month at the University of Minnesota.

As expected, Southern Connecticut was named top seed in the 16-team field for the Easterns. Queens College, which UMass defeated 82-81 in late January, was picked as second seed, with the Minutewomen third.

St. John's and Cortland State (NY) round out the top five places.

The 15-4 UMass squad will play its opening-round game on March 10 at 11 a.m. against 13th-seeded New Hampshire. The Minutewomen beat the Wildcats, 80-63, in a February clash.

Should UMass win that game, it will move into the quarterfinals, which are slated to take place the following day. Should the Minutewomen lose, they will move into the consolation bracket.

The sixth through 16th seeded schools follow, in order: Brooklyn College, Maine, Bridgewater State, Rhode Island, Providence, UConn, Northeastern, New Hampshire, Springfield, Vermont, and Central Connecticut.

UMass played every team in the tourney except Cortland State this season and compiled a combined 10-4 record against them.

Before the Easterns begin, though, the Minutewomen will compete in the Massachusetts state tournament. Top-seeded UMass will play fourth-ranked Bridgewater State at 6 p.m. Friday, after second and third seeds Springfield and Northeastern have battled it out at 4 p.m. The winners will meet for the title Saturday night, while the losers tap-off earlier for third place honors.

In the state tourney, the Minutewomen will be looking to avenge a defeat suffered at the hands of Bridgewater in the championship game last year.

Heggie may be best ever says UMass coach Evans

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

UMass' women's gymnastics team has firmly established itself among the top of the national gymnastic powers. In the last five years the gymwomen have earned one national title, two eastern titles, a heartbreaking second place finish in 1975 and a respectable seventh placing last year. Yet Coach Virginia Evans thinks this year's squad could be the best she has ever put into competition. Evans is quite certain that Jill Heggie is the best all around gymnast she has ever had working for her.

Heggie arrived on the UMass scene after all the aforementioned statistics reached the record books. Heggie is a transfer sophomore, competing for the first season as a Minutewoman, but she has already established herself at the top of the squad. As a freshman, Heggie attended Southern Connecticut while working with Olympic coach Muriel Grossman at Grossman's New Haven club. Heggie brings an enthusiastic effervescence and dedication to the squad which is very likely one of the keys to the team's success this season.

Heggie is not the only key, however. She has the distinction of competing on a team where depth abounds. One of the reasons Heggie chose to come to UMass was a joint decision made with club teammates. Junior Stephanie Jones has been battling Heggie all season for the top all around position. During the recent meet against Springfield College Jones totaled 36.70 to 36.85 for Heggie.

Collegian
sports

Junior Susan Cantwell continues to improve with every meet. Against Springfield College, Cantwell scored a total of 35.35 points. Karen Hemberger, another Grossman product, has been hampered by an ankle injury sustained earlier in the season, but is a very definite threat. The specializing gymnasts, Diane Laurenson, Jean Anderson, Cheryl Morrier and Barbara Burmeister add to the total depth of the squad. Heggie, however, has received the respect of her teammates illustrated by her election as captain of this year's squad. This honor is usually reserved for returning seniors or juniors but Heggie appears by all accounts to be a very successful leader.

"Jill has a very strong natural ability to get along with people," commented Coach Evans. "She is very supportive of her other team members, always there with a smile or friendly advice. I think she exhibits a lot of maturity for a person her age."

Jill started her gymnastics career later than most gymnasts. As a freshman in high school, while living in California, she was asked by her gym teacher to join the interscholastic team. At a meet she was approached by one of the judges, who asked her to join a private team. When Heggie's family moved to the east coast, she began working out with Grossman.

"I was never pressured into it and I think that's why I liked it so much," she said. I think it was a lot of work, but I think working with Coach Grossman was the most thrilling thing experienced in my life."

While with Grossman, Heggie received an elite ranking which is a high distinction.

Like the rest of the squad Jill is anxiously awaiting the Easterns. The team is assured to qualify, as it has already scored the mandatory 134 points. That just isn't good enough for them, however. The gymwomen wish to avenge their early season loss to nationally ranked Penn State as well as knock off number one ranked Clarion. Heggie is confident that Penn State can be dispensed with but concedes that Clarion is going to be tougher.

"If we go in there and really hit cold, we can do it!!!" she said.

With Jill Heggie's gymnastics ability compiled with the total depth of the team and Evans, Calabria and Heggie's combined optimism and leadership, Clarion and Penn State have something to worry about.

Cagers overcome Huskies, stage now set for playoffs

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — It was supposed to be the type of game last night in which the playoff-bound UMass men's basketball team was to have outclassed the less-talented Northeastern Huskies and breeze to its 17th win of the season.

That's the way it was supposed to have been. However, somebody forgot to tell that to the UMass and Northeastern basketball teams.

Not only did the Huskies battle the Minutemen down to the final buzzer, but they nearly pulled off the upset of the season before bowing to UMass, 82-76 before 1,250 at Northeastern's Cabot Gymnasium.

It took a 26-point performance from forward Mike Pyatt and a 14 point, 16 rebound performance from forward Jim Town that enabled the Minutemen to finish their regular season play with a win and a 17-9 record. However, it wasn't easy.

After Pyatt and Town had led the Minutemen to a 39-34 halftime advantage, Northeastern began to chip away at the lead in the early stages of the second half, led by guard Dave Caligaris, who scored a game-high 28 points.

Caligaris connected on four 20-foot jumpers and a lay-up to pull the Huskies within two points of the Minutemen, 52-50. Then after UMass' Mark Donoghue scored four points on free throws, the Huskies tied the game 56-56 with 9:45 to go in the game on a pair of baskets by forward Steve Ramos and a turnaround jumper by Howard Thompkins.

At that point, UMass coach Jeack Leaman, obviously unhappy with the way the game had turned for the worse for the Minutemen, changed his strategy slightly and had his team pressing the full length of the floor.

Immediately, Leaman's new change in strategy bore fruitful results as the Minutemen forced three Huskie turnovers in which they converted into baskets.

Following a Northeastern turnover, Pyatt hit on a 15-foot jumper from the left of the key, giving the Minutemen a 58-56 lead. Then Derick Claiborne stole the ensuing full court pass and fed off to Alex Eldridge who scored two of his 17 points on the lay-up giving UMass a four-point lead.

Bill Morrison converted the third Huskie turnover into a basket when he hit on a jump shot from the right of the key, giving UMass a six point, 62-56 lead.

UMass began to wear down the tiring Huskies in the closing minutes of the game, as the Minutemen put their fast-break offense into gear and built up a 10 poind lead, 74-64 with less than three minutes to go in the game.

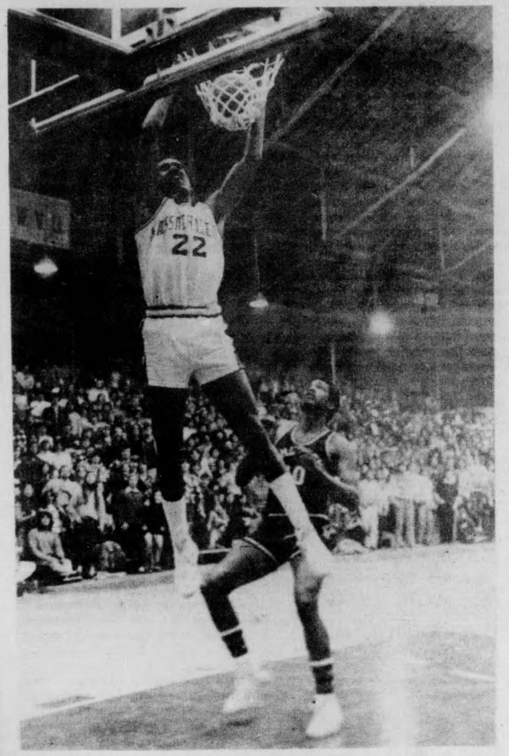
However, UMass got sloppy in the final three minutes and Northeastern pulled within four points of the Minutemen, 78-74 with 38 seconds to go. But two free throws by Claiborne with 20 seconds remaining preserved the victory for the Minutemen.

After the game, Leaman pointed out that his team may have been looking ahead to its rematch with Rutgers tomorrow night in the opening round of the ECBL playoffs.

"We got some good performances tonight from our frontline," Leaman said, "but still, some of our people may have been looking ahead one game."

Northeastern's inability to shoot free throws in the first half may have cost the Huskies the game, as they made only 5-14 free throws.

Town pulled a muscle in his back in the first half and was forced to sit out part of the second half.



Bill Morrison, who scored eight points in last night's UMass win over Northeastern, goes up for the slam dunk here, in an earlier game against UNH. (Staff photo by Jay Saret)

Women's ski team ready for big meet

By RICHARD MOORE
Collegian Staff

The UMass Women's Ski team is one of 15 squads in the country invited to compete in the first national ski meet sponsored by the Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women, March 11 and 12 at Stowe, Vermont.

The AIAW is the largest organization of its kind in the country, and national ski powers such as Denver, Michigan, New Hampshire, Dartmouth, and Vermont are expected to appear at Stowe. Competing schools were chosen on the basis of league standings and geographical distribution.

Men's ski coach Bill MacConnell was the first one aware of the women's achievement when the AIAW's letter of invitation came into his office last Thursday.

"I was shocked when I got the letter inviting us," MacConnell said, "because our league results aren't even in yet. It's very hard to say how the girls will do since we've never seen these teams, but the best in the country will be there."

"They might not expect much from our girls coming out of Southern New England," MacConnell said, "but we may surprise them. One need only look at the girls training schedule to know if they're ready; they've been aiming at the nationals and easterns since November 15. They got on their skis as early as possible, and they practiced the entire month of January."

Women's coach Steve Tonelli would not predict a national championship for the Minutewomen.

"I don't know how we'll make out in an event of this caliber," Tonelli said, "but the girls are skiing well and we'll hold our own. Just getting there is quite an achievement."

Holy Cross loses in final seconds

WORCESTER, MASS. (UPI) — Senior Guard Glen Williams sank a free throw with three seconds left Monday night to lift St. John's to a 62-61 victory over Holy Cross.

Center George Johnson had tied the score nine seconds earlier, capping an 18 point performance with a 10-foot jump shot from the baseline.

Cecil Rellford also had 18 points for St. Johns. Chris Potter led Holy Cross with 19.

The victory boosted St. John's to a 20-8 season mark. Holy Cross is now 21-5.

Holy Cross, an early season overtime victor over UMass, was without the service of freshman sensation Ron Perry.

Faculty, staff may not get raises

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

Cost-of-living increases for UMass faculty and staff, passed at the February board of trustees meeting, may not become a reality and are dependent on the interpretation of the vote's wording, the president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) yesterday said.

At a general meeting of the MSP in the Campus Center, President Larry S. Roberts said the wording of the vote makes it unclear as to whether the facilty and staff will receive the increase since they have unionized.

He said the administration, state government officials and the MSP hold different opinions concerning the validity of the vote.

The MSP was recently elected to represent faculty and certain staff members at the Amherst campus in collective bargaining. Together with a similar group at the UMass-Boston campus, the MSP will enter into negotiations over salary, working conditions and academic policy with the UMass administration.

As passed by the trustees, the vote authorizes the Executive Committee on the board "... to approve for non-union employees of the University, including faculty, professional staff and classified employees, such adjustments as are appropriate to all circumstances at that time."

The trustee vote occurred at the Feb. 2 meeting of the board, and 1600 faculty and staff voted Feb. 8 and 9 accept the MSP as their collective bargaining agent.

In a previous press statement, Roberts said the MSP had determined their election as bargaining agent "would in no way effect the implementation of these pay increments beyond the delay the administration expects in the normal legislative process."

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, in a telephone interview last night, said that under public employe collective bargaining laws, salary adjustments for those represented by a union must be bargained during negotiations.

Bromery said salary increases for the other unions on campus had been handled in this manner.

Roberts said at the MSP meeting there was no collective bargaining law which would invalidate the trustee vote.

According to Roberts, state sec. of Finance John L. Buckley has specifically indicated the cost-of-living increase was meant to go into effect regardless of the UMass faculty's vote.

Roberts also told the 75 persons attending the meeting the MSP was prepared to bring the University to court on a violation of the fair labor practice act, unless administration officials agreed to meet with union representatives shortly.

The union needs to set up informal channels of communication before formal negotiations can begin, Roberts said, and thus far the University has not responded to requests from the union to meet.

Bromery last night said that collective bargaining laws provide for negotiation meetings, but not informal contacts, and the University will set up such contacts at the appropriate time.

In addition, Roberts said the University has been uncooperative in setting up the process of automatic payroll deductions for union fees and dues, although the group hopes to have this service by May.

Bromery said that such deductions must be negotiated into the contract, which could take a year to 18 months to negotiate.

In other action, the MSP voted on the method they will use to choose a negotiations committee, which will design the negotiations package. The committee will be composed of 30 representatives from the various schools, the library and special programs, to be elected by the MSP's departmental or program representatives.

The group also approved articles of association, which will dictate the ties the MSP will have with the Boston Campus' union, the Faculty Staff Union.

In drafting the articles, Roberts said, the groups tried to be fairly explicit in stating which areas the union would have to work on together and allow the groups to remain as autonomous as possible.

In other matters, the MSP announced the beginning of a membership drive, begun in order to have sufficient membership to represent all elements of the faculty and staff in determining the negotiations package.

Roberts also announced the appointment of Jerome Mileur, professor of political science as head of the MSP's Legislative Committee, which is charged with keeping track of legislation affecting UMass, suggesting its own legislation, and with familiarizing legislators with UMass and its faculty.

Mileur said he would like to conduct an inventory of faculty and staff interested in working on legislative study groups and advisory councils.

The more contact UMass faculty have with legislators, Mileur said, "the better off we are going to be."

Roberts said that during Michael S. Dukakis' two-day visit to UMass last week, he had a chance to explain these ideas to the governor, and said he was enthusiastic about the plan.

Trustees here to discuss hospital, budget, salaries

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

The UMass Board of Trustees are expected to consider a new budget request today for the University hospital in Worcester, the governor's capital outlay budget proposal for UMass, and, in executive session, discuss cost-of-living increases for faculty and staff.

The trustees will meet this morning in the Chancellor's Board room in Whitmore administration building for an executive committee meeting, and then convene for a full board meeting later in the day at Memorial Hall.

The Worcester hospital, which originally requested $12 million for the next fiscal year, wants to change its request to $18 million, according to Student Trustee Paul M. Cronin.

Eventually, the hospital is expected to generate its own revenue, but with only 85 of a potential 400 beds in use, the hospital is running a large deficit, Cronin said.

The additional request if passed by the trustees, will be sent to the legislature to be considered along with the state's budget for next year.

The trustees are also expected to discuss the governor's budget proposals for the University. The proposal includes $150,000 for the renovation of state-owned buildings, and, if this is included in the final budget, Cronin said he hopes it can be used for the renovation of dorms.

The Executive Committee is also expected to go into executive session to discuss last month's board vote on cost-of-living increases for non-union employees.

At this time, it is unclear whether faculty and staff will receive the increase since they voted to unionize in a Feb. 8 and 9 election.

A new student trustee from the Boston campus may not be seated tomorrow due to confusion over the length of her term.

Judy Baker was elected in February to fill a vacancy left by the former trustee who did not return to school this semester.

Cronin said the board is not sure whether her term will run to next spring or will be considered an interim position.

The trustees are also expected to approve fund transfers, necessary to replenish certain amounts that have been drained.

Cronin said most of the transfers will be between permanent personnel and temporary personnel accounts.

Employes union meets today at noon

The UMass Employes Association (UMEA) will meet today at noon in Campus Center 168 at noon to vote on what action to take over recently contracted but unfunded pay raises that had been approved by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis,

According to Bernard K. Turner, UMEA president, the association has negotiated with the University for four years, but because the state has not funded the contract, "the employes are still without it."

A group of about 50 students from the School of Health Sciences last night decided to establish a steering committee to gather information and coordinate action concerning the federal Title IX and Title VI guidelines within the school.

The committee is to be composed of nine persons from the school to be selected at another meeting on Monday, March 7 at 3:30 p.m. in 120 Arnold.

The group also favored a freeze on job offers for the four vacant faculty positions in the school that are to be filled by September until the steering committee is able to review the recruiting processes of the school and the criteria used in making the candidate priorities. The group proposed the resumption of job offers only after the steering committee finds the recruiting process to be fair.

Last night's meeting was called by several students who were "very dissatisfied" with the results of the Title IX Affirmative Action Committee meeting held on February 18.

"About ten people met in my apartment after that meeting. We all thought some fact finding was needed," said Jane Hebert.

"I think," said one person attending the meeting, "the fact we are all here is an indication there is a problem with affirmative action within the School of Health Sciences."

There are currently four female faculty members in the School of Health Sciences which has a total faculty of twenty-one.

According to Mary Jane Kornacki, one of those who called last night's meeting, Dean William Darity of the School of Health Sciences has agreed to support the steering committee and has indicated that he will provide the committee access to whatever information it requires.

"I believe the dean is acting in good faith in this matter," she said.

The membership of the steering committee has not been decided yet. Thirteen persons at last night's meeting indicated an interest in sitting on the committee, but the selection of the members was postponed so that members could be solicited from the entire School of Health Sciences during the rest of this week. People were especially concerned that the committee have a good a representation as possible from the various minorities in the school.

"I guess what we are trying to do here is put the affirmative in the action," said one person.

Many persons at the meeting last night were concerned that the proposed freeze on job offers and subsequent review of the recruiting processes by the steering committee would not be completed in time for the school to enter into competitive negotiations for quality faculty.

Newman Center food service losing money

By JUNE CORRIVEAU
Collegian Staff

The food service operation at the Newman Center is going broke.

The Rev. Leo Leclerc, director of the Newman Center, said $6,000 to $7,000 was lost last summer alone. Fewer customers during dinner hours both this semester and last semester has also contributed to the losses, Leclerc said.

Located on the basement level of the Newman Center, the food service operation serves customers who, for the most part, are from the area, fraternities, Whitmore, the School of Business and Southwest.

The Newman Center has consulted with the Dept. of Hotel, Restaurant, and Travel Administration (HRTA), which is conducting a study with the food service operation, to see what can be done to get the operation back on its feet.

Don Capponcelli, food service manager at the Newman Center, said, "We are presently looking into where losses have occurred, and are upgrading the cafeteria."

Means of providing better food service and keeping costs down are the aims of the study, he said.

Capponcelli said the center's food items are different than those provided at other facilities, citing his desire to provide better quality to Newman Center customers.

The homemade meatball grinders prepared from his mother's recipe are one example of the difference.

Leclerc said the center tries to provide a warm atmosphere as well as a service for the students in the area academic community, through the food service operation.

The results of the ongoing HRTA study will provide the future direction of the food service operation at the Newman Center.

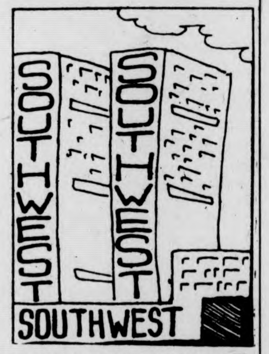
SWA votes to support student union



By LARRY COHEN
Collegian Staff

In a unanimous decision last night, the Southwest Assembly (SWA) voted to support the Undergraduate Student Senate in advocating student unionization.

The senate's policy, as outlined last night by Susan Birmingham, Student Organizing Project (SOP) staff member, stresses the importance of University and Faculty recognition of the students' right to collectively bargain. Birmingham said that because of the newly formed faculty union, student unionization is necessary if the students are to have any say in what goes on at the University.

In other business last night, the SWA voted to allocate $650 to the Anti-Racist Education Project for a three day cultural event on the elimination of racism in Cuba. The event, which will take place in Hamden Student Center on March 30 and April 1, will feature dramatic presentations, a poetry workshop, and an historical-documentary film, "The Other Francisco."

Also passed by SWA was a proposal allocating $300 for the Prison Studies Program to rent student senate vans and to buy gas. Students in the program make frequent trips to area correctional institutions as part of their internship and tutoring programs.

SWA unanimously voted to endorse a bill by the Archers' and Tenants' Association calling for more student participation in the Amherst town meetings. Due to recent redistricting by the town of Amherst, a vast majority of voters in certain precincts are UMass students.

In other business last night, SWA voted to allocate $75 to a work-study position for a recycling program in Southwest. This would cover the collection and handling of bottles, etc., to be used for recycling purposes.

SWA also voted to allocate matching funds of $100 to Moore House for an ongoing leather colloquium and craftshop. The craftshop will be open to members of Southwest with permission from the craftshop supervisor.

The Assembly defeated a bill proposing the allocation of $500 to a Project 10 workshop on "Marxism, Anarchism and Decentralization." The workshop, sponsored by Nesta King, would have supplemented a P-10 course, "Libertarian Alternatives in Social-Political Theory."

Opposition to the bill stemmed from King's inability to acquire funds from other sources. According to King, all other possible sources have been utilized.

Report on Van Meter South may miss March 4 deadline

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

The committee probing tension existing in Van Meter South dormitory will probably not complete its analysis for its original March deadline.

According to women in the dorm, the Study Group has scheduled corridor meetings with some of the dorms' floors for Thursday night. These discussions with students are part of the groups "Information gathering" phase, which is the first step in its study.

Two more categories of the study had been listed by the group in its flyer distributed throughout Van Meter South: an analysis of the operating principles and relations in the dorm, and a "brainstorming" session to determine recommendations for deadline with the situation there.

Individual members of the Study Group itself preferred not to comment about the possible extension of the deadline, or about any committee procedure, because they said they would like "to protect the interests of those involved."

It was also learned that the investigative team has interviewed Elizabeth Williams, the Van Meter South head of residence, her residence assistants, the Orchard Hill-Central Area administration at MacIntyre House and staff of the Community Development Center; the latter appointed this study group subsequent to a request from the OH-Central administration.

When informed of the possible deadline extension, William Taylor, the associate director of OH-Central, expressed confidence in the committee's ability to do a "responsible job."

His colleague at MacIntyre, Joseph Batista, OH-Central assistant director, did not doubt the likelihood of a longer probe, saying, "Given its task, I can understand why the committee would need more time."

Both Taylor and Batista said they have not been overseeing the group's procedures, since they themselves are also being studied by it.

Batista added that this "free range" of the committee is necessary to avoid "any interference" that would hinder a smooth, objective investigation.

Presidential face-off raises election issues

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

The feasibility of creating a student union on campus and possible avenues for opposing UMass budget reductions were the focal points of the first debate between the Student Government Association (SGA) presidential candidates last night.

In addition to being the first public confrontation between the candidates, last night's debate also marked the first time any specific campaign issues were raised. The two hour debate, sponsored by the Southwest Assembly, was attended by 31 persons in the Hamden Student Center.

The SGA presidential co-candidate teams of Jon Hite and Pinky Batiste, Herb Tyson and John Foley, and Joel Weissman and Charles Pooler laid down their preliminary platforms for the March 15-16 elections.

among the issues the candidates addressed were:

—The effect of the faculty union on students;

—The creation of a student job bank;

—The possibility of a $7 hike in the Student Activities Tax Fund fee;

—Racism and sexism on campus;

—The SGA co-presidents' potential relations with the administration;

—The SGA's difficulty in communicating with university students; and —The pardon of Craemen Gethers.

Hite and Batiste outlined a three-point program for student organizing which would encourage existing co-ops and services, coordinate resources of the SGA, and encourage the passage of H1378, a bill in the state legislature which would set up a commission to study the role of students in the decision making process.

"At last we are getting our act together, people are beginning to listen to each other and share their talent and experience. Our three-point program has some chance for success because it can get the popular support that we cannot go on without. We can't afford to fight among ourselves anymore, because we always wind up losing. We believe it's time for students to come together again, to move towards improving our lives," Hite said in his initial remarks.

"An effort for a union is necessary" said Tyson and Foley, "Our major goals lie in increasing student services, open bargaining and an atmosphere conducive to the formation of a student union. The effort for a union is a necessity. We feel that a union is the best approach to the problems facing students."

Tyson and Foley also announced their intentions to actively work towards the establishment of a student job bank. At a press conference Monday held by the job bank's proponents, Foley and Tyson stated they were involved with the program as "concerned students."

The major thrust of their campaign, they said, would revolve around the creation of the job bank and the assortment of student run services which would support it.

Mentioned in their proposals were a student run towing service, a check cashing service and several food and service co-ops.

Weissman and Pooler said the biggest problem facing students was "budget cuts" and the need to fight them.

"When Dukakis came here the Student Senate kept people in the dark. Only a handful of people were able to talk to him. That's not right," they said.

"There are many broader issues facing students today; issues which are larger in scope than the vacuum of the Amherst campus. A fine example is the situation in South Africa. Students should be mobilized and educated so they can effect positive action. The SGA should initiate actions to show their support of struggles like that one. The key to the whole spectrum of problems is culturing students, making them aware of the struggles," they said.

The debate format consisted of a four minute opening statement by each team, followed by a panel questioning period. Each panelist asked one question of a specific candidacy, which was given three minutes to respond. The same question was then asked of the remaining two co-candidacies.

The six-person panel consisted of Steve Tetreault, representing the Collegian, Jim Posgay and Lily Hu, who are associated with the Student Senate, Diana Fessenden, representing Southwest, and student debaters Jerry Zarrilli and Steven Silverstein. Southwest Assembly president Chris Durkin acted as debate moderator.

The following are candidates' responses to some of the panelists' questions.

Question: "I understand that there will be a referendum on a possible $7 increase in the Student Activities Tax Fund (SATF) fee next semester. Do you feel this increase is warranted? Do you intend to make this a campaign issue?"

Weissman and Pooler:

"Right now we recognize the SATF increase as an important issue. We will support the referendum for an increase because we think it is a step in the right direction. We have not seen all the details, but I understand a $4 fee increase will go to cost of living increases alone, with the remaining $3 slated for new student programs. Even with this small increase, though, cuts are still likely."

Foley and Tyson:

"Any student who realistically examines the issue can see the need for the increase. Although we don't consider this to be a major campaign issue, declining enrollments and a reduction in the amount of funds that will be paid back to the senate this year necessitates it."

Hite and Batiste:

"Right now the increase appears to be necessary. Before we make any kind of commitment I think we should conduct additional research."

Question: As SGA co-presidents, what will your relationship with the administration be like?

Hite and Batiste:

"We would like to act in an advisory capacity with the administration. Our position will represent the needs of students as they are shown to us. With that in mind, we will make policies, initiate services and see how the administration backs us."

Weissman and Pooler:

"We will attempt to be candid and friendly, but we will always remember the students' interests. More important is the students' relationship with the administration."

Tyson and Foley:

"If our interests coincide with the administration, things will work out just fine. If there is a confrontation, however, we will view it as such. Students are our first priority."

Question: Much has been said about widespread student apathy on campus, and students' lack of interest in the workings of the SGA. Do you have any proposals on how to stimulate student interest towards the elections and the issues in general?

Tyson and Foley:

"We will try to be where the students will be. We will have regular office hours so that people can see us when needed.

I'd like to see the establishment of a "Presidential Forum" in the Collegian on a regular basis, where the co-presidents could inform students about what has happened over the past week. Generally, we're concerned with attending meetings and talking to people."

Weissman and Pooler:

"Right now the SGA has the resources to mobilize people. The real problem is how they can be put to use. What is called for here are forums and general debates on the issues concerning students. After a debate, an appropriate course of action can be decided. Students at this point simply need more stimulus."

Hite and Batiste:

"Communication is our first priority. We have to get out to the people and see what their concerns are. We have plans to set up a president's advisory council which would take in students with expertise in various areas."

Jacque, Mosakowski win primary

By TERESA M. HANAFIN
Collegian Staff

Roger C. Jacque and Kenneth P. Mosakowski will be on the April ballot for Amherst selectman following the elimination of William N. Barnes from contention in the town caucus last night.

With 12 per cent of the town's registered voters turning out for the vote, Jacque garnered nearly 50 per cent with 857 votes out of 1653 cast for selectman, more than his two opponents combined. Mosakowski was a distant second with 474, and Barnes finished last with 322 votes.

In the school committee primary, in which the top four candidates out of six were chosen to appear on the ballot, Ralmon Jon Black, Betty A. Brace, Casey Clark and Nancy M. Gordon advanced.

Janice C. Denton and Loren S. Howell were eliminated.

Jacque, 30, is a farmer and is employed on the Mill Dairy Farm on South Pleasant St.

Mosakowski, also 30, is a library assistant in government documents at the UMass library and lives at 370 Crown Point Apts.

The campaigns of Jacque and Mosakowski are expected to focus on the issue they disagree on most – a zoning clause which limits the number of unrelated persons living in a household to four.

Mosakowski advocates changing the law on the grounds it is discriminatory and a "poor way to control behavior." Jacque favors retaining the clause.

The caucus was the first election to be held since the town's new redistricting plan went into effect.

The poorest voter turnout was in precinct three, which largely consists of UMass residential areas Sylvan, Orchard Hill, Northeast and Central, excluding Butterfield dormitory, which is in precinct two.

The next poorest turnout area was precinct four, of which Southwest residential area is a part.

Although the 12 per cent voter turnout is a marked increase over the 6 per cent turnout of the last caucus in 1974, Mosakowski expressed dismay last night at the poor response of students, saying he "hopes to get the non-town natives to come out and vote in the April election."

MOTHER'S ODE TO A STILLBORN CHILD

You languished patiently for months on end in dungeon darkness in intestinal convolutions and indefinable chaos

You had neither shadow
nor silhouette
You had every right to riot and complain or raise your voice in protest or defiance

I could feel your lust to join the [illegible]d living world
Your muted attempts to burst like a Christmas chicken into life

If is not my fault that you did not live to be a brother, sister or lover of some black child that you did not experience pain pleasure voluptuousness and salt in the wound that your head did not stop a police truncheon that you are not a permanent resident

Is Minstrel Man another 'Roots?'

Seen here are two of the cast from the show Minstrel Man, which will be aired tonight by ABC from 9-11 p.m., channels 7 and 40. (Photo by ABC television)

Any serious drama about black America's upward struggle invites comparison with "Roots." This week's "Minstrel Man" deserves the comparison, for it carries history forward a quarter century from the jubilation of new-found freedom to the bitterness and fear of men who were not treated as equal even though they were free.

Like "Roots" it is at once a celebration and a lament: a celebration of a culture shaped by bondage, a lament for the prejudice that forced the men who created jazz and ragtime to dress in tatters and make up in black-face.

Minstrelsy at once uplifted the black entertainer, by giving him his first chance at a white audience, and demeaned him, by compelling him to play in stereotypes and to restrict himself to routines established decades before by white men pretending to be black.

The black performer, in fact, had to smear himself with clown white and burnt cork, had to make himself a black man playing a white man playing a black, to preserve the cruel fiction that only whites had creative impulses and that blacks were mere imitators of art they could not match.

Some black men accepted their fate. Others rebelled. The obedient died humble and the proud were often lynched. The law, as the closing episodes of "Roots" reminded us once again, is not always the law.

"Minstrel Man" takes the largely untold story of America's early black creators (how many people even know of "Shuffle Along," the first black Broadway musical, created in 1921?) and transmutes it into a family history, much like Alex Haley's history in "Roots."

Amid the street parades, gymnastics, thigh-slapping and blaring brass bands of any minstrel's arrival in town, the family of star performer Harry Brown makes its way to an entertainment hall in a town none of them has ever seen and none will see again. The father knows no other trade.

The sons, deprived of education and home life as they bounce along from village to village, learn his routines as the sons of medieval craftsmen prepared to take their fathers' places. Their mother performs, too, in this joyous cacophony, and life sometimes seems as happy as a circus. Then without warning Harry Brown Sr. dies, on stage in the best show business tradition, and "Minstrel Man" becomes a tragicomic story like all the entertainer biographies Hollywood ever produced — except that for a black performer talent and originality did not lead to success. "Acting uppity" by performing too well could lead to a beating, a burning, death.

Apart from its historic truth, "Minstrel Man" might seem a minor entertainment, except that it is an attempt to recapture a major American art form. Minstrel shows created vaudeville, vaudeville in a sense created almost all the traditions of television, and television is both quintessentially American and the most popular worldwide art.

The music and performance of the minstrels still appeals. Scott Joplin's "The Entertainer" and "Maple Leaf Rag" have been all but inescapable since the making of the movie "The Sting." Eubie Blake's bouncy stride-piano playing has made him once again a star at 91. Their work reflected the Viennese influence in all the musical comedy of their times — but it also grew out of the backwoods road shows of the "Minstrel Man" era.

The production was filmed in Mississippi, from a sentimental but swift-paced script by the authors of "Sarah T: Portrait of a Teen Age Alcoholic." Richard and Esther Shapiro researched for months the lore of the highly ritual but never-recorded behavior of Mr. Interlocutor, Tambo, and Bones. Musicologist Fred Karlin provided 20 minutes of old songs and 40 minutes of new ones in what he believes was the minstrel style — for half of the two hour performance, Wednesday from 9 to 11 p.m. on WNAC-TV Channel 7. Choreographer Donald MacKayle, a leading light with his own company and Alvin Ailey's black ballet troupe, had to guess at the dancing and movement of those days.

Dear Black UMass student

"OUR responsibilities are to make the community aware of developing campus situations and doing everything possible for the community".
—UMASS BLACK ORGANIZATIONS

If you've been keeping up with the Black Affairs pages you would have noticed that we've had a number of articles dealing with "The spirit of the Third World Community".

The primary reason for running the articles was to convey a message to you. The message is Black organizations need you just as much as you need them! At the moment the scales are unbalanced. Third World organizations are struggling for you without getting anything in return. (Not getting anything in return means not getting the support needed to efficiently operate our organizations.) The support needed is physical support. How much would it cost you to spare 2 hours a week helping out one of the organizations?

How much would it cost you if you sat down and wrote an article for Nummo News, Drum Magazine, or Black Affairs? How many of you have attended meetings organized by Third World organizations? Most of the responses to these questions are most definitely negative responses.

It sometimes gets very discouraging when only a few students take the time and effort to devote themselves to various tasks that requires the full participation of everyone. What we have now was not struggled for by a minute fraction of blacks, to be carried on by a minute fraction, nor to be enjoyed by a minute fraction.

What will it take for folks to come out? Whoever knows the answer to the million dollar question please tell us so that we may begin to collectively work on this perplexing dilemma.

We remain yours sincerely,

Native Americans' land claim supported by Carter

INDIAN TOWNSHIP, Maine [UPI] — Indian leaders in Maine have commended President Jimmy Carter's administration for backing their claims on state land.

"It took a measure of courage for the federal government to face up to the fact that our claims are legally valid," said John Stevens, governor of the Passamaquoddy Reservation.

The Passamaquoddy and Penobscot tribes agreed Monday to reduce their claims to land in Maine from 12.5 million acres to about five million. They also agreed to drop actions against area landowners if the government gives them enough money to cover those claims.

The Justice Department said Monday it will file suit for the tribes in U.S. District Court in Portland unless an out-of-court settlement is reached by June 1. Carter plans to appoint a special representative to work out such an agreement.

"While the courts have consistently upheld our claims in the past, we are still especially pleased that the Carter administration has independently supported our legal arguments and decided to join us in our struggle for justice," said Stevens.

In a Washington meeting Monday with Gov. James Longley and the Maine congressional delegation, the tribes agreed to relinquish their claims to about two million acres of the most heavily populated land — including Bangor, Jellsworth, Calais, Machias and Bar Harbor — if Congress passes legislation to substitute monetary damages from the state and federal governments.

"We do not want to put anyone out of their homes," said Nicholas Sapiel, governor of the Penobscot Nation. "And while we are not willing to unilaterally give up any of our rights in advance, we do not want to create unnecessary difficulties while our cases are in court."

Carter's decision to appoint someone to help the state and the tribes reach an out-of-court solution was welcomed by Sapiel, Stevens and Gov. Francis Nicholas of the Pleasant Point Passamaquoddy Reservation.

Attorney General Joseph Brennan predicted Carter will name his appointee within the next few days.

"We are prepared, as we have been for some time, to meet with such a representative and to share our research and views about the case," the attorney general said. "I am hopeful that in the next few months the progress that we have made in the last few weeks will continue."

Idi Amin postpones meeting

NAIROBI, Kenya [AP] — President Idi Amin of Uganda has postponed a meeting set for Wednesday with some 240 Americans in Uganda, Radio Uganda reported.

The government-controlled radio said Monday night another date for the meeting would be announced later. It gave no further details and no reason for the postponement, the second within four days.

Ugandan sources in Kampala reached by telephone said they believed it was in response to representations made by President Carter to a number of Arab and African states.

The sources said the meeting was put off "because the president Amin is keen to improve good relations with the United States.

The meeting had been scheduled for Entebbe Airport outside Kampala.

Potential Unused

A Below The Salt ADDITIVE

THE MOTHER OF US ALL
by Gertrude Stein and Virgil Thomson

University Ensemble Theatre
Directed by Vincent Brann

By Dail Middleton
and James F. B. Sawyer
Below the Salt Staff

Perhaps this opera by Gertrude Stein and Virgil Thomson has the potential to be a smash hit... somewhere else. But sitting in the loge section of the Rand Theatre in the Fine Arts Center, I couldn't hear enough to decide.

Through the two-hour performance, random snatches of Gertrude Stein's lyrics sneaked through the excellent music provided by the University Symphony Orchestra. The inability to understand a syllable of what the vocalists were trying to sing made it seem that Virgil Thomson's musical side of the opera far outweighed Stein's lyrical side, at least insofar as the University Ensemble players were concerned.

UET's presentation leaves the audience with several questions: Why is Ulysses S. Grant here? Daniel Webster? John Q. Adams? Who is Angel More? What are these characters trying to say(sing)? What's the point?

That is a major difficulty with this opera, at least in the way that UET performs it.

Perhaps the concept of a comparison of theologies can be extricated from the jumble of muffled voices onstage. But, the importance of any such comparison is lost somewhere between the proscenium and the conductor's podium.

Characters from different points in time encounter one another on the stage, giving "... actual (though unrelated) speeches," unintelligibly. This only lends to the curiosity and confusion acquired by a quick reading of the program before the performance.

Perhaps cue cards for the audience were in order.

Altogether, the combination of confusing ideas with a confusing delivery makes one look forward to intermission with the expectation of a bridegroom on his wedding night.

I have walked out after other UET productions feeling light and happy. After this performance, my feet were firmly on the ground.

One of the most important effects of theatre is entertainment. But entertainment can't be afforded by a production that confounds its audience.

Few of the performers were powerful enough of voice for the audience to even hear them.

Among these, it is striking to note that in this opera dealing with the struggles of women's suffrage, the most powerful voices were male.

Charles Turner, as Daniel Webster, and Richard Witter, as Jo the Loiterer, were appreciated as a breath of fresh air in the midst of so much operamimic halitosis.

Scene Designer Terrence McClellan's sets were insignificant because of the smattering of seemingly unrelated words which, unknown to the audience, were words uttered by the vocalists during those scenes.

Due to the general lack of force among the cast, UET's production of The Mother of Us All fails as a valid interpretation of Gertrude Stein and Virgil Thomson's joint effort. UET has taken Stein's unrelated speech excerpts and forced them to represent unrelated characters. The result is irrelevance.

FILM / Network

By JOHN MATTHEW
Below the Salt Staff

From the outset "Network" was destined for success. Director Sidney Lumet (Serpico, Dog Day Afternoon) and writer Paddy Chayefsky (Marty, Hospital) both grew with television in the 50s, and now, twenty years later, they have combined to produce a biting, thought provoking, totally outrageous satire of television; the most powerful vehicle of communication and thought formulator.

"Network" is the finest written motion picture in years, and should easily win the Academy Award for screenplay and direction. Paddy Chayefsky bites hard. His examination of the plight of the common man, of his manipulation and indolence, presented as a satire, is a bizarre trip through the world of love, corporate power, insanity, and empty minds.

The story deals with a fourth-ranked television (UBS), their search for a hit show, and an aging newscaster, Howard Beale (Peter Finch), who runs out of "bullshit" and decides to kill himself on next week's broadcast. Convinced of his insanity, news chief and friend William Holden retires Beale, but is over-ruled in a power struggle at the network. Robert Duvall (the corporate chief) see the exploitation of Beale's mental deterioration as big ratings and proceed to develop him as today's messiah.

The film reveals a lot of Chayefsky's views of the American mind. The fact that the entire country rallied behind Beale, a self-proclaimed madman, depicts the extreme vulnerability to leadership. America is looking too hard for someone to change their existence, to lead them out of despair, and the hero in this country can only come from television.

More important is his statement on the impact T.V. has on human emotion. From birth children are raised with television. It becomes a third parent, always visible, subtly programming the mind. It's not a coincidence that on the surface the network's goal is successful programming. But what is the real programming at work? Chayefsky is the master of blending the obvious (surface) with the real (latent). He is the 20th century Dostoyevsky.

Chayefsky believes that one can no longer differentiate reality from T.V., making life a series of endless, foolish, scripts. There is no emotion. Dunaway admits, 'I don't know how to love'. The film contrasts the dying (physical) old with the already dead (mentally) young. And since T.V. has destroyed all feelings, the only way today's youth sustains itself is to continue to 'kill boredom' through television.

Again with the corporation's domination of this media, the film implies coexistence between the 'feeling human' and the 'business world' is impossible, and that the corporation has won the battle by blinding us all, turning off our minds via Farah and Lee and Mary Tyler, and Fonzie and Starsky and... I'd write more but Donny and Marie is on.

Governors are concerned with strip mining, energy

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The nation's governors fell into step with the Carter administration yesterday by backing legislation to control strip mining and reorganize federal energy efforts.

They moved out front with a call for tough new oil tanker safety standards.

In resolutions adopted at the closing session of the winter meeting of the National Governors Conference, the state chief executives also called for reorganization of the costly Medicaid program for the poor and urged creation of a $1.8 billion youth employment program that would include doubling the job corps.

The oil tanker resolution was the only one that sparked debate, with Republican Gov. Pierre DuPont of Delaware arguing that it could be carried out only at tremendous cost.

He particularly objected to proposals that all new supertankers be built with double hulls and that a national system of tanker surveillance be set up in U.S. waters.

When Gov. Milton Shapp of Pennsylvania amended the proposal to cover foreign registered tankers as well as those under the U.S. flag, DuPont said that would conflict with at least six treaties between the United States and other maritime nations.

But the governors appeared intent on pushing for action on tanker safety. Gov. Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts said "all of these treaties have utterly failed to protect our shores."

He expressed hope no other state would undergo the experience Massachusetts had when the Argo Merchant — which he called "a piece of junk" — broke up off Cape Cod.

The energy and strip mining resolutions went into no detail, but the latter was opposed by Govs. Dolph Briscoe of Texas and George Wallace of Alabama.

Briscoe said the states could control strip mining. But Gov. Julian Carroll of Kentucky said federal law is needed to standardize controls on surface mining.

The governors also called for a rewrite of the federal clean air standards law but agreed with a committee that deleted a section which would have asked Congress to take no action easing auto exhaust standards until the entire law is revised.

Vietnam war

Commission seeks information on MIA

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The administration yesterday pointed former Senate Democratic leader Mike Mansfield, a Vietnam war opponent, and three others to a commission that will visit Vietnam in search of more information on Americans missing in action.

The State Department said it expects the presidential commission will leave for Vietnam the weekend of March 12.

President Carter created the five-member panel Friday and assigned it to attempt to resolve the MIA issue as a possible first step toward establishing relations with Communist Vietnam.

He named Leonard Woodcock, president of the United Auto Workers, head of the commission.

The State Department announced Tuesday that the other four members will be Mansfield; former U.N. Ambassador Charles Yost; Rep. G.V. Montgomery, D-Miss., chairman of a congressional committee that investigated the MIA issue, and Marian Wright Edelman, president of the Children's Defense Fund.

State Department spokesman Frederick Brown said representatives of the State and Defense departments will accompany the commission to Vietnam.

He said the duration of the trip has not been fixed, nor has it been decided whether the group will visit other countries in Southeast Asia.

Friday's White House announcement described its mission as "a further measured step we are taking to put the Indochina conflict behind us and to establish more normal relations between ourselves and the countries of that area."

Homes have priority to gas supplies

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Richard Dunham, chairman of the Federal Power Commission, said yesterday industries may have to wait until late spring or summer before gas supplies return to normal so that homes are protected against the cold next winter.

Dunham told a National Press Club breakfast he was not satisfied with the way utility companies were converting from natural gas to coal or oil, and that he opposed a court decision eliminating $1.1 billion in sales of 40 oil and gas leases off the mid-Atlantic coast.

"We need whatever supplies of gas, onshore and offshore, that we can find," he said.

Dunham said he expected the Emergency Natural Gas Act to expire normally this spring. Passed at President Carter's request during the winter fuel shortage, it lets the government take natural gas from in-state pipelines and give it to homes and other high priority users.

The law allowed the price to rise from the federal ceiling of $1.44 per thousand cubic feet, and Dunham said the EPC determined that a "fair and equitable price" for the emergency supply could be as high as $2.25.

Asked when the nation's industries could get back to normal operating, Dunham said, "the situation has improved in the short run, largely as a result of the thermometer," although he said a lot of gas was used in March. He said companies in the East Coast and Midwest still had problems in getting gas.

"Assuming there are no new supplies, our first requirement is getting ready for this coming winter," Dunham said. "In my opinion, we can do no less than have as much gas in storage this winter as we did last winter, to assure that homes will be heated."

200-mile fishing limit enforced

Coast Guard boards trawler

ATLANTIC [UPI] — Two Soviet fishing trawlers were boarded yesterday by United States Coast Guard teams searching for violations of a new law that bans unlicensed foreign ships from fishing within 300 miles of the U.S. mainland.

The boardings were carried out by crewmen of the Coast Guard Cutter Dallas as it patrolled the Atlantic 85 miles south of Martha's Vineyard.

The Dallas crew reported no violations of the law by the Russian fishing ships, whose catches consisted almost solely of hake,. a cod-like fish unprotected by the law.

A spokesman for the Coast Guard, charged with patrolling the 2 million square miles of new fishing grounds, said the service was "not exercising a law and order mentality. We're not going out there to break heads. We're just out to enforce the law.

The 200-mile fishing limit replaces the old 12-mile territorial barrier to fishing by foreign vessels, who have outfished American fleets over the past few years and endangered the nation's fishing industry.

Fishing ships bearing the flags of other countries must be licensed and pay duties amounting to one dollar for each gross ton of vessel weight and 3.5 per cent of the market value of its catch.

Five countries — the Soviet Union, Bulgaria, Romania, Poland, and Taiwan — have complied with the licensing requirement and were permitted to drop nets within the 200 mile zone.

Canadian ships fished without licenses, pending resolution of a dispute with the United States over who owns a patch of the Atlantic ocean off Cape Sable, Nova Scotia.

In Washington yesterday, the House, urged to help "our friends and allies," approved agreements allowing fishing vessels from Japan, South Korea, Spain and the European Economic Community to resume fishing within the 200-mile zone.

New Hampshire House rejects bottle bill legislation

CONCORD, N.H. [AP] — The New Hampshire House, responding to arguments a ban on non-returnable bottles and cans would not reduce litter or wastefulness, yesterday overwhelmingly rejected any bottle legislation this year.

The House voted to indefinitely postpone two bills that would have required a five-cent deposit on returnable bottles, and banned the sale of non-returnables. The action meant that similar legislation cannot be considered this year.

Rep. Robert M. Lawton, R-Meredith, a summer resort owner who reported he sells "thousands of cans" of soft drinks each year, led the fight against the legislation, calling it "a direct attack on the free enterprise system."

He said most beer and soft drinks are sold in non-returnable containers because "the vast majority of consumers want it that way."

The House accepted Lawton's objection and approved his motion killing a bill that would have established redemption centers to accept returnables. The vote was 213-155. The second bill, that would have required stores to accept return bottles, was killed on a voice vote.

Yesterday's vote came after intense lobbying by the beer and soft drink industries and local grocers against the bills, and the efforts of the Environmental Coalition for the bills.

The vote on Lawton's motion crossed party and ideological lines. Although most of the co-sponsors of the bottle bills were Democrats, Minority Leader Chris Spirou and most other Democratic leaders voted to kill it. In contrast, Majority Leader Marshall French, R-Meredith, was among the bill's supporters.

Lawton told his colleagues that he is selling soft drinks for 25 cents a can, but a bottle bill would force the price up to 35 cents.

Rep. Frederick A. Chapman, R-North Hampton, and other supporters of bottle legislation argued that requiring returnables would eventually result in lower consumer costs, reduce litter, lessen the demand for raw materials, and save energy consumption.

Carter to visit Mass.

CLINTON, Mass. [AP] — In his first "meet the people" jaunt since becoming President, Jimmy Carter will attend a New England town meeting, celebrate St. Patrick's Day and spend the night as guest of a loyal Democrat in her 100-year-old frame house overlooking a picturesque reservoir in this mostly Irish Massachusetts mill town.

Carter is expected to get a rousing welcome from a population which favored him by two-to-one in the election but has problems with a persistent unemployment rate of about 8 per cent. It was nearly 12 per cent a year ago.

His hostess, Eva Hester, 56, who cast her ballot for Carter in January as a member of the Electoral College, hopes Carter will have time in a crowded schedule to have a cup of coffee and breakfast in the kitchen she calls the "focal point" of her home.

Miss Hester learned Monday she was to play hostess to Carter from Rep. Joseph Early, D-Mass., who announced the visit publicly Tuesday.

"Hopefully, he'll have breakfast with me," she said in Boston, where she is on the staff of the Ways and Means Committee of the Massachusetts House.

Miss Hester, whose 83-year-old mother died recently, lives alone on the top two floors of the three-decker. She rents the first floor.

"I really don't know what he eats for breakfast. I do my own cooking. It's the usual. I'm watching my weight. I love Southern fried chicken but I don't eat black eyed peas."

Miss Hester, 56, ran unsuccessfully for lieutenant governor two years ago. She is a member of the Democratic National Committee, vice chairwoman of the state Democratic Party and a member of the Clinton Democratic Town Committee.

She first met Carter at Kansas City in 1974 and announced her endorsement for him as president last May, after her favorite, R. Sargent Shriver, had dropped from the race.

"When I first met him, he impressed me as someone who really knew what was going on in the country," she recalled.

"He has that great quality of responding to people.

"He was not the least bit evasive. He was a guy who believes in God and wasn't afraid to say so."

NEWS IN BRIEF

State Affirmative Action weak

BOSTON (AP) — Very little of substance has been done by officials to bring women and members of minority groups into state employment, except in highly visible positions, a special legislative committee reported yesterday.

The committee also found "a complete lack of sensitivity in state government to the question of allowing minority controlled businesses to receive state contracts for goods and services."

Sen. Bill Owens, D-Boston, chairman of the committee, said he found the Department of Public Works was among the worst offenders, although the rest of the state Office of Transportation and Construction was making significant progress in hiring members of minority groups and women, he said.

Striking teachers negotiate

WATERBURy, Conn. (AP) — A Superior Court Judge yesterday ordered teachers and city officials to bargain around the clock, delaying for the time being his threat to fine or jail teachers who have closed schools with a five-day long strike.

Both sides negotiated off and on under Judge Robert A. Wall's supervision in the court house yesterday after 29 teachers appeared before him for defying his back to work order.

The strike began Wednesday of last week after the Waterbury Teachers Association negotiators rejected what Mayor Edward Bergin Jr. called "the city's final offer."

Crackdown on foreign arm sales

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter is considering a proposal aimed at cracking down on independent sales campaigns in foreign countries by U.S. arms manufacturers, government sources said yesterday.

The sources said the plan for a government regulation to control some overseas activities of the arms makers was sent to Carter several days ago by Secretary of State Cyrus Vance as part of an overall review of policy on foreign arms sales.

Pentagon sources said the proposal first arose last fall when the Northrop Corp., without informing the Pentagon, sold Iran on a $250 million plan to modify a plane being developed for the Navy.

Defense Department officials had no knowledge of the deal until they received a letter from the Iranians offering a first payment of $8 million to develop a land-based version of the F18 fighter plan the Navy will buy in the 1980s.

U.S. protest activists' arrest

MOSCOW (UPI) — U.S. officials filed a formal protest with the Soviet Foreign Ministry yesterday over security agents' arrest of two Jewish activists who tried to enter the American embassy.

The victims-scientists Benjamin Fain, 47, and Iosep Begun, 46-were seized as they approached the embassy's consular section with an American consular officer late Monday.

An embassy witness said guards grabbed the two men and "physically dragged" them to a guard post several hundred yards away."

"We consider access to the consular section of the embassy to be legitimate business for Soviet citizens," an American official said, noting a protest was filed "at the appropriate level" with the Soviet Foreign Ministry.

Miner killed in flooded tunnel

TOWER CITY, Pa. (AP) — Water flooded into the tunnel of a coal mine here, killing one miner and trapping at least seven others, state police said yesterday.

Police said 14 other miners escaped from the flooded area. About 60 men were reported in the mine at the time, though not all were in the flooded area.

The accident occurred at 12:30 p.m. at the Porter Tunnel of the Kocher Coal Co. anthracite mine in Schuylkill County, state police said.

Two miners were admitted to Pottsville Hospital suffering from trauma and exposure, according to hospital spokesman John Joyce. He said three others were en route to the hospital from the mine.

Dukakis stimulated at UMass

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to express my appreciation to the many students who helped make my visit to the University so enjoyable and informative. Many people took time out from busy schedules to make the arrangements and talk with me, and I would like to thank them for their consideration and hospitality.

My visit was brief, but it did afford me a good view of the University community, its concerns and interests. My stops at classes, dining halls, and other spots throughout the University were stimulating, and I welcomed the opportunity to gain more insight into the life of an institution which plays an increasingly vital role in the life of Massachusetts and New England.

Once again, thanks to you all for your kindness.

Michael S. Dukakis

Human rights is finally chic

To the Editor:

More and more people I speak with are in agreement in believing that President Carter and the Carter Administration should indeed address the issues of human rights at home rather than abroad. It is unfortunate that Idi Amin of Uganda first stated this, publicly. His controversial policies and ill repute have only lent further credibility to the United States' propaganda efforts with their so-called concern with human rights and human oppression abroad.

"Human rights is suddenly chic," but human rights and its advocates were never taken seriously before. Why now? and precisely what people, and what issues?

We only receive bits and pieces from the media. ie: "Vladimir Bukovsky suffered unimaginable punishment for solely having dissenting views or for being a political dissident, or for fighting for the cause of civil liberties." Rarely is anything explained. I'm sure many people are left wondering what dissenting political views or beliefs, and how do they relate to that particular society? Civil liberties or individual liberties? for whom? These things are never explained to us.

For all we know, political dissenters may be criminals in their countries.

But no, we are asked to believe in violation of human rights through much faith and little reason.

Surely, we can sympathize with the form of punishment given to political dissenters, but we must take the entire situation into consideration. We not only need more information from the media. We also need to examine what responsibilities individuals have in their own unique society. Let us examine the facts. What are the controvertial items in oppressed scholarly work?

Further, if we agree that all human beings need a productive social environment, and guaranteed means to earn a livelihood, then logically we could infer that the United States Government is one country that is in flagrant violation of human rights. What about the violation of the human rights of American citizens in most urban areas, working environments, Appalachia, Harlem, South Bronx, Lower Manhattan, New Bedford ... etc.?

Stop the Frame-up

To the Editor:

The trial of Alex Markley and Tony Suares is upon us. The two local labor leaders caught in a web of chicanery by the Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms Bureau face 60 and 10 years respectively. In the recent years the interference, intervention, and trickery, of the CIA and the FBI have become well known. Therefore an additional 200 odd agents have been hired by the A.T.F. Bureau to do the dirty work of the government. The nature of internal security is not such that there need be snoops interfering with the functioning of the Pioneer Valley Labor Movement. This outrage must be put into the contest of the era in which we live.

The era of Senate Bill 1, an outright attack upon the civil liberties and rights of Blacks, labor and the people of the U.S. in general.

The era of the conviction of the Wilmington 10, a group of Black and white desegregationists in North Carolina [see Newsweek Feb. 22].

— The era of mass unemployment and the rampage of inflation.

— The era in which ROAR, the KKK, and Nazi organizations spread their disease ridden racism and anti-semitism.

— Obviously an era of crisis, a crumbling domestic scene, and international developments sending imperialism on its heels.

In this light the attack upon Markley and Suares, the attack upon labor, is fundamentally an extension of the intensified political repression against the development of progressive movements or tendencies in our nation.

A demonstration against the A.T.F. and in support of Markley and Suares will be held in Court Square Springfield at 1:00 on March 5, this Saturday. Rides from Northampton are leaving from the P.E.S. storefront on Market St.

STOP THE FRAME UP.

from our perspective

Getting more money...

In the face of tuition hikes, fee increases, and inflationary pressures, students can hardly be expected to welcome the proposed seven dollar increase in the student activity fee (SATF). But a look at what the SATF does, and what it won't do if the increase is voted down in the upcoming referendum (March 15-16), makes the hike more justifiable.

Many students don't realize what that $57 item on their last fee bill went to. Funds raised with the SATF support the shuttle and commuter buses, WMUA, area governments, the Student Center for Educational Research, and myriad other RSO groups. The Legal Services Office, which offers a bail program among its many services, is also funded by SATF, as are numerous cultural organizations, and the Collegian, in part.

So why is more money needed? The most immediate answer is that without the increase there will be an effective cut of 18 per cent in RSO funds. The loss comes partly as a result of a projected decline in enrollment (less people paying the fee) and a mandatory cost of living increase to full-time employees. And that's a bare-bones figure — no increases in services at all. Level funding, so to speak.

Even with the seven dollars, revenue will come short of covering this year's budget by 10 per cent. Hopefully, however, selective cutting of present programs could make room for new services, particularly ones which generate student jobs and can become self-supporting: a student-run towing service, for example.

As for the referendum, which will be voted on along with the SGA presidential election, it should be understood that if students vote against the proposed $64 fee, it will not mean a return to the $57 level. Instead, the issue will return to the Student Senate, which will arrive at a new figure.

The Collegian recommends that students vote in favor of the SATF increase. In a year when the quality of educational services appears headed for a plummet, student-funded services are one of the few "good buys" left at this campus.

...and living with less

Whether the SATF is increased or not, student-run and funded organizations may find their budgets pretty tight. Obviously it would be a great help for student services to become as self-sufficient as possible. Thus the establishment of a Student Economic Development Committee was a big step in the right direction. Not only is it a good idea to encourage activities which will employ students; it is also important that groups strive for some degree of independence from the RSO funding.

Of course, some organizations are better suited to generating their own revenue than others. The Collegian, for example, obtains almost 80 per cent of its funds from advertising and other services. Many groups would be unable to generate any income.

The point, however, is for all organizations to watch for possible alternative money sources in addition to the SATF funding. Such a strategy would not leave student groups independent of the Student Senate, but would ease the strain on the RSO budget.

'Glad to get out'

Amin eases; first U.S. citizen departs

NAIROBI, Kenya [AP] — A New Jersey tourist, apparently the first American to leave Uganda since President Idi Amin allowed U.S. citizens to depart, said yesterday he wasn't bothered but was glad to get out.

"I was a happy man when I stepped across the border into Kenya," said Robert Shinn, 25, of Spring Lake Heights, N.J.

Shinn said he arrived in the Uganda capital of Kampala last Saturday not knowing that the day before Amin had ordered all Americans in Uganda not to leave the country until he met with them.

Amin had charged 5,000 Marines were poised to invade Uganda and said he was ready to repel any "task force." A spokesman for President Carter said the United States would do "whatever is necessary" to ensure the safety of Americans in Uganda.

A U.S. Navy task force led by the nuclear-powered carrier Enterprise steamed off East Africa, but U.S. officials played down the possibility of a military rescue mission, and Radio Uganda quoted Amin as saying he had no intention of holding the Americans hostage.

Amin had scheduled his meeting with the Americans for Monday, but over the weekend he postponed it until Wednesday. Yesterday he put it off indefinitely and said Americans could go about their business "within or outside Uganda."

Radio Uganda quoted Amin as saying he had changed his plans because Carter was "still new and young and not familiar with African affairs."

In New York, U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim said Uganda's ambassador had told him Americans in Uganda were in no danger and might leave the country if they wished.

Shinn said he left Kampala on Sunday after the West German diplomats who handle American affairs in Uganda told him the travel ban applied not to tourists but to the 240 Americans living in Uganda, most of them missionaries in outlying areas.

"At no time did I feel any personal threat," said Shinn, "and Ugandans I met who realized I was an American were very friendly."

Shinn, interviewed in Nairobi wearing a "Tourism in Uganda" teeshirt, said he took a bus to the Kenyan border after talking with the West Germans and crossed the frontier without incident.

Korean dance-drama appearing in FAC

The UMass Arts Council will sponsor a single appearance of the Pongsan Masked Dance-Drama of Korea Friday, at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall as part of the 1976-77 Concert Dance Series.

The Pongsan Masked Dance-Drama, originating in the province of Hwanghae in northwest Korea, is a festive comedy in which laughter triumphs over the fear and oppression imposed on the commoners by rapacious officials and overbearing gentry.

Tickets are now on sale at the Fine Arts Center Box Office and at all Ticketron outlets at $3, $4 and $5 for the general public; one-half price for UMass-Amherst students; and $1 off the regular price for Senior Citizens and students attending schools other than UMass. The Fine Arts Center Box Office, 545-2511 is open from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Auditions scheduled for musical 'Journey'

Vocal and dance-movement auditions will be held on March 6 and 7 for "Journey," an original musical by Stephen Greeley and Daniel Kane. Members of the Theater, BDIC and music and dance departments are cooperating on all aspects of this student-run production. Auditions are open to the Amherst community and will be held in Cottage C at 5 and 7 p.m. Call-backs for acting will be arranged with director Ralph Anderson.

Space Available

"Uh, yes, I'd like to apply for some space."

"Space?"

"Yes, your sign, 'space available'."

"Oh, sure. How much space would you like?"

"How much can I have?"

"As much as you'd like."

"Even in southwest?"

"Are you speaking primarily of physical space?"

"Yes. Aren't you?"

"Not entirely. You see in some cases physical space is impossible so we offer psychological space, at a slightly higher price."

"How much?"

"Well, we have a nice package plan that includes both physical and psychological space. It's what we call our "normal zone". We offer moderate space on both dimensions."

"What if I'm not happy with that?"

"We either increase or decrease the space and wait a week."

"How do you know whether to increase or decrease it?"

"We don't. It's kind of hit or miss."

"Isn't that a little unreliable?"

"Did you have something else in mind?"

"Well I wanted only a little space from people I like but a lot of space from people I don't like."

"That's our "flexible boundary" plan."

"It sounds perfect."

"There's just one small problem. The other person may not want the same amount of space that you want. You may like them but they may not like you."

"What do I do then?"

"You could try to find another person to share your space with or increase your space from everyone."

"From everyone?"

"Maybe you'd prefer our "no space" policy."

"No space at all?"

"Right. You go around being best friends with everyone."

"Is that safe?"

"It's the safest way. If you let everyone equally close then no one person is any more important then the next."

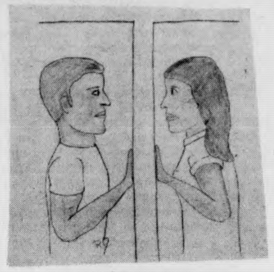
"I don't know...."

"There's always our "space now-pay later" plan."

"I don't understand."

"You take as much space as you want with as many people as you want but after a while you have to pay."

"How do you mean?"



"You pay when you realize no one knows you or is even interested."

"Look, I'm kind of confused."

"How about our "student special". It allows you to get as physically close with anyone you want while maintaining a lot of psychological distance. But you pay for that one, too. After a while, you start feeling empty, like you're living in a shell. You don't know if you can feel anymore."

"I don't think I like that one very much."

"Well, make up your mind. Which one do you want?"

"I don't know what I want. I spend so much time trying to figure out what other people think of me that I don't even know what I want."

"I'm afraid I need an answer from you."

"I'm really not sure. Can I come back tomorrow?"

"Sure, you can take as much time as you'd like but I think you'll find that time is very similar to space."

"How's that?"

"The more you take, the less you have."

What's in a UMie

There are banners, cranberry and white of course, and even stickers to stick up into the back window of your car. University of Massachusetts at Amherst, UMass and you part of the crew hanging out on the 1,000 acre campus labeled, you a UMass student: a UMIE.

UMie with a joint hanging out the corner of your mouth, dahhhh, you know, UMass is the lower class in the Five-College community, in the ranks of other higher education institutions in the state. The dumb UMie. We all know how Metawampie will drop his tomahawk when a female UMie graduates a virgin. And he hasn't dropped it yet. Say something?

Academics? What's that in a place like UMass. In UMassland it's more good beer parties, the Bluewall serves the most beer in the state, parties every night, natural UMass high... zzz through the classes recovering from the weekend. ZooMass is the place to be if you want to have a good time. Being a UMie is learning how to have a good time. Good times is the education you receive with such low-cost tuition. The UMass deal. Corruption and scandal. Front page news. That's why the Collegian has been rated one of the tops in college presses in the country a few years back when such news was at its peak. And that has to do with being a UMie, too. A school for scandal.

This is the way it was told to me when I came here as a freshperson: shy, naive, I believed. Followed? Well, sorry that's personal information. This UMie identity became an identity I believed in and I saw my own identity in line with it.

And then I realized, oh this past September, that this identity was a myth, a recollection from the past. It was no longer a reality.

So, what is the identity no? — I asked myself. What's in being a UMie?

I asked people at the Collegian — they should know. Don't you think? They're in charge of knowing what goes on in this University. But everyone I talked with shrugged, said "isn't it sad?" They moaned, said they really missed the old days. "But what's the identity now?" I pressed the question. "We don't know! We just write news and get experience so we can work on real newspapers."

I went up to the Student Senate office. "What's going on?" "What do you mean 'what's going on'?" they answered. "Students can still get riled up about budget cuts. There's still Spring Fever." But I knew they were just hoping this was so because I heard them saying how many vacant seats there were in the senate. "I don't know what's wrong!" they said. "Do you suppose they are all out there studying?" "But what's the identity? The identity," I said, begging for a reply. "We don't know. We're just politicians up here playing little President Wood's, practicing for when we can be real life politicians," they answered.

And I went over to the School of Education where the last corrupt act was reported to have happened. But things were cool and now it's pretty certain that the whole thing was blown out of proportion. And I asked them, they're educators, what has become of the identity? "We don't know," they answered loud and clear. "We are educators trying to educate and give out degrees. Identity? Really don't think there is much of one these days."

And I went to the library. "Shhhh," the students said. "We're studying." Went to the Hatch and saw more people studying. People were talking, too, but I couldn't get any sense of any common identity. Walked the campus all the day long, days long for a week and still the same. People studying, walking to class, in their own little ways, own little selves, own individuality. I couldn't find a common identity.

I went home and cried and called an old friend who was here when the UMie identity was at its heights. He reminised, told me about old times, even older than myself. It didn't help. We both started crying because the identity wasn't there anymore.

I'm looking in the mirrow now, trying to figure this whole thing out. UMie — me? UMass student — me? And you?

An then it clicked. I realized there isn't any real identity anymore. We're just all individuals worried about the future, preparing for the future, conforming for the work world. We have a separate identity, each of us, in this UMassland.

And that's what this UMassland is: a melting pot of different identities bumping into each other and borrowing from each other. There's no identity anymore to conform to and there's no use crying over the lost identity. It's better to have your own identity anyways. Now what's in a UMie is just being myself.

Carter sets example

By DAVID NEEDLE

An English teacher of mine once referred to Benjamin Franklin's Autobiography "... as among the first major pieces of American fiction." Compared to the real Franklin the fiction in his autobiography is obvious. The book is full of anecdotes illustrating ways to give the 'appearance' of doing good and contains his 'thirteen steps to moral perfection'. It is written in the form of a letter and begins, "Dear son," but I'm sure he meant it to be read by all his children, there just not being room enough on the page to list the numerous illegitimate ones he's known to have sired.

Prone to sin as we are, Franklin suggested the only way to right ourselves was to practice doing good, and set an example for others. To this end (the book tells us) he went out of his way to do his most difficult chores in public for all to see. He really didn't have to make a spectacle of himself as he was one of this country's most industrious men (in and out of the sack) anyway.

Morality was the farthest thing from Franklin's mind in his successful career as an unscrupulous negotiator for the U.S. during the Revolutionary War, and he's remembered for the great contributions he made to this and many other fields, appearances aside.

The hope today is that President Carter will do more than spout moralistic puff. Appearances are all in order so far. First there was the long walk after the inauguration, then the folksy fireside chat, abolishing the White House limosines and more recently the widely publicized picture of him sprawled on a hospital table giving blood.

No harm in all this and he is setting a 'good example', but his national and international intentions remain unclear. So far he has followed through on two and one half campaign promises. 1) He sent his daughter to public school, 2) He's made some mistakes, and 2¼) he pardoned the Viet Nam draft evaders (but not those technically deserters).

He'll have to do more than let a few people Talk to The President to please the electorate. The unemployed have plenty of time to talk, but I'm not sure it would get on the air. I doubt his "how are Y'all" southern drawl will be much of a hit either.

Employment, GI Bill among veterans legislation

By J. MICHAEL MURPHY, Jr.
Veterans Affairs Office

Two veteran-related pieces of legislation have surfaced recently, one proposed by President Jimmy Carter; the other by Rep. Lester Wolff of New York.

Using funds available through the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA), the president is initiating a jobs program to be known as 'HIRE', which calls for "the nation's larger corporations to make private sector job and training opportunities available to Vietnam-era veterans." Also, the "economic recovery package" the president is sending to Congress will contain a request "for an additional 290,000 public service jobs to be financed under CETA this year and 125,000 more next year."

The White House press office said the president is proposing that "35 per cent of all new public service jobs will be filled" by Vietnam-era veterans, with preference given to those in the 20-24 age group, as government statistics show that they are bearing "a disproportionate brunt of our excessive unemployment."

Outreach units staffed by disabled veterans will be established to aid other disabled Vietnam-era vets to find employment.

In January the "Comprehensive Veterans Readjustment Assistance Act of 1977" (H.R. 2231) was submitted to Congress where it is now being studied by the Veterans Affairs Committee. Sponsored by Rep. Wolff, and cosponsored by 39 other congressmen (including Reps. Silvio Conte, Joe Moakley and Gerry Studds of Massachusetts), the bill was described by Rep. Wolff as containing "many provisions designed to strengthen the GI Bill and preclude the abuse that has plagued it in recent years." But he added the "principal provision is accelerated entitlement. This provision would permit veterans who demonstrate need to accelerate their total readjustment entitlement thereby enabling them to receive a greater monthly payment over a proportionately reduced period of time.

The present entitlement period is fixed by law at 45 months, and is by its nature geared to assist veterans enrolled in low-cost public and community-college level programs. This provision would remove the discrimination against those veterans who require readjustment assistance in trade, technical and vocational field, or private colleges or graduate programs, which take far less than 45 months to complete." If enacted, eligible veterans would be required to "initiate a program of entitlement within 18 months after the effective date of the provision (Oct. 1, 1977)."

Economic development office planned for NE

The federal agency charged with dispensing $6 billion in economic development funds each year has agreed to establish an office in Boston serving the six New England states.

The establishment of the new office came at the request of Rep. Michael J. Harrington, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr., D-Mass., and 14 other New England Congressmen. Agreement was reached at a meeting today between Harrington and Robert T. Hall, assistant secretary of commerce for economic development.

The New England states are currently served by a regional office located in Philadelphia which is the largest of the six current national jurisdictions serving 16 states and territories.

Underscoring the need for a distinct New England region, according to Harrington were the problems that resulted when the Philadelphia office recently tried to implement the most recent EDA public works project. For the recent grants awarded under Title I of the Local Public Works Capital Development Act of 1976, the Region I office received over eight thousand applications for projects totalling more than $8 billion. As of Dec. 11, 1976, 6996 projects with funding requests of $6.8 billion were judged by EDA criteria to be eligible for the $727 million allocated to Region I under the Act. The six New England states alone accounted for over 1000 of the project applicants with nearly $1 billion in funding requests. The Region 3 office in Denver, Colorado received only 1488 applicants with funding levels of $1.1 billion, while the Region 6 office in Austin, Texas received 1700 applicants with $1.3 billion in funding requests.

In his letter to Kreps, Harrington notes that the EDA was originally established in 1965 with a New England office, located in Portland, Maine. In a Nixon Administration reorganization, the New England office was merged with a new Atlantic jurisdiction which included 16 states and territories.

Celebration on Purim in SU

The Jewish holiday of Purim will be celebrated here tomorrow night in the Cape Cod lounge of the Student Union. Starting at 7:30 p.m. the scroll of Esther will be read. Noisemakers will be provided, although people may also bring their own creations. Crazy costumes and general erratic behavior are also welcomed in consonance with the happy and exuberant mood of the holiday. Following the reading of the Megillah, there will be a party. All the festivities are free. All students and faculty and their families are invited.

Purim marks an incident of the near destruction of a Jewish community in Persia during the reign of King Ahashverosh. The kind but dull-witted king agreed to allow his ambitious and cruel prime minister, Haman, to destroy the Jewish community of his kingdom in exchange for a healthy contribution to the royal treasury. As the day, chosen by lots (or Purim, in Hebrew) — for the slaughter drew nigh, Queen Esther, warned of the plot by her cousin Mordecai, risked her life on behalf of her people by revealing her true identity as a Jew to her husband, King Ahashverosh. The King annulled the decision instigated by Haman to kill and plunder the Jews, and instead he hung Haman on the day that Haman had chosen to kill the Jews.

Purim is therefore a collective sigh of relief at a disaster narrowly averted by the courageous act of Queen Esther on behalf of her people. The Biblical Scroll of Esther (or Megillah) which tells the story of Purim, is read, and a special three-cornered pastry called hamantashen is eaten among general festivity and merriment which includes noisemakers (greggars), humorous plays and carnivals. Traditionally, gifts of food are exchanged and charity is given to those in need.

Higher Ed. press conference

The newly-formed Higher Education Coalition will hold a press conference today at 11:00 a.m. in Campus Center 904.

The Higher Education Coalition includes all segments of the public higher education community in Massachusetts. Its formation represents an unprecedented and major unification for concerted action by the colleges and universities of this state. The Coalition consists of faculty and union presidents across the state and was formed with two purposes in mind:

—To focus public attention on the continued erosion of the Commonwealth's higher education budget in real dollars.

—To unite the faculties across the state to take whatever joint actions may be necessary under the circumstances.

The Coalition is meeting on the Amherst campus to emphasize the impact of a level funding program on Univ. of Mass.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Arts collective plans celebration

The UMass Student Arts Collective is planning a celebration of student arts. In early April the Student Union Ballroom will be filled with student art. We will schedule events and have displays of student music, arts, film, theatre, poetry, video, photos, etc.

We need ideas and people to help organize and produce this venture, and we need people's art to perform and show. If you are interested in helping out, please come to the first, IMPORTANT meeting tonight at 7:00 sharp in Campus Center 801.

East West Center offering classes

The East West Community Center of Northampton has recently opened its doors to the public with classes, lectures and events of special interest to people of all ages and lifestyles.

The educational center is non profit and non denominational. Its purpose is for the development of meaningful, applicable interaction between the Eastern and Western approach to health, healing, philosophy, and cultural and practical arts. Classes offered will include natural foods cooking based on ancient principles. acupressure and do-in massage, yoga, and various arts.

The center is located at 160 Main St., Northampton, room 25. A read-in library is available. The center's office hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday, 586-4025. Schedules of classes and events will be advertised in posters, the Valley Advocate, Daily Hampshire Gazette and the newsletter of the Turning Point Health Center of Greenfield.

Voter registration tomorrow in Amherst

There will be a voter registration in Amherst tomorrow from 7 to 5 p.m. at the North Fire Station. It is important that students register to vote in Amherst. This town effects your life and the lives of fellow students in the future.

Women's Week follow-up meeting

There will be a follow-up orientation meeting for International Women's Week tonight at 9:00 in Campus Center 904-908. People are still needed to staff the information desk and do general facilitating during the week of March 6-12. Anybody already involved or wanting to join are requested to attend the meeting to be brought up to date on the programs.

Collective forming for Jewish women

There will be an organizational meeting for all Jewish women interested in the formation of a havurat nashim (a woman's collective) tonight at 8:00 in Campus Center 803.

We will be discussing possible alternatives to the present Jewish structures for women at the University. We will also discuss the possibility of a Jewish women's support group and a women's minyan. For more information contact Betsy Cohen, 546-6614.

Board links students with Health Services

The University Health Services exists to serve students, student dependents and other members of the University community. Students pay for personal health services through their health fee and should have a say in the kind of care and types of services they receive.

The Student Health Advisory Board (SHAB) is the official mechanism for consumer involvement in the Health Services. Board members, often working through subcommittees, have input into all policy decisions. Functions of the board include the yearly review of the Health Services budget, involvement in the interviewing and hiring of professional staff, and participation in program planning and service expansion.

An important role of the Student Health Advisory Board is that of communication link between consumers and providers of services. The Health Services depend on consumer feedback to continue to meet the needs of students and their dependents. For the best operating mechanism, the wide range of student interests should be represented. For instance, board members with children or spouse better comprehend the needs of dependents, handicapped students are more aware of their special concerns, and bilingual students may have needs of which the majority are unaware.

Membership on the Board is open to all students who pay the health fee. Voting status is attained by registering with the board and attending two prior meetings in a semester. The next SHAB meeting will be March 8 at 6:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. If you would like more information on SHAB, call the Health Education Office at the Health Services, 549-2671, extension 181.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Wednesday, March 2 — Born today, you insist upon gaining personal experience before admitting to knowledge of anything. You appreciate what is to be learned from books — but on a strictly academic level. In turn, you consider academic knowledge to be useful purely as an aid to the successful attainment of goals through actual physical and mental involvement in the process of the attainment. In short, you would never list yourself as able without having first proved it in the doing — as against the thinking or the vicarious reading — of the deed, whatever it may be. You are, needless to say, a pragmatist. Principles and standards are acceptable to you when and if they work; those that do not cannot be considered beneficial, and therefore are to be discarded.

You will have always to be on guard against tossing away something of value for which you have no replacement. To exchange elements or factors in any given enterprise is one thing, but to create a void, a blank spot in a general progression of ideas or thoughts or deeds is quite another. The one may improve your position, your understanding, your results; the other can do little but encourage confusion, frustration and a general feeling of disability about or within the circumstances of the given situation.

You are not one to give in to failure or disappointment. Your most distinctive quality is probably your ability --and your willingness -- to begin again. You are able to make a recovery, and often a very imaginative recovery, from disappointment; you do not waste time in self-pity or in blaming the other fellow.

Thursday, March 3

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — You can apply recently learned facts to present experience and, thus, increase your chance of gain before nightfall.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — A disquieting morning ultimately yields a peaceful afternoon. Pressures on the employment scene fade as the day progresses.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Congenial family members make it easy for you to forget recent disappointments. Make an effort to tell your tale objectively.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Take care not to act in haste today. You may be able to save yourself from hardship if you will act slowly, yet in time.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — That your work needs no aid from another to appear successful in the eyes of those in authority should give you great pleasure today.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — An opportunity to increase your earnings appears on the not-too-distant horizon. Make plans for a journey on a tentative basis only.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — You should be able to handle the affairs of one dependent upon you to do so with relative ease. Guard another's possessions carefully.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — A chance to express both love and loyalty comes early in the day. Don't be suspicious of one offering to help you at evening.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Give your full attention to those affairs which, though they are not exciting, are essential to your future. Success is just around the corner.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Speculative enterprise should prove successful today, especially if you are able to apply knowledge gained during recent travels.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Cooperate with others in the establishing of a single set of principles where work on a new project is concerned. Success depends upon it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — The usefulness of your own knowledge is in doubt insofar as your being able to apply it to the matter at hand today. Remain calm in the afternoon and evening.

Businessmen form fans organization

BOSTON [UPI] — Four local businessmen yesterday announced formation of the National Federation of Sports Fans, Inc., an organization designed to give the paying customers a voice in professional sports.

Initially, the Watertown-based organization will seek members, at $3 apiece, from the New England area. The plan is to send out computerized questionnaires to all members in a variety of topics concerning professional sports. Concensus opinions will be presented to team owners and players.

"We plan to work in a positive way to improve the relationship with all sports organizations," said J. Gordon "Buck" MacKinnon, a charter member. "It is a fact of life that sports teams cannot survive without the active support of fans. The welfare of the fans should be paramount. We intend to reinforce this position."

MacKinnon envisions a national organization with a membership of 100,000 or more fans. "But we're trying to walk before we run," he says. "That's why we're starting in New England and dealing with the four major sports at first."

The group — which includes MacKinnon's son, Larry; Joseph Greelish of Bedford; and Timothy Dorsey of Newton — will send out its first mailing in two weeks. The questionnaire will try to determine the nature of the "average" fan, whether he is a season-ticket holder in a sport or whether he follows the teams through the media.

The federations hopes to get fan soundings on ticket prices, customer services at parks and stadiums, methods of convenient public transportation and ways to improve a ticketholder's enjoyment of a game.

"There long has been a very heavy inequity. The fan has no voice and we think the fan should have an equal voice," said MacKinnon, noting the group's trademark will be an inverted triangle which represents the three sides of professional sports — owners, athletes and fans.

"There are 125 owners and 4,000 players and each group has all kinds of people representing them," said Greelish. "There are 80 million sports fans and no one represents them. That's what we want to do."

MacKinnon, who has talked with New England Patriots President Billy Sullivan and Boston Bruins General Manager Harry Sinden, said a large membership would give the group clout. "We will present the results of our polls to the owners and if they refuse to act, we can blitz them with letters, bury them with mail."

NFL reps sign settlement

NEW YORK (UPI) — The three-year war of harsh words and lawsuits between National Football League owners and players moved another step closer to settlement yesterday when representatives of both sides formally signed a five-year settlement costing about $107 million.

Only two steps now remain before the contract goes into effect. On Friday, it will be reviewed by a federal district court in Minneapolis and next Monday ballots will be mailed to every player.

"I anticipate the balloting will take about 10 days," said Ed Garvey, executive director of the NFL Players' Association. He later added, "we're anticipating ratification. If the players vote against it, we're back to square one.

After three years without a player contract, an agreement was announced Feb. 16 by Garvey and Sargent Karch, executive director of the NFL Management Council. Last week, the player representatives voted unanimously in Washington to accept the collective bargaining agreement while at the same time in New York the owners also agreed to it.

The settlement will cost the NFL approximately $107 million, with the money going into four categories — pensions, the settlement of law suits, insurance and post season bonuses.

Len Hauss, a center for the Washington Redskins and vice president of the NFLPA, predicted that the players will accept the deal "wholeheartedly."

"I know the Redskins like it and the player representatives and the executive council like it," he said. "The contract gives the majority of the players in the NFL a lot more than they had and that's what a union is for, to make things better for a majority of its members."

Garvey agreed that the settlement is "designed to help a majority of our members get a better deal," but he wouldn't claim that the union had won a sweeping decision from the owners. "We left here not feeling we won any great victory, but we were satisfied. The management council probably feels the same... if we go away feeling we badly beat them, it's probably a bad agreement."

Speaking for the owners, Wellington Mara of the New York Giants, chairman of the Management Council, said, "I think we got stability. We have elements of a system, and it is a new system, that will enable us to operate." Mara said he was particularly pleased with the creation of a joint committee, consisting of two owners and two player representatives still to be chosen, "that I believe will open the way to bridge our communication gap."

NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle, who was on the sidelines at Tuesday's signing, was obviously pleased at the fixed compensation formulas on free agents. He had been under heavy criticism, as well as the target of lawsuits, because under the "Rozelle Rule" he insisted he had the authority to fix compensation when an individual played out his option and went to another team.

"I don't have to take that flap anymore," Rozelle beamed.

Reds president warns baseball

CINCINNATI [UPI] — Cincinnati Reds' President Bob Howsam, in an "open letter to all people interested in baseball," said yesterday that players negotiating contracts "must show some responsibility" about how today's baseball trends are going to affect fans.

"The players must be aware, as we are, that a major football league has folded, a major basketball league has folded and major league hockey teams have folded or are on the verge of bankruptcy," said Howsam. "We can't allow this to happen to baseball.

"We do not believe that spending huge sums of money to sign players who play out their option is the way to success in baseball in the future. We have taken a public stand against this.

"We have already seen some of the jealousies and problems that have surfaced on other teams that were involved in the wild bidding for major league free agents.

"We will continue to pay our players excellent salaries, as befits their talent and success. But our ability to keep baseball as the prime family sports entertainment bargain depends on operating the club with fiscal responsibility. We will not sacrifice this responsibility or our beliefs about the proper way to operate the ball club."

Howsam said a "balance" among fans, players and owners is needed.

"We have to look at the long-range needs of our club and seek to reach a balance that takes into consideration the fans, the players and the ownership," he said.

Five Reds have not yet signed contracts for the upcoming season — Pete Rose, Davey Concepcion, Rawly Eastwick, Gary Nolan and Pat Darcy.

"We are going to make every effort to sign our major league players to contracts and keep this great team intact," said Howsam, adding, "We must all act in a responsible manner, players and those of us operating the team alike, to be able to accomplish this goal."

Boston Celtics center, Dave Cowens picks up Golden State Warriors guard Phil Smith as he drives the lane in NBA action at the Hartford Civic Center last night. Smith tied for high scoring honors in the game with teammate Rick Barry and led the Warriors to a 101-94 victory over the Celts.

Warriors beat C's 101-94

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — The Golden State Warriors got 22 points each from Rick Barry and Phil Smith to beat the Boston Celtics, 101-94, last night.

The Warriors led virtually the entire way but had to fight off a closing burst by the Celtics that followed a fight between Barry and Boston forward Sidney Wicks. Both players were ejected from the game.

The score was 91-83 with 4 minutes remaining when Wicks fouled Barry. The two traded punches with Wicks flooring Barry with a right. Both left the game after Barry made the mandatory two free-throws.

Boston closed the margin to four points twice after that, but six free throws by Golden State's Jamaal Wilkes in the final two minutes sealed the victory for the Warriors. Jo Jo White led Boston with 21 points.

Bruins clip Wings

BOSTON [UPI] — Gregg Sheppard scored three goals last night to trigger the Boston Bruins' 8-3 win over the Detroit Red Wings in NHL action.

Sheppard's final goal at 1:18 of the third period was one of four Boston tallies in a 4:06 span that sealed the contest. Wayne Cashman, Stan Jonathan and Dave Forbes netted the other goals in the third period spurt, while John Wensink and Bobby Schmautz scored earlier markers for the Bruins.

The Red Wings, 1-8-2 in their last 11 games, got goals from Walt McKechnie, Nick Libett and Dennis Hexpall.

Golfing greats nominated

PINEHURST, N.C. [UPI] — Lee Trevino, who became eligible for the first time this year, and five repeat candidates Tuesday were nominated for the World Golf Hall of Fame.

Also nominated in the Modern category were Billy Casper, Lawson Little, Bobby Locke, Louise Suggs and Peter Thomson.

The Modern ERA category includes golfers whose greatest achievements occurred after 1930.

Nominated in the Distinguished Services category were Frank Emmitt, who will appear on the ballot for the first time, and third-time nominees Herb Graffis and Donald Ross.

The Golf Writers Association of America will vote on the candidates.

Additionally, the special Pre-Modern ERA committee elected John Ball Jr., perhaps the greatest English amateur golfer, to the Hall of Fame. Ball won the British Open in 1890, becoming the first amateur to do so. He won the British Amateur a record eight times between 1888 and 1912. At the age of 60, he was still able to reach the sixth round of the British Amateur in 1921.

Trevino joined the Professional Golf Association Tour in 1967, giving him 10 years of service — the minimum number required for consideration for the Hall of Fame. Trevino has won 19 American tour events. He was the fourth golfer to reach the $1 million career earnings mark and still holds fourth on the all-time high earning list with more than $1.5 million.

Casper, born in 1931, also is active on the PGA tour. He is the third all-time money winner on the American tour with more than $1.6 million. He has won 51 American tour titles.

Little won the U.S. and British Amateur championships in 1934 and 1935, the only player to accomplish this feat. He also won the U.S. and Canadian Opens.

Matmen squelch Crimson

By BOB HASKELL
Collegian Staff

It was the seniors' night, the last appearance at Boyden Gym for Pete Sachon, Steve Jabaut, Dana Cormier, Bob Spaulding, and Dennis Fenton against a tough Harvard squad. But sophomore Mike Riley decided to celebrate a couple years early.

With an impressive display of determination, Riley refused to succumb to a bigger Harvard grappler at 190 lbs., and came back from a 7-1 deficit to win 10-8. That stunning upset deadlocked the team score at 17, setting the stage for heavyweight Dennis Fenton, who dominated his bout, winning 9-0.

The final was UMass 21, Harvard 17. The Minutemen gave warning that there could be some surprises at the upcoming New England championships, scheduled to be held this weekend, March 5-6, at Boston University.

"Riley came through again," said UMass coach Dave Amato after the contest. "But give some credit to Pete Sachon (118 lbs.). He won the first match and really set the tone for the night."

Coach John Lee's Crimson, now 10-6 on the season, came into the match ranked fifth in New England. They looked strong throughout the match, and in fact seemed to have cinched at least a tie until Riley's heroics turned things around.

Other winners for the Minutemen, now 7-13 on the season, were: senior Steve Jabaut (142 lbs.), Kevin Griffin (150 lbs.), and senior Dana Cormier (167 lbs.).

Dennis Fenton capped off an incredible career in typical style, by clinching the win. The powerful team captain from Springfield enters next weekend's N.E. event with a season's record of 20-0, and is the overwhelming favorite to repeat for an amazing fourth time.

Asked about the team's chances this weekend, coach Amato was optimistic.

"We're gonna do better than people think," he said, "For the first time we've got everybody down to weight and healthy. If we stay together, we'll do well in the New Englands."

Assistant coach Ron Pelegra was even more specific. "URI is the team to beat at the New Englands," he said, "But I think it'll be between BU, URI and UMass. We'll be right in there."

Terriers edge women skiers

By RICHARD MOORE
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's ski team had a good shot at the Women's Intercollegiate Ski Conference championship going into last weekends final league meet; but the Minutewomen fell short and finished in second place behind the Terriers of Boston University.

UMass was one percentage point behind B.U. when they met at Tenney Mt., in Plymouth, New Hampshire, but B.U. quickly shattered the Minutewomen's hopes by sweeping the top three spots in Saturdays giant slalom.

Denise Gallant paced the Terriers with a winning time of 89.77, and teammates Syandy Ray and Karen Butler were close behind at 90.65 and 92.19, respectively. Minutewomen co-captain Kathy Shinnick was fifth at 94.13, and Kathy Clarke took seventh place at 98.00.

The handwriting was on the wall for the Minutewomen in the first race when co-captain Shinnick, Nancy Hayden, and Barbara Reynard all fell on the bumpy Tenney Mt. course.

"Kathy came out of her bindings," said Coach Steve Tonelli "and the wicked bumps just got Nancy and Barbara."

"The girls were really up and we thought we'd take the league." Tonelli said, "but B.U. skied real well, and we were inconsistent. I think the girls forgot their team concept of skiing, and were trying to win it individually. Maybe they were too psyched."

The Minutewomen were better in Sundays race, but it was a case of too little, too late. Shinnick finished second behind B.U.'s Tracy Newlove, and Donovan and Clarke came in sixth and seventh; but Terriers Gallant and Ray assured B.U. of the meet win by finishing fourth and fifth, respectively.

"Sandy Ray was a big help to B.U.," Tonelli said. "She hadn't raced yet this year because of a training injury, but she led the league last year."

Hayden and Reynard, who have skied some very consistent meets this year, fell again on the treacherous bumps.

"We had to ski exceptionally to win," Tonelli said, "but skiing well is skiing under control. The girls were pressing."

The final WISC standings were 1 Boston University, 2 UMass, 3 University of Connecticut, 4 Merrimack College.

The Minutewomen had three of the WISC's top ten individual racers. Shinnick ended up third in the league behind Newlove and Gallant. Donovan finished the season in fifth place, and Clarke in seventh.

"Shinnick and Donovan skied real well the second half of the year," Tonelli said, "and all three of the girls who were in the top ten were consistent all season."

The WISC season is over, but the Minutewomen still have some very important challenges ahead of them. They will be at Stowe, Vermont March 11 and 12 competing in the Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women national meet, and are travelling to Pets Peak, in Henniker, New Hampshire Friday to compete in the Easterns.

Bowlers finish first

The UMass men's and women's bowling team put it all together for the first time this year during this past weekend, and won the ACU-I's, one of the most important collegiate bowling tournaments in the region.

By winning the tournament, the Minutemen and women will travel to Troy, N.Y. for the national semifinals to be held later this month. If the UMass bowlers win there, they will travel to San Antonio, Texas for the national finals.

The UMass men's team, consisting of Rich Rosenthal, Mitch Forman, Paul Stutzman, Mike Berard and Roger Norcross started off slowly in the tournament as was in fourth place after the first three games. But in the last six games, the UMass bowlers completely dominated the tournament and placed first, 150 pins above second place Bryant College.

The Minutemen's surge began in the fourth game with Berard rolling a tournament high game of 257. Norcross followed in the fifth game with a 223 and in the sixth game set, Berard fired another fine string of 246.

Berard finished the tournament in second place for individuals, and his position enables him to go to the national finals for singles in Reno, Nev. in April.

Everybody on the team bowled at least 200 during the tournament. Norcross took the singles title for the last three games bowling a 204, 202 and 208, for a 614 series.

Other 200 games were Forman's 216 and 209 and Rosenthal's 215. Also, Stutzman had a 201 and Berard had a 200 and 212.

For the UMass women bowlers, it was just another strong victory. Team captain Karen James took second place in singles and Patty Melanson took second place in all events.

The performance was another strong one for the Minutemen, a veteran team consisting of James, Melanson, Fran Griffin, Beth Scheider and Amanda Garcia.

The closest team to UMass was 300 pins away.

The UM duo with high re-guard

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Much has been said and written about conflicts on and off the court between the UMass backcourt and coach Jack Leaman. But now it's time to look at the inside, the basketball inside of guards Alex Eldridge and Derick Claiborne.

It is now granted among all the UMass fans, coaches and players that when both Eldridge and Claiborne are playing the type of ball they are capable of, they are as good as any backcourt in New England.

"Their total play of the game when they play up to potential is outstanding," said Leaman. The secret of all this is they know each other so well. They can guess each other's mind and know exactly where each other are going to be at any spot on the court.

Claiborne and Eldridge, both 6-2, and at 170 and 190 respectively, have played eight years in the backcourt together. Both played guard at William H. Taft High School in New York City and were instrumental in leading their high school to the city-wide championship.

Claiborne, now the second highest scoring leader on this years squad with an average of 14.1 points per game, was a high school prep All-American choice following his senior year at Taft where he was also named his team's most valuable player. Eldridge was also named to the All-New York and Prep All-America teams in his senior year.

"We had a wide open offense with everybody wide on the court, said Eldridge. No one clogged up the middle. It was easier to drive, and easier to make it happen," Eldridge said of his high school squad.

Claiborne said, although his high school team was not an especially big team, it liked to run and freelance.

Both Eldridge and Claiborne, admit that the UMass offense was a big adjustment for both of them.

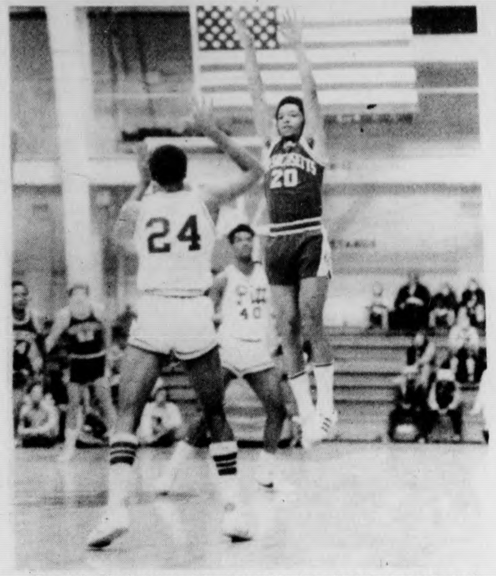
"Up here it's a pattern offense, a set-up type of thing where patience and discipline are the key. It's a type of strategy where you have to be here one minute and over there the next," said Eldridge.

Now Claiborne said the offense in his high school revolved around him while he feels his role here is to assist Eldridge in setting up the plays and passing until someone has the best percentage shot.

"When I first came to UMass," said the junior accounting major, "It was a big adjustment." Coach Leaman's type of offense is slowed down and patented. My role is to set up. If I have the shot, I'll take it, if not it's mostly set up and assist," he said.

Both of them came to UMass in 1974 after being heavily recruited, and started in the backcourt by the end of freshman year. Claiborne averaged 2.8 points per game in 219 minutes of playing time. Eldridge, meanwhile played 644 minutes averaged 8.8 a game.

In 1975-76 season, Claiborne was a starter in the backcourt and developed so steadily he was named the team's most improved player. He also logged the most playing guard time of any guard on the team.



Derick Claiborne, Number 20, has been a model of consistency for the Minutemen over the past three seasons. His defensive skills and consistent shooting are the mainstay of his game. (Staff photo by Jay Saret)

Alex Eldridge, races up the court displaying the skill which makes him stand out on the court, dribbling. In three years here at UMass Eldridge has delighted many a fan with hidden basketball talent. (Staff photo by Jay Saret)

In 871 minutes, Claiborne averaged 11, while Eldridge, a business major, made Coaches All-New England 3rd team selection, and averaged 10.5 in 747 minutes.

This year, Eldridge has dipped a little bit. He has played in just 22 games, is averaging 9.9 and shooting 47.5 per cent. His highest scoring nights were against Holy Cross and Boston University where he scored 18 points in each game. Assists wise-his highest total was 11 against Maine.

Claiborne has played in all 26 Minutemen games for a total of 858 minutes. He has hit for over 20 points against New Hampshire, and Rutgers and his highest point (28) was against Duquesne.

"The key to my game," said Eldridge," is Derick. He's a consistant two-way player who plays offense, defense, rebounds, steals the ball, and is definitely a team player," Eldridge said.

Many times, I feel that my coming to UMass has overshadowed the publicity of Derick. He deserves more recognition," Eldridge said.

Eldridge, known for his outstanding dribbling ability said, that Claiborne is so good he sometimes draws two defensive men.

"In the previous Rutgers game, Ed Jordan and Hollis Copeland double covered Derick, I think it was a tribute to his ability. I know when he is in there he takes the pressure off me."

Leaman feels the high number of zone defenses thrown at the UMass offense this year is a credit to the backcourt duo of Eldridge and Claiborne.

"Very few teams guard us man-to-man in the backcourt and it's just a credit to both of them. Sometimes both Alex and Derick are overmatched on defense but they make it up with quickness and their communication. They take gambles on defense that other backcourts don't do and at times, that's what you need is that good aggressive defense," he said.

Both Claiborne and Eldridge feel that the new ECBL is both an asset and a disadvantage.

"When you play four or five days in a row, the tendency is to let up. But we've learned in this league you can't ever let up," said Claiborne. "Especially against Rutgers, you can never let up."

Minutemen meet Rutgers in ECBL opening round

By RON ARENA
Collegian Staff

The fate of the 1977 edition of the UMass basketball team will be put on the line tonight as the Minutemen meet powerful Rutgers University in the opening round of the long-awaited Eastern Collegiate Basketball League tournament at the Spectrum in Philadelphia.

The UMass-Rutgers clash, scheduled for 9:00 p.m., will be the last of four games to be played on the Spectrum court today as all eight ECBL teams will compete. The Penn State—Duquesne game will start play off at one o'clock, followed by West Virginia-Pittsburgh at 3:00, George Washington vs. Villanova at 7:00, and finally the UMass-Rutgers tilt.

Semi-final action begins Friday night for those fortunate enough to survive today, and the championship and consolation round take place Saturday night.

But the Minutemen will focus their attention on tonight's game before worrying about any weekend action.

"There's no use even thinking about Friday night if we don't do anything with Rutgers," echoed UMass coach Jack Leaman.

UMass showed it has the punch to knock off the 18-8 Scarlet Knights when the Minutemen dealt the Scarlet Knights their only ECBL loss of the season, 82-81, on a Mike Pyatt buzzer shot three weeks ago.

Since then Rutgers has performed admirably, as it boasts a 19-point upset win over Cincinnati in its victory column. Meanwhile, the Minutemen followed that big win over Rutgers with a pair of losses to New Hampshire and George Washington, and two uninspiring wins over Rhode Island and Northeastern.

Add the revenge factor to Rutgers side, and UMass clearly finds itself faced with a stiff test.

"Any advantage we had as the underdog last time we played them is now gone," Leaman said. "They won't take us lightly this time."

Rutgers has been receiving strong efforts from 6-9 sophomore center James Bailey throughout the last half of the season. Bailey, actively recruited by the Minutemen during his high school days in Boston, canned 24 points against UMass, and later was named ECBL Player-of-the-Week after a 29-point effort against Cincinnati.

Guard Ed Jordan, the Scarlet Knight's leading scorer at nearly 20 p.p.g. and Mark Conlin team in the backcourt, while 6-7 Abdel Anderson and 6-6 Hollis Copeland join Bailey underneath.

UMass will be attempting to end a post-season jinx that has haunted the Lea-men in past years. Two years ago the Minutemen lost in the opening round of the National Invitational Tournament in New York to a weak Manhattan team. Last year, in a heartbreaking finish to a superb season, UMass fell to UConn and Joey Whelton as the Huskie guard sank a 20 footer with three seconds left for a one-point UConn win in the ECAC tourney.

This year? Well, UMass proved it can beat any of the ECBL teams, but whether the Minutemen can string together three straight strong games remains the question.

"We proved we're as good as any of these teams," captain Mark Donoghue said. "But this team hasn't put strong games back-to-back all year, and it'll really take a team effort to play three good games in a row."

As Leaman said, "What this team does one game has no bearing on what it'll do the next."

One of the biggest assets of UMass joining the ECBL this year was the fact that the winner of this tournament gains an automatic bid to the NCAA provided it wins 60 per cent of its games. UMass has fulfilled the latter requirement, but to reach the goal stated back in November — to win the ECBL tournament — will soon be decided.

There will be no "snub" to speak of this year, folks. The fate of UMass will not depend on the beliefs of any selection committee. In the end it'll come down to UMass's own ability to play in the big game, save for a little input from one team from New Jersey, and some men dressed in zebra uniforms.

Jack Leaman leads his troops into the Spectrum in Philadelphia with a 17-9 record. (Staff photo by Jay Saret)

Now that it counts, can UMass turn it on?

By BOB HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

Can a team which has shown obvious disinterest in recent games against mediocre teams, suddenly turn it on again and come up with a great performance when the biggest game of the season comes along?

That is one of the many questions that will be answered tonight at the Spectrum in Philadelphia when the UMass basketball team takes the court against Rutgers in the opening round of the Eastern Collegiate Basketball League Tournament.

The answer to that first question is simple — who knows? Against relatively weak New Hampshire and Northeastern squads, the Minutemen did not hustle, didn't play well, and didn't resemble any kind of championship team. Yet at other times, particularly against Connecticut and Rutgers, UMass has shown it can be a tough, hustling, intelligent, winning squad.

Thus, we have seen that when it is a big game, one that the team cares about, UMass has played well. Of course, they'll be up for tonight's game, and obviously it's one that they care about. So it's very possible that they can crank out another good performance.

Analysis

Question number two is quite a bit tougher. Can UMass adjust to the "Southern" style of play, one that puts the Minutemen at somewhat of a disadvantage? The Minutemen have learned, painfully, that the referees outside New England allow a much more physical style of play, particularly under the boards. Other teams in the league crash the boards much harder than UMass, a style the Minutemen could not get away with in New England. Therefore, UMass will need some very tough rebounding, particularly from Mark Donoghue and Mike Pyatt, to battle evenly with anyone.

A related question is the Minutemen's lack of depth. Coach Jack Leaman has consistently been forced to use only a couple of substitutes, and not always with pleasing results. A very physical game would simply hurt the Minutemen that much more in the late stages.

And regardless of how well the Minutemen play, what about the other seven teams in the ECBL? Inconsistency has marked the performances of every team in the league during the regular season. For instance, both Rutgers and Pittsburgh have beaten Cincinnati (previously 11th-ranked in the nation), yet both have lost to UMass. Duquesne dumped Detroit, another Top-20 member, yet lost to UMass also. Villanova beat Notre Dame, but lost to Philadelphia textile; George Washington beat Maryland yet lost to American University; UMass beat Rutgers but lost to New Hampshire; West Virginia beat Notre Dame but lost to Penn State.

In other words, there can be no certainty in predictions. Rutgers and Villanova are the early favorites, with Rutgers the pick of many. But it wouldn't be hard for any team to get hot and sweep right through to the NCAA tournament.

Trustees disregard MSP

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

A University Board of Trustee's vote yesterday could further complicate the chances of faculty and staff receiving salary increases promised by the trustees in February.

The trustees decided to appeal the composition of the faculty union bargaining unit, which includes several positions UMass President Robert C. Wood said would make the group "unwieldy" for both faculty and administration.

The composition of the unit, decided by the Massachusetts State Labor Relations Commission after hearings with faculty and administrators last fall, includes department chairpersons, part-time faculty who have been teaching for three consecutive semesters, visiting faculty and faculty who do not receive their salaries from state monies, but from federal grants.

The Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP), the union representing faculty at Amherst and its associated group at Boston, the Faculty Staff Union, advocated the inclusion of these positions in the unit, and the commission ruled in favor of the unions.

In a telephone interview last night, Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said he is not sure if the salary adjustments can be given to personnel included in the faculty bargaining unit if and when the increases are approved by the state legislature.

The trustee's vote authorized Wood to take necessary legal action in an attempt to redefine the bargaining unit, Bromery said. The University can contest the commission's ruling in court or fail to recognize the union, thereby allowing the union to take the University to court on unfair labor practice charges, he said.

MSP President Larry S. Roberts yesterday said his organization was ready to take the University to court next week if they continue to ignore the existence of the group.

"I'm doubtful they have any hope of winning," Roberts said, "I'm dismayed the Board of Trustees has taken this action."

Bromery said the University feels the composition of the unit is too complex to adequately represent all faculty interests. The unit needs to be trimmed to include only faculty who have a continuing commitment to the University and are not part of management.

Because of the trustee appeal, Bromery said, there is a question about what to do about salary adjustments while the university and faculty union are in court.

President Wood said the trustees want to give the faculty some type of salary increase, but in order to give them any adjustment, the University would have to recognize the union, which they cannot do until the appeal is complete.

Bromery said there is a "good chance" personnel, other than those in the faculty union and other campus unions, will receive their salary adjustment as soon as the legislature authorizes it.

The other unions on campus have just completed negotiations for salary adjustments and bonuses, he said, which have been approved by the trustees.

The governor, however, has not released funds to provide for the salary increases negotiated in the contracts, although he has indicated he has the money, Bromery said. The governor has 60 days to approve the fund transfer; after that the contracts cannot be fulfilled and must be negotiated, he said.

At the board's meeting, Chairperson Joseph P. Healy said the action was "not done with any intention of foot-dragging with respect to the union involved."

MSP President Roberts said, "In spite of what Chairperson Healy said, the faculty will view it that way."

Roberts said the commission had specific reasons for including the personnel they chose for the unit.

"Faculty who have been teaching for three years clearly have a continuing commitment to the University," he said.

The trustees discussed their course of action in a closed session in the Chancellor's board room in Whitmore administration building, and then adjourned to Memorial Hall for the public session.

In other action related to collective bargaining, the trustees approved a collective bargaining agreement with the International Brotherhood of Police Officers Local 432,Unit A.

In the vote, the trustees specified that no wage increases should take effect until the governor had transferred sufficient funds to University accounts to cover the increase.

Bromery is UMass Veep

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

UMass President Robert C. Wood yesterday announced the appointment of Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery to the position of acting Executive Vice-President in charge of formulating and implementing policies concerning collective bargaining with the faculty union.

Bromery will fill the position left by Senior Vice-President Jay Janis, who resigned his post to assume duties as Undersecretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Bromery will continue his duties as chancellor for the Amherst campus, and said last night he expects to divide his time between Amherst and the president's Boston office.

President Wood announced the appointment after the conclusion of the Board of Trustees meeting yesterday. Bromery will assume his new duties immediately, and the trustees will make any organizational changes by a formal vote at their next monthly meeting.

Bromery's duties will include supervision of the University's common services such as data processing, management systems and related operations, in addition to his position as a formulator of policy for the University on faculty collective bargaining.

In a telephone interview last night, Bromery said his position would be different than that of Janis.

Bromery said he would have the authority to implement policy without first going to the president.

He said he agreed to work at the position until Dec. 31, 1977, at which time a review would be conducted by himself and the trustees to decide if the position is a "workable one."

Bromery said his vice-chancellors would have to assume greater responsibilities, but "not a lot of change" will result at the Amherst campus.

Once he appoints a vice-chancellor for administration and finance, Bromery said, a large part of his daily workload will be relieved.

Bromery said he did not have any experience in collective bargaining before he came to the University.

Bromery said he feels good legal advice is more important than his experience in collective bargaining.

Bromery said his staff would include a professional negotiator, at least one staff person, one or two secretaries, and either a consultant lawyer or a full time legal staffer.

"At minimum" Bromery said, he hopes to have a staff of eight or nine people.

"I'm hoping we can keep the number down," he said, due to the University's budget he cannot afford a large staff.

Worcester medical voted $6M hike

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

The UMass trustees have voted to add $6 million to the Worcester medical school and teaching hospital 1978 budget request in an effort to generate revenue for the hospital by increasing the number of patients who can be treated.

The trustees deliberated in a meeting at Memorial Hall yesterday for close to two hours before agreeing to the increase. The original budget of $12 million allowed for the operation of 85 beds.

According to a report by the chairperson of the trustee budget and finance committee, the revised budget would allow for 175 beds to be open by July 1, 1978.

The new budget request is twice as much as Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' request of $9.5 million.

Budget and Finance Chairperson Bruce R. Carlson said the increase is necessary to generate revenue to offset the large deficit the hospital is currently running.

The board also approved an additional request by the medical school for $794,000 to offset a deficit for the current fiscal year.

The two requests will be sent to the state legislature for consideration there.

State Educational Secretary Paul Parks voted against both proposals. He said the Worcester budgets should be separated from the budgets of the Boston and Amherst campuses of UMass.

Since the governor is "level-funding" the University's budget, Carlson said that if the hospital's deficit is to be reduced, monies must be taken from other University accounts.

One major problem, Carlson said, is "the major cause of the deficit is the success of our programs."

"One indicator of that success is that we are caring for a higher proportion of highly complex, acutely ill patients than had been anticipated during this first year of operation. Such patients cost more money to diagnose and treat, both in terms of personnel and supplies," he said.

Carlson said the occupancy rate of the beds open is running 90 per cent instead of the 80 per cent originally projected.

Prof. Susan Smith, a faculty representative from Worcester, said given the current situation of the hospital, "it is extremely difficult, if not impossible, to attract faculty" to the facility.

Worcester Chancellor Roger J. Bulger said he could not predict the facility would need such a large request until a mid-year review was conducted.

"Any other administration would love to have our problem" of turning away patients, Bulger said. The rates commission, which approved the hospital's rates last year, thought the figures were correct, he said.

UMass President Robert C. Wood said, "It's quite clear the location in Worcester and the development of practitioners west of Rte. 128, has provided the impetus of filling the hospital."

Faculty representative Smith said that because of the shortage of beds, "students have little opportunity to interact with the clinical faculty."

For 1977, the hospital is expected to accumulate a $5 million cash deficit.

Consumers better than AG—PIRG

By PAT BEINAR
Collegian Staff

Of two major Massachusetts consumer complaint programs a recent UMassPIRG study indicates that the regional Boston Consumer's Council (BCC) is much more effective than the Department of the Attorney General (AG) in handling consumer complaints.

According to Peter Rider, MassPIRG staff attorney on campus, the study showed using trained mediators to accept consumer complaints over the phone by BCC is 30 per cent more effective than AG, which requires written submission of consumer complaints before any action is taken.

The BCC's "direct response phone intake" system begins the mediation process with consumers after their first call to BCC, and immediate contact with the business correspondent. More time-consuming is the AG process, where consumers must fill out a complaint form before a mediator ever becomes involved, he said.

Staffing of BCC relies on 18 professional investigators to mediate complaints. In contrast, the AG's volunteer mediators, college and law students, are supervised by one attorney and an assistant. Only four paid staff members must support 90 volunteers in the AG's complaint program.

The BCC mediates complaints of only Boston residents, he added. The jurisdiction of AG, which includes 70 per cent of Massachusetts residents, has a four-week backload of complaints adding to consumer frustration.

MassPIRG revealed that 75 per cent of the consumer complaints have been solved by regional complaint programs, such as BCC. Although AG's volunteer staff costs little, regional programs are the only way to mediate consumer complaints effectively.

MassPIRG emphasizes, from their study, the need for regional complaint programs similar to BCC, because response is immediate. They recommend that AG adopt BCC's immediate response system and that BCC experiment with the use of volunteer mediators to service more consumers without costing the city more money.

A local, de-centralized approach is also suggested to resolve consumer complaints effectively.

Currently, MassPIRG is conducting a study to document the need for expanded facilities in the Northampton-Amherst area.

Students interested in participating in a consumer complaint phone survey should attend a MassPIRG meeting this Thursday night.

Reps nix budget

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

Seven representatives from the faculty Higher Education Coalition, representing 6,000 professional staff statewide, yesterday said the governor's "level-funding" budget proposals mean the "dismantling" of higher education in Massachusetts.

Under a "level-funding" budget, public colleges and universities will receive the same amount of money they received last year from the state.

At a morning press conference in the Campus Center, coalition Chief Coordinator Joseph J. Previte, from North Adams State College, said the governor's proposals do not take into account inflation or increasing costs to higher education, such as union contracts, and actually represents a "strangulation" budget for the schools.

According to the coalition, the governor's request could "cost 6,000 to 15,000 students their education in affordable colleges and universities."

Previte said that faculty, who have received no salary increases in three years, have lost 30 per cent of their spending power.

Previte said only seven per cent of the state's budget is allocated for higher education in the Commonwealth. The state should "seriously rethink" its priorities, he said.

Although the board has yet to develop a position on the reorganization of higher education in the state, Previte said many of the group's leaders had worked on a series of reorganization proposals last year which were sent to state Senate President Kevin B. Harrington and Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

Larry S. Roberts, president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, which represents Amherst faculty in collective bargaining, said the problem does not lie with redundancy in programs but the accessibility.

For example, the state will have to decide how many nursing programs they need, he said.

Previte said the coalition's goal is to act in concert to make students, their parents and taxpayers aware of the potential difficulties with Dukakis' budget proposals.

Dukakis, Wood battle strands UM employes

By MIKE SIMONS
Collegian Staff

"We are being used as a pawn between the governor's office and the president's," Bernard K. Turner, president of the UMass Employes Association (UMEA), said yesterday to more than 40 University employes.

A clash between UMass President Robert C. Wood's office and Governor Michael S. Dukakis' office is being cited as the reason behind a delay in contracted pay increases for 1300 University employees.

Turner said if the issue is not resolved by the UMEA's next meeting he will move for specific action by the membership.

"The contract was signed here by the trustees. It then went to Boston to be signed by the governor, who signed it, and sent it to Wood's office where it seemed to get lost for three days," he said.

Turner told the employes how he followed their contract from Wood's office to a meeting with John L. DeNyse, university director of personnel and financial services.

"DeNyse agreed to put the contract into operation without funding, but the word from Boston was that the contract should have been funded. I called the governor's office, who said that the signing is sufficient," Turner said.

Turner requested all employes to write or call their legislators to let them know UMEA members are willing to fight for their pay increases. If that doesn't work, UMEA's executive board will go to the state house and demonstrate on the steps, he said.

With contract negotiations coming in April for fiscal year 1978, Turner warned the membership, "If the institution won't pay you now, do you think they are going to give you more next year?"

"I can't call a strike because under the contract it is illegal. For every day off the payroll employes would lose 1 ¼ days sick pay and I would be subject to arrest for calling an illegal strike. If there's to be a strike decision made it's to be made by you," he said.

The UMEA has not had pay increases for four years.

SGA organizing to fight Dukakis

By BRAD GOVERMAN
Collegian Staff

Gears continue to turn in the students' fight against Governor Dukakis' level-funding proposal as witnessed by legislation passed in last night's Undergraduate Student Senate meeting.

The senate voted unanimously for a proposal asking for a commitment from the student senate to use the resources and agencies of SGA to be a part of a grassroots communication network designed to increase student power in their demands of adequate educational funding, fair tuition and support of the interests of the student body. Eric Anderson, a concerned student submitted the proposal to the senate.

In the presentation of his proposal Anderson said, "We need a mechanism so we can reach out at the grassroots level to show students what will result from level funding. It is absolutely necessary to establish a grassroots communication network."

The Student Organizing Project (SOP) is presently working to coordinate groups such as the Student Center for Educational Research (SCER) and the Legal Services Office (LSO) to put the network into effect.

A similar motion which established an Advocacy Services Committee was also passed. Senator Adam Auster, author of the proposal, explained the committee would coordinate the use of SOP, SCER, LSO and other agencies to increase student power on campus. Four senators were elected to the committee.

The senate voted to accept the wording of the binding Student Activities Tax Fee (SATF) referendum which will appear on the Student Government Association (SGA) presidential election ballot March 15-16. The polls will be open from 10:00 a.m to 8:00 p.m.

The wording of the referendum states that "A 'yes' vote is a vote in favor of the student senate's decision to raise the SATF by seven dollars per year ... A 'no' vote is a vote against the senate's decision and would keep the fee at $57 as set by the senate in the fall of 1976."

Much debate centered around the distribution of a fact sheet on the pros and cons of the SATF issue. Senator Auster pointed out the objective of the fact sheet should be to present students with a concise presentation of both sides of debate. A motion was passed to instruct Governmental Affairs Committee to get a report from the treasurer along with joint reports from relevant committees.

An update report was given by Senator Dave Kantor on the status of the Spring Concert. Kantor informed the senate that a definite commitment had not been received from any bands because all agents contacted were holding out for more money.

Kantor mentioned the concert is planning on five groups to appear with three or four of these being "semi-headliners." Hundreds of groups have been contacted ranging from the Grateful Dead to Joan Baez. A definite announcement on which groups will be appearing is expected before spring vacation.

Stockbridge sen. votes for petition

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Collegian Staff

The Stockbridge Student Senate voted unanimously to draft a letter supporting the petition of the Stockbridge Floriculture major calling for a protest against the cutting of any of the seven unfilled positions in the Plant and Soil Science Department at last night's meeting.

Letters will be sent to Dean Ross S. Whaley, dean of the College of Food and Natural Resources, Dean J.W. Denison, dean of the Stockbridge School of Agriculture, the UMass Board of Trustees, and other appropriate UMass officials.

Presently, many classes, especially labs, are overcrowded and some courses cancelled due to a lack of instructors. Failing to fill any of these positions would radically reduce the quality of education in the school, especially in the Plant and Soil Dept.

Maurene Golden, a floriculture major in the Stockbridge School, stated, quoting from the petition, "If the problem be a matter of the budget, we support the concept of hiring two qualified persons with masters degrees in lieu of one person with a doctorate. We feel immediate action on the part of the administration to fill vacant positions, especially in floriculture, is necessary. It is important that students write to their state senators expressing the severity of the problem. Everyone must state their opinions if we are to get anything done."

Other business discussed at the meeting included allocating $150 to cover transportation costs for a bus tour through the Berkshires planned to occur before freshman placement begins March 19. Originally the money was appropriated for a ski trip to Berkshire East last Thursday, but was cancelled due to lack of snow.

Final plans were announced for a pancake breakfast sponsored by the senior class as a fund raising project for graduation.

SGA co-presidential candidates John Foley and Herb Tyson, and Jon Hite and Pinky Batiste spoke and answered questions pertaining to their candidacy for the position of SGA president.

Study research published

By ANN MURPHY
Collegian Staff

The Latin American Studies Program new "Occasional Papers Series" will focus on Latin American development.

The series will publish the results of stimulating research on issues and processes of Latin American development. The papers are oriented toward students and faculty in Latin American studies throughout the five colleges and in universities throughout the state.

According to Professor Howard J. Wiarda, chairman of the Latin America Studies program at UMass, "The aim of the series is to make research papers accessible to students in the classroom, thereby emphasizing the essential links between research and teaching.

"The aim is not just to serve the university community but serve as a link to community colleges, Hispanic and Portuguese communities and others interested in Latin American affairs," he added.

The first paper in the series is "The Patrimonial State and Patron-Client Relations in Iberia and Latin America: Sources of 'The System' in the Fifteenth Century Writings of the Infante D. Pedro of Portugal" by Sidney M. Greenfield.

"The Llanos in Colombian History: Some Implications of a Static Frontier" by Jane M. Loy is the second paper.

Greenfield, a professor of anthropology and sociology at the University of Wisconsin, shows the writings of a fifteenth century prince to be a prototype of the modern "corporate, organicist, patrimonial state."

Greenfield said the prince's suggestions on distributive justice and the reduction of poverty are at the base of present day Iberian and Latin American society and politics.

Loy is a history professor at UMass. In her paper she shows the Llanos produced few of the conditions and characteristics of the western frontier of North America.

The papers are available in Wiarda's office 424 Thompson.

"Through the paper series we are promoting interchange within other branches of the University. These are top notch papers attracting national attention," Wiarda said.

Amongst all those memories, this one will ring a bell

By CINDY YOUNG
Collegian Staff

An empty wine bottle covered by the drippings of a dozen candles, a handful of faded ticket stubs, a beer mug whose decal is just about worn away, and a few snapshots of the old dorm gang. Unless you are an avid collector, this is about all you can show to represent your collegiate years.

Many of the items once occupying the most important places on your desk or bulletin board have long since been discarded. One traditional momento gaining popularity this year is the buying of a college ring.

According to the Josten's class ring representative who comes to campus three times a year, sales are definitely up this winter. His entire collection of rings are available all year, but special deals are offered only three weeks during the year.

A sunburst stone, white-gold band, the addition of a crest, or the engraving of your name, all originally an extra $10 charge are included in the base price. This deal, only available until this Friday, seems to be the major drawing device for students buying their rings this week.

High school rings can be turned in for additional credit. This idea seems to appeal to many students. A high school ring, once a prized possession is now usually relegated to the bottom of a jewelry box or desk draw. Forgotten are the high school ring traditions.

Have you heard that your ring should be turned around preceeding graduation, just in the same manner as flipping the tassle on your cap?

Couples showed their "undying" loyalty to each other by the exchange of rings; an outward sign of their attachment. It was made noticeable due to the differences in the two ring sizes; the girl having to wear hers on a chain around her neck, or having to wrap the back of the ring with yarn, and the male having to wear hers on his "pinkie".

The idea of a college ring seems to take on a bit more respect. Ring-swapping has vanished from campus, along with fraternity pinnings. A college ring once placed on a finger is not as easily traded off.

Perhaps all the exchanging of high school rings, could be one major reason why high school rings are continually lost. In questioning students, the majority have either lost or given them away. Most students stop wearing their's soon after graduation, while a college ring is worn after leaving college.

A college ring, along with being a traditional item, also serves as an outward symbol of a college and a college education. Marc Porter, a Hamlin resident majoring in electrical engineering, felt purchasing a college ring would be beneficial to him in his field as a type of outward sign of his education at the University of Massachusetts.

This may be the reason that many students buying rings are students majoring in professional areas. Some students seem less interested in this aspect of their ring, viewing it more as a piece of jewelry, it is the only item they will continually wear.

A collegiate ring is quite an investment with girl's rings ranging from $62-78, and men's ranging from $103-117. Many students feel that this price is much too high.

Bracelets, rings, whatever...

By DUKE SIMONEAU
Collegian Staff

Most UMies working their way through college are work-study undergraduates employed by one of the many departments on campus.

Gary Jackson, although on campus, fits none of the above specifications.

Jackson, a 26 year old Economics PhD candidate, is one of the talented handful of self-employed student craftspersons hawking their wares on the Campus Center Concourse.

"G.L. Jackson, silver and goldsmith, Sunderland, Massachusetts" reads the printed Gothic card on one of his displays. Every Friday from 9:00 to 4:30, he and his two assistants peddle and exhibit his jewelry and spend considerable amounts of time talking gemstones and techniques with passersby.

"That's what makes it all worthwhile, the people," beams Pat Beehan, a senior History major apprenticed to Jackson. She and Ruth Chase help the jeweler solicit business on the concourse. They are "paid" like early American apprentices.

In return for their help, Gary teaches them how to work the expensive gold, sterling silver and assorted gemstones into miniature pieces of art.

"Most of our work is custom made jewelry," said Jackson. "People look at the stones we have in stock, then ask if I can put them into earrings, rings, bracelets or whatever. I do make a lot of things up in advance (he gestured over his rack of rings) but a lot of people like shopping over the unset stones and having them custom made."

Gary imports stones from continents. If he can't import them directly himself, he deals with various importers who literally buy the raw gems by the ton. He does most of his own cutting. William Gardner, a UMass Geology graduate and former Craftshop instructor, taught Jackson the art and continues to help him.

"The most difficult stone to cut is probably an opal," said Jackson. "But he (Gardner) can cut them all day long without having one crack or split." Opals are one of the few precious stones on Jackson's stand. Most are varieties of onyx, jade, tiger eye, and assorted other natural and man-mad gems.

Gary has traveled as far as Maryland in the summer to take part in shows and crafts fairs. "I'd hate to do it for a living, but some people become gypsies, holding licenses in a dozen states."

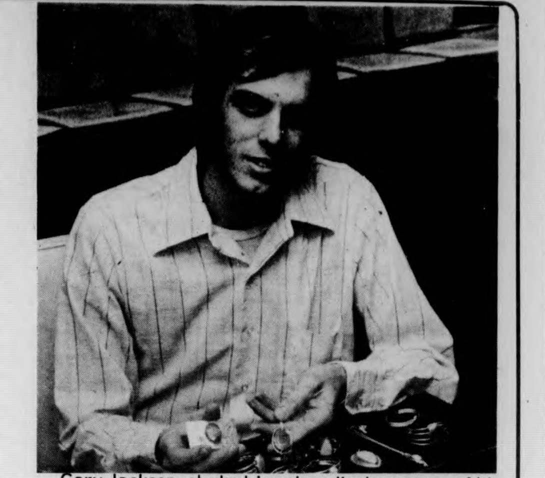
He also wholesales his jewelry occassionally to small shopkeepers. "That's what I'd like to do when I graduate; teach somewhere and make jewelry on the side."

Craftsmanship doesn't really support Jackson, though.

"Most of the profits get ploughed back into the business. Tools, good tools, are horribly expensive. Also, silver and gold for settings keeps going up and I have to buy it in bulk," he said. His wife works in a local bank to help support the two of them.

There are several jewelry stands on the concourse, but the close-by competition doesn't bother Gary.

"Most everyone down here helps one another out. Like that girl (pointing) is watching the table next to her while the other person gets some lunch. We talk a lot about making things, and you learn a lot."



Gary Jackson, student jeweler, displays some of his wares. (Staff photo by John Silletto)

One innovation he picked up at a crafts fair is the design of his rings display. The white walnut steps hold rows of rings secured on long wires. The wires are kept out of sight by a fishing weights underneath. This lets the customer try on a ring and saves Jackson a lot of worry about having the stock walk away in a rush. Once you find a ring you like, Gary snips the umbilical. If a fit isn't exact, he can make minor adjustments on the spot.

Gov., unions at odds over revamping of bargaining law

BOSTON [UPI] — Union and Dukakis administration officials were at odds yesterday over proposals to alter Massachusetts' collective bargaining law for public employes.

Dozens of bills creating new collective bargaining units, disbanding others, removing supervisors from union coverage, strengthening penalties for strikers, and repealing the controversial law were the subject of a four-hour hearing of the Public Service Committee.

The committee already has before it a number of other measures dealing with collective bargaining, most of which seek to repeal the law. House Chairman Nicholas Buglione, (D-Methune) said a final determination on all bills probably won't be made for another two or three weeks.

State Employe Relations Director George Bennett asked the committee to kill bills creating bargaining units for the Metropolitan District Commission, Lottery Commision, attorneys, and officers in the state judicial system.

Bennett also asked for legislative approval of stringent, antistrike sanctions. Under the administration proposal, striking public employes would be docked two days pay for each day out of work. Unions also would be penalized.

He asked for approval for legilsation filed by his boss, Administration Secretary John R. Buckley, excluding supervisory personnel from the 11 bargaining units representing about 55,000 state employes now covered by union contracts. He said the administration was not interested in creating separate bargaining units for supervisors.

Another administration proposal would allow the state to go to court at the first hint of a strike and would make it easier to serve back-to-work court orders on union officials.

Administration officials complained bitterly last year because the State Labor Relations Commission waited until state employes struck their jobs before seeking court injunctions. The strike lasted three days and severely disrupted some state services.

'Sunset' law proposed for second time

BOSTON [UPI] — Legislation mandating the periodic review of Massachusetts agencies to see if they should be continued or abolished was brought before a legislative committee yesterday for the second year in a row.

The so-called "Sunset" law, implemented in four other states in recent years, requires a comprehensive review of the programs of state agencies, commissions, boards, divisions and departments.

House Minority Leader Francis Hatch, R-Beverly, who co-sponsored last year's bill, told the State Administration Committee his measure requires the existing Post Audit and Oversight Committee to evaluate 63 agencies every five years, or 12 to 13 departments annually.

The committee would then recommend to the legislature the continuation or abolishment of each department.

Under a "sunset" bill filed by Sen. Alan Sisitsky, D-Springfield, departments would be reviewed instead by the legislative committee which normally handles its legislation.

He said the committee would see if the purpose of the agency still existed, if the agency was accomplishing its established purpose, if the agency was making proper use of its facilities and if there was conflict of interest with other agencies.

Hatch said the committee would be making a program review, not an economic evaluation which is somewhat accomplished by the current legislative line item budget review each year.

Rep. Charles Buffone, D-Worcester, cochairman of the State Administration Committee, said in Colorado, which imposed a "Sunset" law last year, the committee charged with the review said it needs $3 million a year to accomplish its goal.

Hatch said the committee would hopefully eliminate waste, but admitted it probably would "not save mountains of money" initially.

News in Brief

Fishermen protest porpoise limit

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — The American tuna boat fleet headed back to port yesterday with only partial catches and flags at half-mast to protest strict U.S. regulations to save porpoises they say put them at a disadvantage against foreign fishermen.

The U.S. fishermen claim foreign boats don't have to obey restrictions imposed by the federal government to preserve porpoises, which get caught in great numbers in yellowfin tuna nets.

The boats began entering San Diego Harbor Tuesday afternoon, their flags at half-mast to protest a year-long series of court decisions and administrative rules which have delayed issuance of 1977 fishing permits. They first filed applications last June.

Big dope dealer busted in NYC

NEW YORK (UPI) — Three persons, one of them described by officials as perhaps the biggest black narcotics dealer in Harlem, was arrested yesterday on charges of conspiring to possess and sell up to $30 million of heroin.

Manhattan District Attorney Robert Morgenthau said the alleged conspiracy, over a three-year period ending in December 1975, was one of the biggest in the city's history.

Among those arrested was Peter McDougald, 51, of Englewood, N.J., whom Morgenthau described as "one of the top black dealers, perhaps the biggest, in Harlem."

'Nam era veterans get top posts

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Vietnam war amputee Max Cleland and Vietnam war resister Sam Brown were sworn in to top administration posts Wednesday with President Carter's observation there could be "two more stark contrasts."

Cleland, 34, a former Georgia state senator, was given the oath as veterans administrator, and Brown, 33, the Colorado state treasurer, was sworn in as director of the federal volunteer agency ACTION.

Evan Dobelle, 31, former mayor of Pittsfield, Mass., was sworn in as chief of protocol.

FEA cuts domestic oil prices

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Federal Energy Administration, acknowledging it was taking a fairly drastic step to soak up excess oil industry profits, Wednesday rolled back the price for so-called "new" domestic crude oil by 45 cents a barrel.

Charges against nuke protestors dropped

NASHUA, N.H. [UPI] — City officials yesterday dropped charges against six Massachusetts residents accused of criminal trespass for distributing antinuclear petitions outside a state liquor store.

City corporation lawyer H. Philip Howorth and the Nashua Police Department released a joint, one-paragraph statement saying the charges were dropped against the group, all members of the "Clamshell Alliance." Howorth said the decision was reached after consulting with State Liquor Commissioner Joan Ratoff.

Notice

An organizational meeting of the Student Economic Department Committee will be held tonight at 9:00 in the Commuter Lounge. The primary focus of this meeting is to form research teams for specific student service proposals. Our ultimate goals are a) the formation of a job bank for students, especially those students who don't qualify for work-study positions, b) to help student groups provide services for the community while at the same time creating jobs for students, c) to find ways that RSO groups can raise funds so that they can become more independent of the SATF.

Living with diabetes

To the Editor:

Since last April several people on campus have been working towards the creation of a group for persons with diabetes. On Wed., Mar. 9 at 7:00 p.m., the first meeting of an ongoing diabetic learning and discussion group will be held. This meeting will deal with nutrition, and will in Clinic 1 at the University Health Services.

There are at least 500 diabetics and potential diabetics at UMass alone, who must deal with the problems of maintaining good health while living a college lifestyle. With these problems in mind, a series has been planned whereby professionals and other people who have had experiences with diabetes will come to speak on various aspects of living with diabetes, such as diet, alcohol and diabetes, exercise, contraception, and family planning. These will be informal meetings, during which people can ask questions, talk to each other about their own experiences, and hopefully give each other some support. People with diabetes, their friends and family, medical and nursing students, and anyone in the community who has a personal interest in diabetes is encouraged to attend. During the first meetings there will be a chance for everyone to exchange ideas and suggestions for future meetings.

Watch for notices in the Collegian. If there are further questions call Health Education, 549-2671, at the University Health Services.

Bureaucratic brigade?

To the Editor:

*I am disappointed that the Revolutionary Student Brigade has rejected my offer to attend a meeting of the Brigade (*Daily Collegian 3-1-77) and to discuss with them their concerns relating to check cashing and banking. They suggested instead that they would "send a representative to speak with Dean Field in the future."

The Brigade has apparently developed a version of its own hierarchical-bureaucratic structure which would substitute "representatives" and "reports" for direct discussion with all the members of the Brigade. It is a pallid and unsatisfactory substitute for live debate and I reject it.

The Brigade's suggestion that the "research be released" is less than timely. The reports and presentations have all been made public to the appropriate governance units and are, of course, easily available to any one.

Clarifying the student unionization issue

To the Editor:

Recently, several articles and letters have appeared in the Collegian which have been based upon misconceptions of the notion of a student union. Consequently, the concept of a union of students has been portrayed in a distorted manner. Particularly, these misrepresentations concern the general form which the union would take and the impact of such an organization upon student relationships with administration and faculty, along with fundamental misunderstandings as to the real nexus of the relationship between students and their higher-ups. Such is the case with Bob Melia's commentary of Feb. 28. Ostensibly, Mr. Melia presented John Van Tol's anti-union stand and the Collegian Board of Editors' pro-union stand and argued that both are wrong, in that they "both fail entirely to get at the root of the problem." Unfortunately, Mr. Melia got some mud in his eyes in an attempt to get to the root of the problem and moved to the wrong tree.

Firstly, Mr. Melia asserts that the advent of a student union will introduce "friction into what should be a relatively harmonious student-faculty relationship." He neglects the fact that antagonism already exists between the faculty and the students by virtue of their contrasting positions vis-a-vis the administration. By neglecting the above, Melia is completely blind to the potential embodied in the recent move by the faculty to unionize for exacerbating an already existing conflict.

Secondly, Mr. Melia's brilliant insight is that "the quid pro quo of a good university is money, and for the last several years this university simply hasn't been getting enough." We, the students, should band together with the faculty and "make it more intolerable for public officials to continue to emasculate the university." Such an illuminating insight into the political-economic nature of our current plight begs the question of unionization. The point is this: unionization offers a vehicle by which students can organize a concerted lobbying effort with the faculty to battle budget cuts. Unionization, while it does not offer-outright-the resolution of the fundamental conflict between faculty and students, it does contain within it the possibility for the transcendence of this conflict. At the same time, unionization confronts the political-economic reality in which we exist. Thus, a union would be a flexible political force, capable of alliance as well as antagonism. In fact, it could be the very thing which Bob Melia celebrates — an interest group. It would, however, both politically, and most importantly, legally, place those interests on equal footing with the administration. Student unionization should not be percieved as a panacea, but with all of its complexities and problems — some of which may not yet be realized — it is barking up the right tree.

Hopefully, this letter can be the beginning of a dialogue on student unionization which is based upon realities as opposed to distortions, appearances, and half-truths. Success depends upon a constant flow of new ideas and new energy.

Hanging out

By ARIANE SAINS
Collegian Staff

There is coffee in my room, and a hot plate for boiling water to make the coffee, but more often than not, I go down to 'Bites' and pay a quarter for the same coffee I could make myself in my room.

It's nice to have the extra quarter to fritter away, but there's more to it than that. A cup of coffee at Bites, or the Hatch, or any other coffee shop on campus is flavored with the lives of all the other people hanging-out: drinking coffee, munching french fries, playing pinball, studying, pouring their hearts out to their room mates over dishes or butter almond crunch.

The people themselves may change, but the comaraderie of hanging-out never will. It's been called different things at different times: "hanging around", "shooting the breeze", "rapping", but the essence of the thing remains constant.

Yet, even though the group as a whole changes, the types of people never really do.

There is the Studier, who, work-boot encased feet propped up on a table, blocks out all the surrounding noise. Ask the Studier how he or she can concentrate with all the conversation and music going on around him or her and he'll-she'll tell you, "I don't really hear it. Unless there's a song I really like. Then I take a little break."

The Hard-Core and Soft-Core Hangers Out help to make the noise the Studier blocks out. Hard-Core H.O's are Talkers and Meeters. They're there because they're bored, or out of homework, or because they're hoping to find one of their own to have a game of backgammon with.

The Soft-Core H.O's, or Breaktakers, come down for coffee or ice cream or french fries, and maybe, if they've got the time to spare from studying, they'll play a game with one of the Hard-Cores. But the Hard-Cores and Soft-Cores don't usually mix. Just when a Hard-Core is getting ready to settle down for an all-night backgammon session, the Soft-Core will decide that he-she can't spare any more time from studying and take off. A true Hard-Core's main purpose is social. He-she takes time out from hanging-out to study.

Hanging-out is an art form and to do it really well, you have to have a purpose, even if it doesn't seem as though you do. Hanging-out is a way to meet people, a way to observe people, a way to hear about and be a part of campus life. The crowd at Bites tonight and every night is more versatile and more compelling than the characters in any soap opera.

Life goes on against the coffee shop background. Dick, the supervisor and cook, who calls all the women "Honey" and is always cheerful and ready with a joke, spends his time telling outlandish stories to the customers and the employees. The "Live Entertainment" sets up on the platform, plugs in its amp and goes to work. When someone's performing, the jukebox is off, but some nights you can sit around and get mellow to the old show classics that you never really knew first-hand, but still feel as though you do.

Tonight, there's a guy with an acoustic guitar playing an old stand-by — "Coming into Los Angeles." A studier has her feet up in front of her. Hamburgers are frying on the grill, backgammon is going on in the corner. Things are constant, and it's a secure feeling. The people may change, the conversations may be about different subjects, the Live Entertainment may get replaced by Muzak, and the jukebox taken out, but the fine art of hanging-out will never disappear.

The real victims of sexism

To the Editor:

I feel that I must supplement Scott McKearney's thought-provoking commentary of Feb. 24 with a few thoughts of my own. It's all well and good that people (first the women and now some men) want to be liberated from rigid conformity to stereotypes, de-personalizing social mores, and unwarranted prejudices. However, it seems to me that, to some extent at least, the contemporary rhetoric of "liberation" has itself influenced some negative, unhealthy attitudes and behavior, leading to an enslavement of those who cannot liberate themselves.

Scott speaks of sexism as "destructive" and asserts that "sexism is killing us...". This is literally true, for the real victims of sexism in our day are those who suffer death for the convenience of the "liberated" life-styles of others (especially men) who refuse to accept parental responsibility for their sexual conduct. More than one million unborn children in our country each year are sacrificed to the modern god of "Liberation" (they and their mothers abandoned on the altar of secular despair in antiseptic temples), through bloody rituals presided over by priests who know how to cash in human lives to promote what is now a multi-million dollar industry.

No group today is more oppressed, more exploited, more discriminated against, more villified, and more de-humanized than the innocent unborn whose bodies have kept the wheels of the abortion mills grinding relentlessly, ever since the Supreme Court, in an arrogantly sexist manner on Jan. 22, 1973, declared open season on anyone who isn't "viable" or sufficiently capable of "meaningful existence" in our throw-away, materialistic culture. Yet the weak, defenseless unborn child, certainly one of Christ's "least ones", has precious few defenders among the strong and powerful in the world. It seems that "might makes right", and the little people don't count in the utopian scheme.

Until the modern "liberation" movements become truly universal in scope, embracing all human beings and selectively excluding none, they will suffer a fatal lack of credibility.

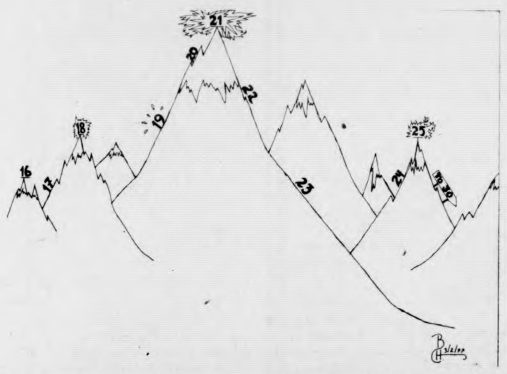
Magic

I might be wrong, but I thought I smelled Spring the other day. But March is deceptive that way; you know, "March winds..." and all of a sudden you start thinking about spring. March always had a certain amount of significance for me, mainly because I have two sisters whose birthdays are both this month. In fact one's birthday is today. Alice is twenty-one.

Twenty-one isn't as big a deal as it used to be. When I turned twenty-one the drinking age went down to eighteen. Figures. Twenty-one used to sound so old and respectable. That's pretty much gone. No more the oohs and aahs by the family and friends at the 21st birthday party. All it means now-a-days is that you're legal in all the states, not just your own.

What happened to the "good-ol-days" when twenty-one meant you finally made it? You could vote, you could drink and buy liquor, you could get married without your parents' permission. Everything happened at once. Magic.

The only magic thing about when I turned twenty-one was that it was on a Friday the thirteenth. I bought a bottle of wine and the guy didn't even ask for my I.D., I showed it to him anyway. He said, "that's nice."



I remember thinking when I was a kid that when I was magic twenty-one that my whole life would be so ordered and set that I wouldn't have to worry about a thing. I wonder if my sister, Alice thought that too, and how she feels about turning twenty-one. When we were kids, we could hardly wait to be adults. Now that we're adults we still act like kids. We never could watch the Three Stooges when we were little. Now that we're adults, we can watch them whenever we want. And believe me we do. Alice knows "B - Ay - Bay..." but I know "Brito" and we drive our mother nuts with it at the table on the few occasions when we are together.

I'm just as glad that the laws have changed to stagger the ages of the various consents. It takes some of the mystique out of becoming an adult. I've been here a while and so far I can't see that it's much different. There's just as many people around telling you what to do, only you have a little more experience at it by adulthood so you know how to get around things better.

The main wish that I have for Alice and anyone else that happens to be turning twenty-one is that just because everyone tells you that you're an adult, you don't have to act like one.

Comparing the real costs

By PAULA WEINER and DIANA FESSENDEN
Collegian Staff

Why should I pay seven more dollars to the Student Senate? What does it do for me? I already pay fifty-seven dollars every year.

This is what it does: it enables students to collectively protect their rights and it provides essential services to every UMass student. Some on-going programs are the Legal Services Office which offers free legal assistance to all students. Student Center for Educational Research which is the only student research organization of its kind in the nation, Student Organizing Project which is at the forefront of the student unionization movement, also the first of its kind and the Recognized Student Organizations Office which provides program support and handles all RSO accounts. In addition, the fee funds a number of media projects which allow for communication and artistic expression without interference from the Administration and also the student transit which is the largest free busing service in the country.

This is an impressive sample of what this fee funds; now here are the fiscal facts: if there is no seven dollar increase, we will be almost one quarter of a million dollars short of last year's budget. This is due to many reasons: 1) a decrease in returning SATF of $80,000; 2) a decreased enrollment of 1500 students for fiscal year 1978; 3) mandatory cost of living increases to all full time personnel amounting to $66,700; 4) over-runs caused by inflation of $34,000; 5) the financing of major events such as the Spring Concert and International Women's Week costing $10,000, and; 6) the Course Description and Teacher Evaluation Guide which costs $4,000.

This amounts to twenty-two per cent of the total budget. Therefore, without the increase, every student service will be drastically cut. Just to give you an idea of the realistic affects, here are a few examples: no night and weekend bus service, a charge for legal services, decreased program support to area governments and Third World and Women's groups, and less financing of the co-ops.

Now you know what the fee pays for, the fiscal realities and what you stand to lose. The decision is yours. Which costs you more: the seven dollars or the loss of services?

Who wants a student union?

The Student Organizing Project is more dead than we thought.

After last column's tirade against the SOP, we had anticipated a spate of hostile letters condemning our reactionary views. But so far, not even a whimper. C'mon, SOP, defend yourselves.

Actually we were somewhat astonished that initial reaction to that column was semi-favorable, and wondered whether UMass students had more reason than we had given them credit for. Fortunately more recent letters have restored our faith in basic ignorance.

Dan Huse, who should know better, ended his comments with the clarion call "SUPPORT STUDENT UNIONIZATION!" What does that MEAN?? Surely such a cry is no more than an empty catch phrase. Perhaps Mr. Huse believes that if it is chanted long enough, the Union will magically materialize?

Prof. Duston of the Economics Dept. writes "the only way students will be able to reform the educational system is to...confront state government directly with their particular educational goals...and the only way to do this is through unionization."

The concern for a student voice on certain issues is quite correct. We have no quarrel with that, or even necessarily with unionizing per se. Rather we ask Mssrs. Huse and Duston HOW they propose to get their union.

It ought to be clear by now that unionization is not a possible practical alternative. The pitiful attempts of the SOP are expensive proof. After years of effort and almost criminally large salary expenditures, there is not even an embryonic union on campus. Yet if there were widespread sentiment for a union among students, not even the incompetence of SOP staffers could prevent some measure of organization. But instead, there are only frequent reports that students are more concerned than ever with grades and good jobs after graduation.

It could be asked if there are ways to accomplish what the Union was supposed to get done. As far as student-legislature bargaining is concerned, Bob Melia correctly points out that the only way to influence the legislature is to pressure individual public officials (Feb. 28). An active lobbying campaign coupled with organized pressure on students' home district representatives would have great potential. However, again the lack of cohesiveness among students as a group makes organized pressure unlikely.

The more recent justification for organizing was protection from faculty actions not beneficial to students. Here we reiterate that much can be accomplished in the way of reasoning with faculty. Beyond that Adam Auster, one of SOP's more thoughtful operatives, last week suggested the formation of little "unions" within academic departments. While the term "unions" is misleading, the idea of students within a major developing a mechanism through which to articulate complaints, suggestion, or even praise, is a good one. Not only would exchanges of information be facilitated, but students within an academic department would be able to exert pressure of a more personal sort on the faculty of their major since a more direct mutual interest exists in maintaining good student-faculty relations within a particular discipline.

Another way of exerting pressure of varying intensity is through use of the media to air grievances. The demonstration of waste or incompetence in Whitmore, for example, can be easily exploited in the student media, or if sufficiently important in "real world" media. Again skillful use of such a technique requires a level of competence that students have yet to show.

In conjunction with media use, the SGA should certainly, as the Hite-Batiste presidential ticket urges, push for a student voice at the faculty-state bargaining table. At worst, students should have observer status at such talks. A little knowledge is a dangerous thing in many senses...

On a long-term basis, students' best hope of "power" is the creation of services that the Administration will come to depend on. The threat of curtailment of such services would then be a bargaining chip in student-administration relations. A prime example of such a service is the Senate Transit Service. Few would deny that the sudden stopping of the buses would cause many problems. Increase the number and importance of such services, and the notion of "student power" makes more sense.

Such scheme of course require money. Given this, and the professed concern for student power, we were astonished that there was so much fuss over the rise in SATF. Obviously, the more money the SGA controls, the more potential power it has. Alas, money will not buy student government competence.

So we wait for a student Messiah to release us from our bonds. Meanwhile, we ought to own up to certain mistakes that have been made. If only for the unusual extent and degree of SOP's budget and incompetence, SOP ought to be dissolved now. Were that abomination to be terminated, the Senate would have another $50-60,000 to spend on better things next year. Groups that will not be funded should take notice...

Finally, should the SOP wish to sue for libel, we're ready anytime.

(Given the large sums SOP has spent, particularly on salaries, we urge the SGA Attorney General's Office to investigate where all this money has been, and is being spent.)

Hey, should I be driving

"Should I be driving?" is the question students may want to ask themselves as they leave the Bluewall. Tonight they will be able to find out. The Alcohol Education Project is setting up a table in the Campus Center Concourse from 9 p.m. - 12 a.m. with breathalyzer machines which measure Blood Alcohol Concentration (BAC). The table is being set up so that students can compare their feelinns, the alcohol effects, with their actual blood alcohol levels. By associating their BAC's with their feelings, students may be able to recognize those situations when they are "too drunk to drive".

Anyone who is in the Campus Center tonight and has had a drink or two (or more) is welcome to breathe into the machine to measure their BAC. People from the Alcohol Project will be there to answer questions along with persons from campus police who will be there to run the equipment.

Hispanic Club holds a Pot-Luck Supper

The Hispanic Club is having a "Cena Hispanica" (Pot Luck Hispanic Supper!!!) on Sunday, March 6th, at 4 p.m. There will be a sign-up sheet for your name and dish (or small financial contribution) you would like to bring, on Sra. Soons' door, Herter 411, or call Jina Murray at 546-7164 or Susan Whisenant at 253-2735.

Since we are hoping to have an international group from the Iberian Peninsula and Latin America, we would appreciate your contributing either something to eat or a small financial contribution so that we can have a really good party!!

The "Cena Hispanica" will be held at Kappa Alpha Theta, 778 North Pleasant St. in Amherst, four houses north of the Graduate Research Center on the same side of the street. Everyone is welcome!

South African to speak tonight

There will be a forum tonight at 8:00 in Hasbrouck Auditorium, on "The Politics of Crisis and Control." Nana Seshibe, a South African, will speak on U.S. government and corporate involvement in South Africa, and will discuss how the black struggle there affects the black movement and government repression in the United States.

Ken Dolbeare, professor of political science at UMass, will discuss American business and government strategies to maintain U.S. power at home and abroad under the Carter administration.

This forum is being sponsored by the Socialist Education Committee of the Economics Graduate Student Organization.

Professor Brooks to speak in Herter

Professor Brooks, head of Historical Studies at Downing College, Cambridge, will speak on "The Enigma of Thomas Cramer" today at 4 p.m. in Herter 601. He is in this country as a Folger Fellow and as Visiting Professor at the University of Virginia. He is a specialist in Tudor history and the author of "Cramer's Doctrine of the Eucharist."

James Buckley regular commentator

Beginning today, former New York Senator James L. Buckley will become a regular commentator on "All Things Considered", the award-winning newsmagazine heard nightly on WFCR (88.5 FM).

"All Things Considered", co-hosted by Bob Edwards and Susan Stamberg, is broadcast each evening at 5:00. WFCR (88.5 FM) is a cooperative effort of Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke, and Smith colleges, and UMass.

Batiste and Hite speak on platform

Pinky Batiste and Jon Hite will be available at the Women's Center, 119B Baker, to present their platform and to meet with area residents on Thursday.

Card and Natsios at Student Union

State House Senators Andrew H. Card and Andrew S. Natsios will appear tonight at 4:00 p.m. in the Council Chambers on the second floor of the Student Union.

Senators Card and Natsios are co-authors of a bill before the legislature which, if passed, will have the affect of killing student lobbying power. All students are urged to attend and welcome to participate in discussion.

'My life and yours' subject of workshop

Nonviolence: "My life and yours" will be the subject of the last in a series of weekend workshops at Woolman Hill, Deerfield, Mass.

This workshop will be people focused, primarily concerned with each participant as an individual striving to live with dignity in a society that is anti-human and anti-life.

In this context nonviolence will be approached as a total life expression. The weekend starts with Friday night supper at 7 p.m. The agenda includes panel discussions and special interest groups on life style, land trusts, community grass roots organizing, nonpayment of war taxes and responses to arrest, police and courts. There will be films, slides and role play on direct action.

Bring sleeping bags, towels and musical instruments for a weekend of learning, sharing and home cooking from Friday supper to Sunday lunch at Woolman Hill's 100-acre farm.

For registration and information contact: Winter Workshops, Woolman Hill, Deerfield, Mass. 01342, 773-9065.

'Irish Fortnight' returns to Holyoke

A program of Irish culture, "Irish Fortnight," will return to Holyoke this month and again present, free of charge, a series of lectures and performances that reflect various aspects of life in Ireland, both of today and of years gone by.

Extending over a period of 14 evenings, the Fortnight consists of illustrated or regular lectures and performances which vary nightly from art to music to literature to history to folkways to archeology and so on. The theme of this year's Fortnight is the North of Ireland.

The fourteen programs will be presented at Holyoke Community College beginning Sunday, March 13, and ending Saturday, March 26. All programs will begin at 8 p.m.; and all seating will be done on a first-come, first-served basis, as there will be no tickets and therefore no reserved seats.

The Irish Fortnight, which is an annual event sponsored by the Irish American Culture Institute, this year will be held in 13 cities in the United States and two in Canada, coming to Holyoke partly through the financial support of the Holyoke St. Patrick's Day Parade Committee.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Thursday, March 3 – Born today, you possess monumental drive. Whether your objective is to gain materially or to appease basic emotional hungers, your basic approach is energetic, determined, and above all, inspired with new ideas. You are not at all afraid to delve deeply into new topics or the undertake new methods of operation in an effort to increase or enhance the results of your labors. Nor are you ever hesitant about establishing more, bigger and better relationships with other people. It never occurs to you that a new project might fail or that a new method or a new relationship might not come up to your optimistic expectations. Rather, you are confident of every moment of goodness, of every shape and form in your future.

Although you are a highly emotional individual, you have learned to make your emotions work for rather than against you. You know well how to use tears to gain your ends – or laughter, love or even fear. You strike a nice balance between what you know to be real and what you wish to be so; it is a balance that enables you to take tremendous pleasure from what you have at the same time that you continue to strive toward the attainment of dreams that, at least for the moment, are impossible to achieve. Your acceptance of reality in no way diminishes your belief in a bigger and better future for yourself.

An adaptable individual, you have little trouble dealing with change. You are, however, adverse to any impulsive or rash action of the sort that ultimately leads to regret. Yet you have been known to take action impulsively against issues or persons you find irritating. You believe in the efficacy of apology -- but you are wise enough not to believe in an apology that is not accompanied by forgiveness.

Friday, March 4

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Be purposeful in your actions; otherwise you will hardly achieve goals of importance by nightfall. Reconsider a recent decision for change.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Consider joint financial affairs before you get deeper into debt. This is a good time for solidifying friendships.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – There is an element of luck in the day's achievements. Court success through your own efforts – but rely also on another's good wishes.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You may wish to change the methods that you have been employing in efforts to impress another with your intelligence. Think it over.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Experiences during an deceptive morning may lead you to believe yourself incapable of fulfilling commitments during afternoon hours. Look again!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Keep your requests for gain reasonable. If you ask too much, you may not receive anything; ask for a little and the gods smile.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – The circumstances of the recent past rise again this morning to cause emotional distress to you and yours. Keep temper in check.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – More tact than usual is required of you today if you are to be able to fulfill your promise to a youngster.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Much confusion accompanies your efforts early in the day. By day's end, however, all is set to rights; peace is restored.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – A sudden change in surroundings may cause you more concern than you are used to dealing with. Remain steadfast in principles.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – A favorable day for home affairs. Where children enter the picture, remain calm. There is plenty of time for settling disputes quietly.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Associates in business or profession may be impatient this morning. Explain your position before you are taken to task for it.

HOW TO SAY NO.

You may drink, but today you don't want to. A polite but firm "No, thanks" ought to do it. After all, whether one drinks or not should always be personal, private decision. Besides, one-third of American adults don't drink alcohol at all, and some can't. Maybe we ought to let people decide for themselves whether they want to drink or not. You could make it easier by offering juices, soft drinks, coffee or tea in addition to alcohol.

Umps ratify pact

TAMPA, Fla. [UPI] — The Major League Umpires Association ratified a five-year agreement with the American and National Leagues, ending a dispute that had been going on since the end of the 1976 season.

With 48 umpires in the association — 24 in each league — as soon as the 25th affirmative vote was cast, an association spokesman notified N.L. President Charles "Chub" Feeney and A.L. President Lee MacPhail.

Salary was a principal point of argument and the umpires won a raise from a minimum of $15,000 to $16,500. Other gains were made in side benefits. The umpires' pension plan was not a part of the proceedings, since it is a separate agreement.

"We're happy this is over with," said Feeney. "Everyone seemed pleased with the agreement, and they should be, because I think it is a fair one for everyone concerned. Now, we can all concentrate on baseball."

Feeney and MacPhail, who spent many hours negotiating the agreement, were anxious to have the contract settled before the start of the spring exhibition season next week.

ECBL west action

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] — Maurice Robinson scored 26 points yesterday to lead West Virginia to a 66-54 victory over Pittsburgh, and Norm Nixon scored 18 to lead Duquesne to a 65-55 win over Penn State at the Spectrum in the first round of the first-ever Eastern Collegiate Basketball League tournament.

Top-seeded Western Division team West Virginia, 18-9 overall and 6-5 in the league, found the first half going rough against Pitt, which finished with the worst records of the eight league teams, 6-21 overall and 1-10 in the ECBL.

The Panthers used a slow, patient offense to keep the Mountaineers off-balance in the first half and took a 27-25 halftime lead. But the Mountaineers came out hot in the second half and outscored Pitt, 12-0, to take a 43-30 lead. Their largest margin was 14 points.

Two other Mountaineers scored in double figures — Bob Huggins with 12 points and All-League guard Tony Robertson with 11. Pitt was led by Larry Harris, the league's top scorer, with 16 points.

In the first afternoon game, Nixon scored eight of his points in the last two minutes to stave off a Penn State rally. Don Maser scored 15 points, and Don Gambridge and Lonnie McClain each chipped in with 10 points to help the Dukes advance to Friday's semifinals.

Penn State, seeded second among western teams, finished 11-15 overall and 5-6 in the league. Duquesne stands at 13-14 overall and 4-7 in the ECBL.

Penn State, led by Chris Erichsen's 15 points, fought back from an 18-point deficit to within five points, at 58-53, with 46 seconds remaining in the game. But the Nittany Lions were forced to foul and Duquesne capitalized by making seven of eight free throw attempts in the remaining time to snuff out the comeback.

★Agents

During the free agent draft, a fan in the Midwest decided to declare himself a free agent. He obtained the services of a lawyer and offered himself to all the teams in the league. If every baseball fan declared him or herself a free agent, and wouldn't attend games unless they were paid, the owners and players would be in trouble. This might help the players see how wrong the free agent system is.

The players got what they wanted when the free agent rule went into effect, but in the long run, they are the ones who are going to be sorry.

Jenkins reinjured

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. [UPI] — Ferguson Jenkins, an important cog in the Boston Red Sox' pennant plans, has aggravated an Achilles tendon injury he suffered last season, team spokesmen said Wednesday.

The 6-foot-6 hurler showed up at training camp with a slight swelling in the area of the injured tendon, did a little running and took the rest of the day off, Manager Don Zimmer said.

Jenkins hurt his ankle Sept. 1 while running from the pitchers' mound to first base. The injury ended the season for Jenkins.

Zimmer said some contests were shaping up for jobs at several positions. Left handed relievers Tom House, Rick Krueger and Jim Burton were vying for a bullpen spot while Denny Doyle, Doug Griffin and Steve Dillard were competing for the starting second base spot.

Gymwomen face long, tough road

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

It has been an uphill battle all season long for the UMass women's gymnastics team but the road is only getting steeper.

In their last home meet of the season this Saturday, the gymwomen will compete against national champions Clarion State and fifth-ranked Towson State. After that it is on to the Eastern Championships and then to Nationals. The gymnasts' season record stands at 5-1 and they are currently ranked third in the East and sixth in the nation.

Let's take a look at how the gymnasts earned their 5-1 standing for the season.

For the second consecutive year the gymwomen competed during the first academic semester. In a double dual meet against Penn State, the team lost its first and only meet so far this season by a score of 145.40 to 139.80. The Penn State meet was the only meet Karen Hemberger has gone all-around in. In addition, all-arounder Stephanie Jones was recovering from an injury and Susan Cantwell ran into some problems on the beam. The meet offered a good base to build from.

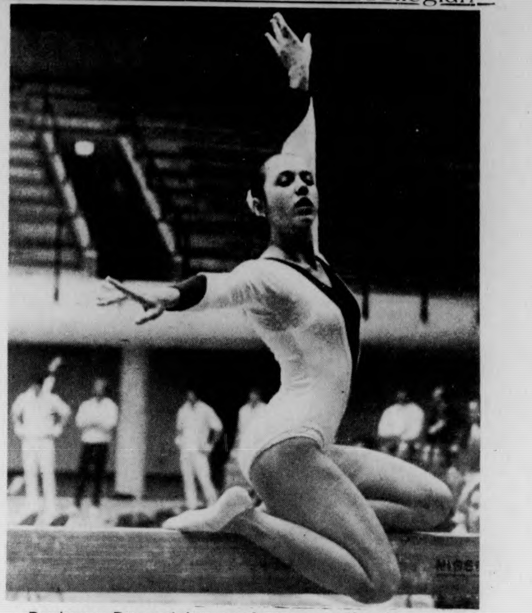
The gymwomen then won their first meet of the season at home against West Chester State in a big runaway. The victory was highlighted by the much improved performances of Jones but also was the meet in which Hemberger twisted her ankle during warm ups. She has not competed in all four events since the Penn State meet.

Victory number two came in a meet in which "experimentation" was the plan. Coach Virginia Evans used the tri-meet against Salem State and Bridgewater State to try some different linesups and routines. Cheryl Morrier's all-around performance coupled with the injury to Hemberger, in that meet earned her a regular all-around position.

Against Temple University the gymwomen reached the 140 point total goal which they were working towards all season. Their winning score of 143.25 broke all previous UMass women's gymnastics team total records.

The fifth and most recent victory for the gymwomen came against Springfield College in a double dual at the Springfield Civic Center. The squad continued to move towards the 145 point total with a 143.55 mark against the Chiefs. The meet was noted for best performance of the season for all-arounder Susan Cantwell, the consistency of AA's Heggie and Jones and Hemberger's return to working three of four events.

And now the gymnasts are in search of their sixth win and it will be a tough one. The Minutewomen continue to improve and toughen the difficulty level of their routines; the talent potential is there. On distinct advantage is that the gymwomen will meet Clarion and Townson State at home in the Cage at 7 p.m. on Saturday. The battle goes on, a long hard road is ahead.



Barbara Burmeister performs on the beam for UMass. The Minutewomen take on Clarion State and Towson State Saturday in the Cage.

Free agent draft spells woes

By MEL WEBSTER
Collegian Staff

Baseball has experienced its saddest days during the past few months since the Black Sox scandal. The problem has been and will continue to be the new free agent system; a system that has brought chaos to the game.

During the time of the free agent draft, more than 20 players played out their options and joined new teams. The salaries these players have been signing for are astronomical. Even an average player can become a free agent and sign a big contract. This is where things have to stop.

The free agent situation will affect everybody, from the owners down to the fans. The owners that have bought two or three of these players are going to be in trouble if these players don't come through and help their team win a pennant.

Another problem the owners are facing is disharmony among the players on their teams. These players see the free agents signing huge contracts and don't think it is fair. They feel they are worth as much as the new man, and they want as much money. A good example of this situation is the Red Sox, who signed Bill Campbell to a close to one-million-dollar contract. Luis Tiant it seems, did not like this, and now he won't play until he gets a new contract.

Commentary

But the ones to get hurt the most are the fans. We are the ones who will have to pay for these big contracts. Teams in both leagues have raised their ticket prices, the Red Sox 50 cents, some other teams by a dollar or more. Concession prices will also rise in order to meet the skyrocketing payroll.

Owners with a great deal of money are the ones who have benefited and will continue to benefit from the new free agent draft. The San Diego Padres, owned by Ray Kroc who also owns the McDonald's Corporation, signed ace relief pitcher Rollie Fingers and catcher Gene Tenace. The New York Yankees, owned by a very wealthy George Steinbrenner, signed Reggie Jackson and Don Gullett.

The San Diego case is good because they have been one of the poorer teams in baseball, and these players will help them win games, and draw big crowds. But this is an exception. At least two teams have been dismantled by the free agent draft. The Oakland Athletics lost the nucleus of a championship team (Baylor, Fingers, Bando, Campanaris, and Rudi). Baltimore lost Bobby Grich, Wayne Garland, and Reggie Jackson.

The free agent system may eventually cause teams to fold. Baseball players don't want to play for Cleveland or Detroit, but would rather play on the West Coast or in New York City where all the extra money can be made on outside activities.

The free agent rule should be abolished. Some people say it is unfair that a player has to play for a certain team and can't leave whenever he wants to. After all, if I work for a certain company, and can quit whenever I want to go to a different company, why can't a baseball player? The reason is obvious: baseball is different. The players provide entertainment for the fans, who buy the tickets and pay the salaries. The players should have some sort of obligation to the fans, and shouldn't be able to play for a different team whenever they want to.

In answer to this, someone might say that baseball players are entertainers, so they should be able to play anywhere they want like an entertainer does. This is a false analogy, however, because an entertainer is not involved in team play, striving for a goal. A baseball player is.

Minutemen slay Knights

By BOB HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA — Mike Pyatt hit for 26 points and sank clutch free throws with three seconds remaining to seal a wild 78-74 UMass win over Rutgers in the opening round of the Eastern Collegiate Basketball League tournament before 3,616 last night at the Spectrum.

The victory sends the Minutemen into Friday night's semi-final round against Duquesne, 65-55 winners over Penn State earlier yesterday. Villanova will meet West Virginia in the other semi-final contest.

For the highly charged, highly emotional Minutemen, the win was the sweetest ever in post-season play. Like so many other times this season, UMass built up a big early lead, and watched it disappear in a flash. But this time, things were different.

"We were getting ready all day — all the past few days," said an exhausted Pyatt after the game. "We were ready."

Strong defense, good shooting and rebounding, and some very disorganized Rutgers play gave the Minutemen their early bulge. The Minutemen stunned the highly-partisan Rutgers crowd with an explosive 20-4 spurt in the last 10 minutes of the first half to go off at halftime with a shocking 42-26 lead.

Pyatt, who went over the 1000-career point mark with his second bucket of the game, was the man behind that UMass explosion. The junior forward shot eight for 11 in the first half for 16 points, while Derick Claiborne hit for 12 of his 14 total points in the opening stanza.

But if the Scarlet Knights were shocked by this, they quickly regained their composure, and cut the Minutemen lead in half in the opening two minutes of the second half. Just three and a half minutes later, an Ed Jordan layup tied the game at 48, as the Rutgers fans went nuts.

"At halftime we said 'Don't let them come back' — but they came back," said Claiborne after the game.

"We couldn't stop them — they're a great ball club," said Pyatt.

But the Minutemen held the line there, despite onsetting fatigue. Pyatt, Claiborne, and Alex Eldridge played all 40 minutes, while Jim Town, despite some painful ribs played all but one minute.

Town banged-up his ribs in practice Tuesday. The big forward still managed 14 points and nine rebounds, and is expected to be ready for Friday with the two days rest.

The two squads traded baskets until the Minutemen ran off a 10-4 spurt to pull in front 68-60 with 6:35 left. But just as suddenly, Jordan hit for three quick buckets and James Bailey tapped one in to tie the game at 70 with 4:11 left.

Two Pyatt foul shots and an Eldridge drive and layup put UMass up by four, but Bailey and Abdel Anderson came back with lay-ins to tie it.

Two Eldridge foul shots gave the Minutemen their final lead 76-74 with 2:02 left. Rutgers' Hollis Copeland missed a jumper with 1:31 left,aand UMass went into its infamous stall, which was unsuccessful just minutes earlier.

Eldridge got fouled, and went to the line for a one-and-one that could have iced the game. Alex missed the first one, and the Scarlet Knights came downcourt with 18 seconds and one last shot at tying it.

But Copeland threw up a long bomb which missed everything, Pyatt got fouled in the scramble for the ball which followed, and UMass had its second win of the season over Rutgers. No other ECBL team was able to beat the Scarlet Knights throughout the regular season.

"The game was really decided in the first half," said Rutgers coach Tom Young after game. "We only played well for the first half of the second half."

"They could have given up, but they didn't," said UMass coach Jack Leaman. "We made them play the half-court game — that was the key. Their fast break was so efficient that I even clapped a few times. Their execution was perfect."

"We all expected that Rutgers would come back like that," said UMass captain Mark Donoghue. "They're a very fast and quick team, and you don't expect to beat them by 20 points. But the thing we all decided to do was to make them play our game, and for us to keep our poise. We did just that."

UMASS — Pyatt 11 4-4 26; Town 7 0-0 14; Claiborne 7 0-0 14; Eldridge 4 4-7 12; Donoghue 3 0-0 6; Kohlhaas 2 2-2 6; Totals: 34 10-13 78.

RUTGERS — Anderson 9 1-1 19; Copeland 9 1-2 19; Bailey 5 0-0 10; Jordan 10 2-2 22; Conlin 0 2-2 2; Duncan 1 0-0 2; Totals: 34 6-8 74.

It fit the setting

By MIKE BERGER

PHILADELPHIA — It was a perfect Shakespearean scenerio. Or in other words, the setting was perfect. Rutgers, a nationally known, household basketball name, with a 1976 undefeated regular season, came into last night's tournament basketball game with an 18-8 overall mark and a 7-1 ECBL record. Its only league loss was an 82-81 defeat to 17-9 UMass.

The Scarlet Knights were playing the 9 p.m. contest in front of 3,616 partisan fans. They were given the traditional media hype but as the saying goes, "overconfidence killed the cat."

Meanwhile, UMass came into Philadelphia Spectrum as a decided underdog. It had played two of the last three regular season games in lackluster style. There was supposed dissension problems between coach Jack Leaman and guard Alex Eldridge; and ECBL second team all-star Jim Town came down with bruised ribs during Tuesday's practice, causing him to play with an estimated 80 per cent mobility and what Eldridge and captain Mark Donoghue termed "sheer emotion".

The setting was just perfect for the traditional "UMass choke." But this time it did not happen. The scene at the end of the game was sheer pandemonium. The estimated 20 UMass Marching Band members and 10 cheerleaders who traveled to the game were hugging each other and the UMass players afterwards.

Eldridge was clutching Leaman after the game and guard Derick Claiborne was screaming "Eddie who" in reference to nationally known all-America guard Eddie Jordan, who was scored 22 points in a losing effort, 16 in the second half.

Mark Donoghue, although only scoring six points, played the best clutch game of his life. Donoghue grabbed 10 rebounds, stole the ball twice, once in the final stages of the game, blocked one shot, and most importantly, held Rutger's center James Bailey to 10 points.

"I really feel," said Claiborne, that Town and Donoghue were the keys in this game. Mark didn't let Jim Bailey get started in the second half when Rutgers came stomping back to erase a UMass 16 point lead to tie the game. His play was just super."

"I'm really proud of Town's performance tonight, said an elated Eldridge after the game. "Jimmy played 39 minutes with bruised ribs which I know were hurting him but he came out and just did what he does best — score, play the tough defense, and rebound."

Town scored 14 points, had nine rebounds, blocked a shot, stole the ball once, and shot 7-15 from the floor.

Mike Pyatt, who had no problem in movement (26 points) while scoring the last two clutch foul shots, said, "When Rutgers came back, we knew we had to get our asses in gear. We know we could beat this team and this time we were determined to do it. It was a total team effort physically and emotionally."

End of Shakespearian scenerio in Philadelphia, at least in the quarter-finals.

Investigative balderdash

I guess what is about to follow had to crawl out of the woodwork sooner or later, and, after months of extensive investigation, it not only crawled, it literally side-stroked.

Yes, the dirty linen is about to be aired. For the first time anywhere, here is really "what was the matter with the 1976 Red Sox" (as told by Dick O'Connell to Jack Anderson):

"I first heard from them during the early part of spring training. They sent two men, incognito, to Winter Haven. One was dressed as a grapefruit, the other as a hot stove. I was instantly suspicious that they might be CIA agents.

"My suspicions were heightened when the hot stove set himself at 450 degrees and spoke. 'We're CIA agents,' he said. I decided to play dumb by claiming to be a rotund hog of cartoon fame.

"Obviously angered by the remark, the hot stove simmered for a moment before the grapefruit warned me that the CIA kept extensive files, which included an up-to-date list of all the batting averages in both major leagues.

"I knew they meant business, so I asked them what they wanted.

"The grapefruit did all the talking. He explained that the CIA, in order to make baseball safe, would buy enough Red Sox season tickets to render 'Family Nights' obsolete, if our club would, in turn, supply them with the information on just how far opposing outfielders over-shifted to the left for Rico Petrocelli.

"I told them I didn't have the authority to make such a decision on my own, and they promised to be in touch with me again sometime before the start of the regular season.

"Sure enough, when I opened my office door April first, the same two men I had seen in Winter Haven pulled me inside, wrestled me to the floor and handcuffed me, all the while repeating the phrase 'April Fools.' This time they were dressed in business suits, but I could tell it was them because one guy had the word 'Sunkist' tatooed to his forehead, and the other smelled of Dow Oven Cleaner.

"We exchanged amenities when they let me up. Again, what had been the grapefruit spoke for the two. 'I'm Tinker, he's Evans; do you want to take the chance?'

"The Red Sox Organization had decided to accept the government offer, but with one exception. I related this to Tinker and Evans. 'We would also like to do away with Cape Cod Day,' I demanded. I wanted to pound my desk for emphasis, but my hands were still manacled behind me.

"They agreed to our new terms, but not before offering some changes of their own. Seems they were worried about being accused of sloppy work. They told me the secret agent term was 'covert activities.' If they kep their mistakes secret, though, no one would ever know if their work was sloppy or not. To aid the cover-up, the Red Sox would be obligated to avoid the World Series at all costs, since the media hype during that time would draw attention to the franchise.

"Further, they insisted we fire Darrell Johnson. They had liked the way he had handled Dick Williams' pitching staff in 1968, and said they needed someone to teach recruits accuracy in the art of molotov cocktail-throwing.

"I jumped at the offer, realizing full well that it was a small price to pay for the elimination of Cape Cod Day. They set me free and we signed an agreement.

"Although our attendance reached an all-time high for the '76 season, I'll never again do business with the CIA. I discovered that Jerry Kapstein is an agent. I know things are bound to get better in that spy business because they're getting a new head man, but I didn't like the contract disputes Kapstein created as a decoy. They were bush league."

Diagnosis

The sterile solemnity of Sunday mornings and white-walled waiting rooms.
(Time rolls slowly)
Silently scanning a panorama of pages from last year's magazines.
With others similarly occupied attempting to fidget in a dignified manner—
        Toes tapping to unheard rhythms.
        Legs crossing and uncrossing like restless pretzels.
        Mute lips mouthing words like tootsie pops—
"Loneliness is the deadliest disease.
A cancer of the soul."
My eyes fell upon the page.
The Poem:
And my heart fell as the doors opened suddenly,
and the Dr. emerged resplendent in white dressing-gown reflecting fluorescent light then alcohol tinged the air as he calmly stated—
"It's malignant,
I'm afraid."

An Abstract on Becoming Deranged

Is it not enough that when we meet
sipping whiskey sours and pretending our eyes are not pigeons
winging
with tightly rolled messages
I must refrain from throwing off my shirt and writhing
while my shadow batters its feathers against the wall;
or worse yet,
beating my fists and feet on your rug
in the dervish fashion of a water bug.
Luckily for both of us
I fear confinement
in the smaller of two cells, the larger being love.
And besides,
all poets are shy.

> Photography is at once a science and an art, and both aspects are inseperably linked throughout its astonishing rise from a substitute for skill of hand to an independent art form.
> Beaumont Newhall foreword, The History of Photography

Science or art, whatever you choose to call it, photography is now getting the widespread attention and respect that it has so long deserved. The photograph stands on its own as a valid visual form, as does a painting or a piece of sculpture; the talented, innovative photographer is recognized now as a creative mind and not as a mere technician.

It has been an uphill battle, gaining this recognition.

With the advent of photography nearly one hundred and fifty years ago, painters were freed from the mechanical and somewhat lowly task of "mere representation." They were now able to concentrate on "creativity" alone, since the camera could do the work of merely producing an accurate pictorial representation. Hence, from its beginnings photography took a position of low respect among the traditional art forms.

A group of photographers during the mid-nineteenth century sought a better status for their art form, claiming that the person behind the camera made the picture and not the camera alone. The assertion of the photographer as artist led to a movement known as Pictorialism, which flourished at the turn of the century. The Pictorialists sought to prove that photography was art, and they did this by imitating the works of well known painters. These soft focus "Impressionistic" photographs were exhibited in the museums and galleries of the era and many photographic salons came into existence specifically for the exhibition and sale of these works.

Thus, the Pictorialists distinguished themselves as "artists" and set themselves on a pedestal far above "snap-shooters" and the purely documentary concerns of the photojournalist. This marked a schism in the world of photography which will exists today and is the subject of a book and an exhibition, Masters of the Camera: Stieglitz, Steichen and Their Successors. The book is based on an exhibition of twentieth-century American photography that was organized by the National Endowment for the Arts.

The aim of the book and the exhibition is to focus attention on this conflict of ideas concerning photography, which essentially boils down to the following question: must the maker of an artistic masterpiece have worked primarily to gratify his own creative urge...or can a masterpiece result when a photographer is meeting the requirements of a client...?

Towards this aim, the book shows us examples of both types of photography — those photos which are a result of an "artistic effort" and make a direct trip from darkness to museum, and those which are the result of an editor or client request and make a "detour" through the mass media on their way to the museum.

The division between those photographers who work for themselves to produce self-expressive "works of art" and photographers who produce according to the wishes of a client is somewhat of a moral division. It is felt by many that photographers who work for themselves are somehow superior to those who work for others; the conflict goes back to the turn of the century when Alfred Stieglitz and Edward Steichen quarreled because the latter went to work for Vogue and Vanity Fair magazines.

Even the casual student of photography will recognize the names of Stieglitz and Steichen almost immediately as being two of the prime innovators of twentieth century photography. Stieglitz became increasingly absorbed in very personal self-expression as his career progressed; Steichen, the younger of the two and a favorite disciple of Stieglitz, used photography to communicate ideas (not necessarily his own, but those of his editor's) to large groups of people.

To Alfred Stieglitz, however, Steichen had "sold out" to commercialism and abandoned his art when he went to work for the mass media. And so the prejudice exists to the present day; the work of the independent artist-photographer is somehow better than the work of the documentary photographer or photojournalist, the "hired lens."

To dispel the myth, open the book. Masters of the Camera is arranged in three major sections which are: The Amateur and the Salon, Photography for Clients, and Personal Photography Now. Together these sections trace the development of American photography in the last hundred years, through reproductions of many of the more outstanding works by the better known names in American photography.

The works included range from the early Pictorialism of Stieglitz to the stark realism of Lewis W. Hine's documentary photographs and back again to the contemporary "children of Stieglitz" including Paul Caponigro and Benno Friedman.

It is a book which you can examine in close detail time and time again, never losing interest. The very modest price ($10.00) is a blessing to the student with relatively little money to invest in books of this nature. Books of fine photography are very expensive as a rule, but this is unavoidable due to the high printing costs of fine reproduction. Masters of Photography contains photographs which would be quite expensive in other editions; admittedly, some of the reproduction in this book is less than perfect but this does not hinder one's enjoyment of the edition as a whole.

No book, however fine, can capture the true essence of the original photograph. A collection of seventy-five photographs is currently on display at the Smith College Museum of Art (until March 20th) which includes several of the prints in Masters of Photography. The selection, however, is from the Smith Museum's permanent collection and is not affiliated with the American Federation of Arts exhibit which is the basis of the book.

According to the organizers of the Smith exhibit, the show is designed to give the viewer "a sampling of the evolution of this medium from its beginnings nearly one hundred and fifty years ago." What we are getting, however, is a display of Smith's "family jewels" and photographic name dropping. The seventy-five prints, culled from a permanent collection of 1,177 photographs, were chosen "for quality and rarity" according to the organizers. That they range in scope from daguerreotypes (one of the oldest photographic processes, and quite rare) to very recent works and hence give "a sampling of the evolution of this medium" seems almost an after thought.

The exhibit caters not to the serious viewer of photographic history and stylistic trends, but rather to the casual viewer with an eye for famous faces and prominent names. We immediately recognize Berenice Abbott's portrait of James Joyce and are impressed by the original Ansel Adams photograph, and so on.

Despite the fact that the exhibit "aims to impress" (and indeed it does), rather than to educate, it is still a "must see" for anyone interested in the visual arts.

To its credit, women photographers are well represented in the show. There are several prints by Alison Frantz and Berenice Abbott, and my personal favorites in the show, works by Imogen Cunningham. Included are Cunningham's portrait of Gertrude Stein, the lovely and almost erotic "Magnolia Blossom", and "The Unmade Bed" which merits close study — it is somewhat disturbingly reminiscent of an operating room or hospital bed.

The list goes on: Minor White, Edward Weston, Paul Caponigro...there are photos by Dorothea Lange and Walker Evans who documented the nation for the now famous Farm Security Administration photograph archive. Stieglitz and Steichen are both represented, the artist and the commercial photographer.

The Smith College exhibit is an excellent opportunity to view some fine photographs, and is made very accessible by the Five College bus service. While you are there, step across the street from Smith to Bonducci's Cafe on Main St. The owner has set up a mini-gallery where local photographers exhibit every week. After viewing the classics, this is your chance to treat yourself to a cup of espresso and a sweet pastry while getting a look at the local photographic talent. Incidentally (photographers take note), Bonducci's display space is available to anyone for a week at a time. Contact the management, there may be a waiting list, but it is a fine opportunity to get your own work seen by the public.

I will say no more, except that it is worthwhile to invest a few dollars at the University Store for a copy of Masters of Photography, and to check the five-college calendar for the frequent photo exhibits that come to the area.

A picture is, after all, worth a thousand words.

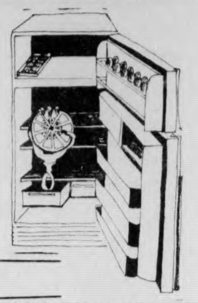
Fad Diets

The Battle of the Bulge



By Pia Talabach and Doris Doherty

In recent years, a new group of best sellers have appeared on the market, convincing books on how to lose weight and in a hurry. The public has become increasingly interested in weight reduction, but is also nutritionally naive and quick to believe in the easy way to take off those excess pounds. Most of these fad diets have a catchy name or an "infallible" gimmick, which usually leads to exclusion of certain foods or a monotonous intake of others. Consequently, many of these diets are short lived which may be a hidden benefit to the dieter, since the majority of the meal plans are nutritionally deficient.

There have been enough fad diets to suit almost any individual taste, with these appearing as the new "Diet of the Month." Let's take a look at some of these miraculous diets, and the problems associated with them.

For an immediate incentive, here's the "Ten Day, Ten Pounds Off Diet." For this diet you are to heat half a grapefruit or its equivalent in juice before every meal. It will then act as a "catalyst" to burn that unsightly body fat and enhance rapid weight loss. From a biochemical standpoint, there is no basis for such a claim, and the weight loss is probably due to a lack of calories rather than the consumption of grapefruit. There are problems with this diet along with the fact that the idea on which it is based is faulty. It does not supply all the nutrients associated with a balanced diet, and also does not allow the user to establish sound eating habits.

Then came "Dr. Stillman's Quick Weight Loss Diet." This is a strict pattern of eating, with only small amounts of a limited variety of foods to be consumed. Because of these limitations, most nutrients will be inadequately supplied, especially carbohydrates. A low carbohydrate intake for any length of time will produce adverse effects. Just a few of these effects are weakness, fatigue, nausea, and appetite depression. This condition is ketosis, and occurs when the body must use fat stores for energy. During this breakdown ketone bodies are formed, when formed in excess they can be toxic.

Also with this diet, good eating patterns can not be established by the dieter in order to insure proper life time nutrition.

Why don't we make it really easy this time? Just follow the "Skim Milk and Banana Diet", you'll be guaranteed a half pound weight loss per day. To be sure, the rapid weight loss isn't due to the combination of skim milk and bananas, but to the lack of calories consumed. When a diet only consists of two foods, there is sure to be a problem. First and most important is the lack of variety which means a lack of nutrients, since all the necessary nutrients are not found in just two food items. There may be one beneficial aspect to this diet and that is its monotony. Few people could continue this kind of intake for any extended period of time, and then would return to a more varied diet.

As a desperate alternative, many people turn to a starvation diet. The convincing aspect of this diet is the rapid and drastic weight loss. A good part of this is attributed to initial sodium loss, along with water. Protein is broken down for energy. Protein is an expensive way of obtaining energy from the body because it is vital to other vital body functions. There are many problems with this alternative to weight loss, especially the lack of energy and stamina that will result. This diet is not recommended for any length of time unless under medical supervision, as is the case with all weight-reducing diets.

All these diets are lacking in one major area and that is teaching the dieter about healthy eating habits. It is important when looking at them to consider whether they are sound and well balanced to insure an intake of all the essential nutrients. In order to maintain a healthy weight, eating habits should be reviewed and then a healthy pattern of eating established for life.

CAT ON A HOT TIN ROOF
By Tennessee Williams
Smith College, Theatre Fourteen
Directed by Cigdem T. Akkurt

By David Ambos

The production at Smith sparkles and burns brightly like the birthday celebration fireworks outside Big Daddy's plantation home, and the pink silk and silver-moon colors in the softly incandescent Williams' characterizations show as very vital human tones on stage. Cigdem T. Akkurt directed this very funny, very alive, award-winning play about a southern family to good effect. But it would be a slight to all those others concerned with the production not to note, at once, that in this production at Smith, every aspect has been done with skill, care and professionalism, all those people in the cast and crew combining to make this a very good show and a very enjoyable evening of theatre.

The cast, led by Sally Ann Thorner as Margaret, the callous-footed cat of the title, Don Howard as her repressed husband, and Walter Boughton as Big Daddy, is professional. Ms. Thorner and Mr. Boughton were exceptional. Bobbi Randall as Mae and Andrea Haring as Big Mama were quite good, though I thought Mae, the catty, cotton-country female Kronos, could have been a more mature bitch as the monster breeder.

David Rubin as Gooper was excellently unlikable, and Jonathan Arterton's Doctor Baugh was good. Pete McMahon as Reverend Tooker was passable, though weaker than the rest of the ensemble.

The kids were demonic, having fun as the "no-neck monsters." Some of the cast members could have used some work on their deep south dialects, with Ms. Thorner's and Mr. Howards' being especially troublesome, possibly because you had to hear them talk a lot. However, all in all, this very professional ensemble, aided by a very capable director, does a very professional and exciting job with the hot-weather dialogue and paper-moon poetry of Williams' dynamic drama.

The costumes by Kiki Smith were very nice, using Williams' colors well. The soft rose, red and green, silk white and black helped the atmosphere as well as any costumes could.

The lights by Susan Hallman were also good, softly glowing for the most part, except for the orange and purple on the pillars in the first act. The set itself was, part of it at least, beautifully suggestive of the scene and atmosphere, suggesting the pillars and weeping willows surrounding a southern plantation mansion. The interior set was nice, but unbelievable, too much like the typical college domestic interior set. This one looked a little like "Gigi" staged inside a J. Homestock showroom.

Altogether a well-done, highly entertaining production, that is well worth seeing. "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" continues at Smith College through this week-end. Go see it and enjoy it. To answer Brick, this play is both funny and true. The cat scratches well below the surface, and the result is an evening's relief from the irritation of "mendacity" in theater.

THE HOT L BALTIMORE
by Lanford Wilson at StageWest

By James F. B. Sawyer

StageWest has another winner with this production of Lanford Wilson's script about losers. Directed by StageWest's own Rae Allen, Carol Morley absolutely stars as April Green, an aging though eloquent daughter of joy, whose catalysis in dialogue with the other characters and peculiar analysis of the many situations presented on stage constitute the nexus among the other characters.

The action centers in the lobby of the recently condemned Hotel Baltimore-which, though doomed to fall to the wrecker's ball, still teems with life. The conflicts which testify to this life and the characters' ways of dealing with them embody this tale of the ending of a way of life in America.

This way of life is evidenced in the roles of the wistful Millie, a one-time well-to-do traveler, played by Elizabeth Parrish, and Girl, a young call girl who can't decide which name to work under, but knows without question which train is currently passing close by, played by Kathleen Tolan.

Billed as a "hilarious comedy", The Hot L Baltimore yet evinces tremendous pathos from its audience. This pathos is best communicated during Act Two, when the outcast siblings Jackie and Jamie, played by Nancy Sellin and Jeremy Lawrence are confronted by Girl with the fact that the only hope they have left is an empty mockery.

Lawrence's touching performance continues in Act Three, where we discover that his sister, the only one he has left in the world, has deserted him.

April Green acts for the audience and, just before the lights come down, takes him into her arms and dances a slow dance, a dance of quiet resignation.

Morley's April, an admirable combination of Mae West, Amanda Blake and Ann Corio, showers salty humor and bawdy powder over all of this, keeping either the comedy or the pathos from completely taking over as the main condition of the play.

With special student rates available, StageWest's Hot L is a must for those seeking satisfying entertainment. And with the University Ensemble Theatre's production of this same Lanford Wilson script coming soon, valuable comparisons can be drawn from attending StageWest's version. The Hot L Baltimore will be playing in West Springfield through March 27. FILM

Twilight's Last Gleaming
Directed by Robert Aldrich

By Brian T. Sullivan

Twilight's Last Gleaming is a fairly effective modern-day Cold War horror story. Directed by Robert Aldrich (The Dirty Dozen, The Longest Yard), the film generates excitement during its action sequences, but leaves one somewhat yawning during its many speeches about the morality of the Vietnam conflict and the integrity of the American people.

The plot revolves around a trio of escaped convicts led by an ex-general (Burt Lancaster) who takes control of a missile site called Silo Three. They demand ten million dollars and the publication of a classified document on the real reasons for our nation's involvement in the Vietnam War. To insure their safety, they also demand the President as a hostage.

The story itself would have been sufficient material for an outstanding action-adventure, but Aldrich muffs it with his heavy handedness in hammering the supposed message of the picture — that we are all casualties of government policy. He misses the mark and almost destroys the film.

But, Aldrich's forte is action, and it is these scenes of tension and excitement that rescue the film. The best is when Lancaster, upon being provoked, starts the ascent of the nine missiles from their silos. The chaos of the scene is enhanced by Aldrich's use of the split-screen technique enabling the audience to witness the hysteria of each group of men simultaneously. It is nerve-wracking.

Performances in the film are basically good. A vote of outstanding achievement should go to Charles Durning as the harried Chief Executive who is forced into a situation that was created by his predecessors. The $6.5 million film has handsome sets and is beautifully photographed. Jerry Goldsmith's musical score is also good. Ignore the moral undertones that Twilight's Last Gleaming implies and you will enjoy this action-adventure.

VIDEO

By Greg Tarlin

Two weeks ago the Public Broadcasting System unveiled a half hour of television satire entitled 'Mother's Little Network.' The program was to be the American answer to England's Monty Python, but was instead an obvious copy of Python, and a poor one at that.

Made up of mostly five-minute sketches and some short animation, the program appeared sophomoric and hastily written. It takes little wit to create a bionic anything these days and the show's 'Bionic Bag-Boy' was perhaps the worst of a bad lot. Another sketch in which a kiddie show host strips while singing the show's theme song was obviously inspired by the 'Groove Tube's clown host who, after telling the kids to have their parents leave the room, reads excerpts from the 'Marquis de Sade.' It would seem that a group of people with supposedly fertile imaginations could do better.

Which leads me to the crux of this essay (drum roll please): what this country needs is some different, and funny, television comedy. The industry has dug itself into such a gargantuan rut of TV situation-comedies that it seems to have forgotten all other types. Certainly situation-comedy has earned a place on the tube. Shows such as the old 'Dick Van Dyke', 'The Honeymooners', 'All In The Family', 'Mary Tyler Moore' and 'Happy Days' are, though frequently immature and trivial, still funny, and that, above all else, is the test of any comedy.

But television, as has been oft-cited by critics, does not know the meaning of 'too much of a good thing'. They will bludgeon us with Sanfords and Maudes until we fall dazed in front of our sets, our faces paralyzed in sickening grins.

The upper echelon TV magnates, in all their Norm Learian ecstasy, have forgotten the 'Laugh-In's, 'Your Show of Shows', and 'Uncle Milty's that graced our airwaves before the sit-com avalanche. And programs, funny programs like Fractured Flickers' and 'The Marty Feldman Show'

All these shows had two things in common. None were sit-coms and all were funny. The diversity of the humor made it that much more effective. 'Laugh-In' was an instant hit, not just because it was funny, but because it was different and funny. 'Saturday Night' is a contemporary attempt at this uniqueness. It is, however, not in Prime Time, and aimed at a small and affluent audience, the same audience that reads 'National Lampoon.'

To relieve this sit-com flood, television must realize the dead end for which this type of humor is headed. There is only so much one can do with situation comedy. New formats and outlets must be found. It is a field wide open to creativity, for television will, though they wouldn't admit it now, soon be in need of many new ideas.

'Mother's Little, Network' was at least a step in the right direction. It was different, but not funny. Its creators and PBS higher-ups should be congratulated for their intent, if not for their success.

BOOKS

HOWARD HUGHES: THE HIDDEN YEARS
By James Phelan
Random House, Inc.
201 pages $7.95

By Chris Bourne

It has been nearly a year since Howard Hughes died. The mystery that surrounds his life will take a long time to emerge fully; if it ever does. This book is the first of many that will probably emerge about Hughes.

James Phelan, the author, covered Hughes for nearly 20 years. His investigative articles have appeared in the New York Times, the Saturday Evening Post, and the Paris Match among others.

The book is a combination of Phelan's knowledge of Hughes and his interviews with two former Hughes' aides: Mell Stewart and Gordon Margulis.

Stewart and Margulis are the first members of Hughes' inner circle to talk. They saw Hughes nearly every day of his last years, and attended to some of his needs and desires.

Stewart first came in contact with Hughes in 1961 when he gaves Hughes a haircut under rigidly secret conditions. For his efforts he received $1000 and notice that he would be called in the future. Often he would be put on call for weeks at $75 a day. In 1968, he became a permanent member of the Hughes inner circle. From then until 1976, he would follow Hughes around the globe.

Margulis is a cockney from London, who got a job as a bus boy at the Desert Inn in 1965. Part of his job was to deliver food to the Hughes' penthouse. Gradually, he impressed the staff with his discretion and efficiency. Margulis was the man who put Hughes on the jet which took him to Houston on his final journey.

Phelan successfully mixes their accounts of Hughes' last years with the story of the Hughes fortunes, which were largely run by other people besides Hughes. He avoids bogging down on either topic and is able to tie them together in a rather coherent way.

Hughes emerges as one of the most powerful men in the country, if not the world, during the later years of his life. However, he devotes most of his energies to his own weird habits and phobias rather than the day to day operation of his far flung empire.

Phelan contends that Hughes' greatest invention was his "secrecy machine." It managed to hide nearly everything about him and his dealings for the last fifteen years of his life.

Some of the stories about Hughes are quite funny such as the time his aides got 350 gallons of Baskin-Robbins banana nut ice cream. Hughes liked that particular variety for a while and several gallons were always kept on hand. One day they discovered that Baskin-Robbins had discontinued that variety. In a fit of panic, Hughes' aides called the company and had them make up a batch of the ice cream. Unfortunately, the smallest batch that the company would make up was 350 gallons. So it was made up and shipped out to Las Vegas. It nearly filled the entire refrigeration room of the Desert Inn. The next day Hughes decided that he wanted to switch to another variety.

Margulis also paints a Hughes who loved to play one aide against the other.

Both Stewart and Margulis are pictured as the closest thing Hughes had to friends. They seem outraged more at the other aides for the way they acceded to Hughes' demands despite the fact that these quirks were killing him.

In fact, Hughes died partly because of kidney failure, a disease which the Hughes Medical Center had done extensive research into.

The famous flights that Hughes undertook such as after the Nicaraguan capital, where Hughes was holed up, was smashed by an earthquake are interesting mostly because they were usually undertaken in a rush. With such haphazard preparations it seems that something should have gone wrong and broken the curtain around Hughes. But Hughes seems to have been rather lucky.

The big question about Hughes is, of course, why he lived the way he did. Phelan hypothesizes that it was power that made Hughes sneak through life. He cites the examples of how Hughes would fire someone but still continue to pay the person. According to Phelan, Hughes regarded this as "a double exercise of his power."

Phelan says that Hughes died like a derilict because "he prohibited his attendants and doctors from performing the normal services" for which most people hire them.

Phelan also cites that Hughes' lifestyle wasn't exactly inexpensive. In the last ten years of his life, Hughes spent over a million and a half dollars each year just to maintain his "traveling asylum and the back up system for it."

There will no doubt be other books on Hughes' life; there have been others in the past. Phelan's book is one of the first, if not the first, to tie Hughes' public wheeling and dealing in with his private life. He does this quite well and succeeds in holding your interest all the way through. His book is an excellent example of investigative journalism and deserves to be read by anyone with an interest in Hughes and what made him tick.

NO RELIEF
By Stephen Dixon
Street Fiction Press, Inc.
126 pps $4.95

Sterile white stainless walls... the Emergency Ward waiting room is an-ti-cep-tic. No one here is a spectator; everyone has their tragic part in this silent performance. Blank, emotionless faces line the walls of the all-night laundramat. Cha-chunng... cha-chunng... cha-chunng! Wai-tinng... wai-tinng... wai-tinng for the rinse cycle... here are the two isolocations in this universe where reading, reading anything is the last pigeonhole of sanity. Outdated Newsweeks, three day-old morning dailies, travel posters, Pepsi cans... anything with print, anything to take you away from this.

I am the type of person who must always have a paperback in his pocket. Too often I am in the situation outlined above... "Thank God and goodness and everything that has to be thanked" that I never wandered into an all-night laundramat with a copy of Stephen Dixon's No Relief. His first book, a collection of long-short stories, is about the people who inhabit the cancer wards, sleazy Broadway bars, and subway exits of this sawdust infested planet... and it hurts. Dixon hits hard and he keeps on coming with each successive punch bruising a little darker than the last.

Most of the stories are written in the present tense, all of them in the first person. Dixon leaves it up to us as to whether or not the "chapters" are connected. There are different narrators for different stories but somehow the same voice is present throughout, stringing them together. We can not help but refer from one to another; these are separate pieces of reality that differ like one day to the next but are still part of the same calendar.

NO RELIEF

Dixon is a clever manipulator of his reader's imagination especially with dialogue. One minute you are one place and a word later you have moved right where he wants you to be. The transition is easy going; your attention is not drawn elsewhere or left behind in the previous statement.

In the second episode of No Relief, entitled "Last May", the narrator is a haunting voice that we have heard before in the works of Camus... the existential "stranger." In fact there are passages that bring to mind this very novel:

"They put him alone at the end of the hall so none of the patients and their guests will have to see him die," my mother said today or the day afterwards, for all this happened a year ago last May. (20)

By far the best piece of the book is "Bars" in which the narrator, having been dear-Johned face-to-face, embarks on an odyssey through the back alleys and lower depths of the City. In the title story, last episode, it is apparently the opposite situation with the same conclusions.

But, there is something missing... something very human. It is pain. Human pain; suffering. All throughout No Relief there are very real situations presented to very unrealistic characters. People are too rational, too objective in Dixon's reality. Perhaps they really do feel pain... they are certainly hit hard enough. But I can not share their anguish. Dixon's definition of emotional stress is too precise to sting me effectively.

There's something unexplainable going on here. The stories move closer and closer to reality while the characters take on a more untouchable form of modern day Olympians with their hubris everpresent in the streets around them.

The prose is clean and does not lag at any point. Dixon's style may be viewed in a recent issue of Harpers.

Street Fiction is a relatively small press and if it is to continue printing good prose-fiction like this it must price its works accordingly. Granted, $4.95 is a lot to pay for a slim paperback but Dixon is going places and here's your chance to discover him now; before he goes too far.

This book is available through the University Store.

NEW RELEASES FROM ANGEL RECORDS

MACBETH
Opera by Giuseppe Verdi
New Philharmonia Orchestra
Riccardo Muti (conductor)

Tomorrow, and tomorrow, and tomorrow I could listen to this opera and well into the day after. Macbeth is my favorite from Shakespeare and Verdi has done it justice as have the performers of this latest production from Angel Records.

Much of the music is fast paced and not all that exciting. The Three Witches whirl about like dervishes relaying the troubles that they have caused and reminding the modern listener of some Broadway musical rather than a serious opera. The haunting, hollow tones are assigned to Macbeth-Milnes in such scenes as the dagger illusion; a muted baritone inspiring the terror that is to come or to Lady Macbeth-Cossotto in her monotone recital, duet with the baritone, and mad scene in the last act heralding the fall of her husband at the hand of Macduff (Jose Carreras - tenor). Here are the sounds of tragedy and defeat..."I die, hated by heaven and earth. Vile crown, it was only for you!" (Vil corona, e sol per te!) cries Macbeth violently. We can easily imagine him stretched out on the stage, clutching his wounds, and after an aria sottovoce driving full force into his dramatic remaining two lines before the soldiers of Malcolm (Giuliano Bernardi - tenor) hail their righteous king.

Critics of Verdi claim that this is not his finest opera but it is the most emotional and most loved piece of the composer. At any rate, it is opera at its best.

ITZHAK PERLMAN
Vivaldi: The Four Seasons

Itzhak Perlman, a relatively young man for the maestro ranks of classical, performs on solo violin and conducts the London Philharmonic Orchestra on this new recording of the Vivaldi's popular baroque violin concerto. Perlman proves himself here to be not only a first-rank violinist, but a very good conductor as well.

"The Four Seasons" is actually four violin concertos taken from a collection of twelve entitled "The Trial of Harmony and Invention", published by Vivaldi in 1725. There is no doubt that "The Four Seasons" is one of the prolific Vivaldi's finest works, beautifully evocative of the seasons.

While the composition does not present the violinist with a showcase in which to exhibit his technical abilities, like the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto, it presents its own possibilities as a piece that can be played with fluidity, warmth and a degree of passion.

Perlman rises to the piece. His version is pleasing; never overdone, never tedious. His playing, particularly in tone and attacks, can be a bit melodramatic at times, but never so far as it is actively uncomfortable to listen to.

Unlike other recordings on this label, the recording itself is a bit poor; it seems to have been recorded in a large hall, and while this may add to the full orchestral sound, some of the softer passages get somewhat blurred and, occasionally, nearly lost.

But the performance is well worth the album. Perlman is a smart conductor and a talented violinist who does a fine job with this very beautiful composition.

Mark Leccese

LEOPOLD STOKOWSKI
Stokowski conducts

Leopold Stokowski is not only an amazing conductor but an amazing man as well. Still conducting at 94 years-old, Stokowski no longer leads his own orchestra, and is keeping up a fairly busy guest conducting schedule.

This new release from Angel contains some Stokowski conducting highlights from the composers that Stokowski conducts the best. Included here are two Sibelius pieces, "The Sawn of Tuonela" and "Finlandia", Sibelius' anthem to the Finnish struggle for independence. This is some Gluck, Turina, Dukas and Barber.

Stokowski's greatest strengths lie in modern, early twentieth century work and early Baroque. It is here that he is most at home, and does the greatest amount of experimentation and personal interpretation. Outside of these catagories, but included on these two records are the scherzo from Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony and Johann Strauss II's famous waltz "On the Beautiful Blue Danube."

Stokowski's interpretations of many of these works tend to the grandiose, with majestically slow tempos and very loud. This is particularly true of the two movements from the Ravel orchestration of Mussorgsky's "Pictures At An Exhibition," The Hut on Fowl's Legs and The Great Gate at Kiev.

Also of interest on this album is Stokowski's two arrangements of J. S. Bach compositions, Mein Jesu, was fur Seelenweh, BWV. 487 and the well-known Toccata and Fugue in Minor, BWV. 565. The arrangement of the Toccata and Fugue is an interesting one; originally written for a church organ in a church that had a reverberation time of 3.5 seconds, one of the main characteristics of the piece is its free-flowing rhythmic lines. Stokowski captures this motion, and, instead of being inferior to the original organ piece, it is an interesting approach.

For Stokowski lovers, this album is a must. For every one else, it is a good introduction to this master conductor.

Mark Leccese

PARKENING AND THE GUITAR
music of two centuries

Parkening and the Guitar is a collection of baroque and French impressionist music that does not fit into the category of a mere collection album. As such it has maintained an identity of its own. The fact that Handel, Scarlatti, and Satie have all contributed to the recording is not important. What we are listening to is Christopher Parkening and we may as well be hearing these pieces for the very first time. His guitar adaptations bring a totally new, refreshing sound to these classical compositions most of which were originally meant for piano or harpsicord.

The very first chord of side one is strikingly Spanish but we find that it is by Scarlatti (Preambulo and Allegro vivo) and is actually of Italian origin, a keyboard piece that may as well have been written for the guitar. Two selections from Handel (Sarabande and Variations and Minuet in D) add a distinctive baroque touch to side one.

The shortest but perhaps the most beautiful selection is Ravel's Pavane of the Sleeping Beauty. When I first heard this piece I combed the record jacket in search of the harpist's name. There was none to be found. Parkening has called upon an entire orchestra of sounds but it is only with his guitar that we experience these free and open sounds. In the Empress of the Pagodas, also by Ravel, Parkening would have us believe that we are listening to a gong orchestra. The Oriental flavor of this piece is absolutely spellbinding.

Parkening closes his repertoire with a folk hymn, a traditional African-Cuban Lullaby. We have spanned the sounds of two centuries and have made a full cycle from the Spanish-Italian countryside of Scarlatti to the traditional, earthy sounds of this closing theme.

I would recommend this album to those who are familiar with the traditional treatment of Parkening's selections, and for those with a sketchy background in classical music as well. In short anyone who appreciates fine music, regardless of their individual tastes will enjoy this recording immensely.

The Professor Of P.D.Q. Bach

By Mark Leccese

Professor Peter Schickele did a grave disservice to the music world when he presented a concert of the music of P.D.Q. Bach to an unexplainably packed house at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall last Sunday night.

P.D.Q. Bach (1807-1742)? is the last and least of the twenty-one children of Johann Sebastian Bach, one of the music's greatest genuises. The younger Bach is, undoubtedly, history's most justly neglected composer.

Professor Schickele, who bears a striking resemblance to P.D.Q. Bach (which is why, he claims, he grew a beard), is the world's leading P.D.Q. Bach scholar. He currently teaches at the University of Southern North Dakota at Hoople. On alternate Saturdays. In February. During leap years. The music, such as it is, of P.D.Q. Bach is featured at USND on the campus radio station, WOOF.

After a short delay, when it seemed that Prof. Schickele would not appear for the concert, the professor popped up at one of the entrances and rushed onto the stage, climbing wildly over members of the audience and the FAC Concert Hall's concrete section dividers. While the unique design of the hall made it difficult for Prof. Schickele to get on stage, he found the hall ideal for a P.D.Q. Bach concert; it is also difficult for the audience to get out.

By way of an introduction to the music of P.D.Q. Bach, Prof. Schickele went over the major creative periods in the composers life. The first period, known as the Initial Plunge period, is the time in P.D.Q.'s life when he learned everything he was ever to know about musical composition. This period lasted about six days. His second period, known as the Soused, or Brown Bag period, lasted most of his life. P.D.Q. skipped his third period, which, Prof. Schickele informed the snickering audience, is no laughing matter. The composer's final period, the Contrition period, was the shortest of the periods.

The first P.D.Q. Bach travesty Prof. Schickele performed was from the compositions P.D.Q. wrote in imitation of his father's "Notebook for Anna Magdelana," the "Notebook for Betty-Sue Bach" (catalogued by the professor as Schickele number 13 going on 14). This short, light work, the professor told the audience, was a good concert opener, as it gave the listeners a chance to build up the proper "esthetic anti-bodies" necessary to in listening to the longer P.D.Q. Bach works.

P.D.Q. had a lot in common with a more famous composer of his time, Ludwig van Beethoven. Both of them, Prof. Schickele informed his audience, shared a certain social awkwardness, and, not incidentally, a certain social disease. While Beethoven appears to have been an influence on P.D.Q. Bach's music, P.D.Q. seems undoubtedly to have been an influence on Beethoven's deafness.

In imitation of Beethoven's "Eroica Variations," P.D.Q. Bach composed the "Erotica Variations" (S. 36EE) for banned instruments and piano. The piece is composed for several obsolete instruments, and, after hearing the piece, one understands why they are obsolete. These thankfully long-gone instruments are as follows: the windbreaker, made up of mailing tubes that deliver a full octave (also known as the "mailing tuba"), balloons, slide whistle, lasso d'amore and the foghorn, bell, and kazoo, the last three being played, as the professor described it, "simultaneously, one after another."

Amazingly, the professor continued with the program, presenting the "Toot Suite in C Minor" (S.212°), a composition for calliope four hands which contains three sections; the preloud, the O.K. Chorale, and the fuga vulgaris.

After a much too-short intermission, the audience was subjected to a lecture with illustrated slides on the Life and Times of P.D.Q. Bach. The lecture discussed P.D.Q.'s musical credo "originality through incompetence" and showed slides of the Bach family, including P.D.Q.'s brother Johann Christian, who was known to call his less illustrious brother "a pimple on the face of music." Prof. Schickele ended the lecture with a short discussion of P.D.Q. Bach's "timely death."

The program ended, none too soon, with "Hansel and Gretel and Ted and Alice" (S. 2^{n-1}), an opera in one unnatural act. Prof. Schickele finished to wild applause, and although he was called back for an encore, he had the good sense not to do one.

It is obvious to this reviewer that one eminent music critic was correct in his analysis when he said, "In the great forest of music, P.D.Q. Bach is a stone that is better left unturned."

Peter Schickele has the eyes of a funny-man. They project the humor in his mind like a smile projects happiness. Even when his face isn't grinning, his eyes are: crinkled at the corners, open a little wider than normal with the eyebrows a bit arched in amusement, they seem to have a kind of permanent twinkle.

"I've always had a lot of fun. I've always been funny," he said before his very funny concert of "The Intimate P.D.Q. Bach" Sunday night. Schickele has been spoofing the world of classical music with his creation of the compositions and life of P.D.Q. Bach, with the comic premise that P.D.Q. is the "last and least" of the children of J.S. Bach (some of who, in real life, were great composers in their own right) and explaining that P.D.Q. is "history's most justly neglected composer" since 1965.

His records and concerts, as maniac as they may seem, are the result of much precision and care on Schickele's part. "I strongly believe," he said, "that the better it's done, the funnier it is."

Schickele graduated in 1957 from Swarthmore, where he had been the college's only music major. He went on to earn his M.S. from the famed Julliard School of Music in New York, and for a while was a teaching fellow there.

After he left Julliard, he wrote a film score and did writing and arranging with Joan Baez. Last year alone, he wrote a bicentennial piece entitled "Birthday Card to America" commissioned and then performed on the Fourth of July with the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, narrated by Senator Thomas Eagleton. He also wrote music for "Sesame Street", scored a TV commercial and a movie, sang and played in a rock group, and released an album on the Vanguard label for which he arranged and conducted instrumental versions of songs by himself, Bob Dylan, and the Beatles.

"I restrict my travelling to half a year," he said. I travel from January to June, doing P.D.Q. Bach, and I spend my summer working on serious projects. And then, around Fall, I start to 'unearth' new P.D.Q. Bach compositions."

Last December, he played three nights at Carnegie Hall, premiering recently "discovered" compositions by P.D.Q. Bach, including the "Missa Hilarious", "The Royal Firewater Music", and the " 'Howdy' Symphony" in which the musicians come onstage one at a time and which Schickele calls "a sort of a take-off on Haydn's " 'Farewell' Symphony." He will be releasing a new P.D.Q. Bach album at the end of this summer.

His influences, other than the obvious classical ones, are folk, rock and pop. When he writes serious compositions, this is generally the genre in which he writes.

"What goes on now in pop is not as exciting as it was a few years ago," he said. "As a result, I'm listening to a lot more classical now."

Even with the proliferation of contemporary and avant-garde music, Schickele never musically satirizes the avant-garde compositions. "Almost anything you can think of to do as a joke has been done seriously," he said. "When part of a composition is to break up the piano on stage...I'm not a contemporary music hater, it's just that when you're working with Bach and Mozart, there's a more well defined style to satirize. I have some ideas for funny titles, but the pieces probably wouldn't be as funny as the titles."

He has done P.D.Q. Bach concerts with many of the most prominent orchestras in the country, including the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Pops. He recently performed with the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra, where he worked with Zubin Metha, who will next season become the conductor of the New York Philharmonic. The orchestra musicians generally enjoy working with him. "Everybody has a good time," he said. The musicians who travel with his "The Intimate P.D.Q. Bach" show all do serious work, too; but, he said, they all "like to have fun."

In the past year he published The Definitive Biography of P.D.Q. Bach, a book that contained humorous pictures and anecdotes on the life and music of P.D.Q. Bach.

RICHARD THOMPSON
Live (More Or Less) (Island)

By Dave Santos

Richard Thompson got his start with the much revered Fairport Convention. Along with Sandy Denny, Ashley Hutchings and Ian Matthews, he merged English folk modes with electric rhythm to create what has been known as folk-rock.

Thompson soon grew restless with the slow expanding ways of Fairport and promptly left to pursue a solo career. Which, up to now, has been a remarkable and highly fruitful venture in the face of widespread public apathy. To put it simply, Richard Thompson has created some of the finest music of this decade. His first solo effort, Henry The Human Fly, was only a hint of what was to come.

The future consisted of the new Richard Thompson and three extremely well-crafted albums (recorded with his now estranged wife Linda Peters): I Want To See The Bright Lights Tonight ('74), Hokey Pokey ('75) and last year's Pour Down Like Silver. On these records, Thompson has gone beyond the boundaries of folk-rock he initially stated with Fairport. Whereas present day people like Steeleye Span are merely extensions of the bare essentials, he has gone back and built upon tradition that is true to the old school, yet uniquely Richard Thompson.

The liner notes terms it "modern ballad style", which is rather uncomfortable for me, but in a vague way sums up Thompson's song-writing craft. The sound is desperately sparse, often quietly electric, minimalist at the heart yet, infinitely complex. Spearheading the music is Richard's acoustic-electric mix (another story in itself), accompanied and filled out by concertina-accordian and Linda's own remarkable subtle voice. His lyrics convey a vision of wealth and taste that champions the simple, most lasting moments of life and sadly traces the unfortunate, but unavoidable darker sides.

Live (More or Less) is an exquisite album. It's a double set; the first half being the American debut of I Wanna See The Bright Lights Tonight, while the second being made up of unreleased Fairport-Richard & Linda material, plus recent live work. Kudos for Island for finally releasing Bright Lights here, for we certainly been the poorer without it. In terms of public acceptance, it remains his most accessible work, but no less a masterpiece in light of last year's Pour Down Like Silver. Among the best is the bright, spartin title track and "The Little Beggar Girl." (However, my personal favorite is "When I Get To The Border.")

Record Two is another side of Richard Thompson Americans have yet to experience. Side C is mixed unreleased tracks and live material. Not surprisingly, the Richard & Linda material is the best, the Fairport pales tremendously. The two instrumental tracks, "The Pitfall—The Excursion" and "Flee As A Bird", are haunting, brooding acoustic tunes and useful reminder of Thompson's genius not only as an electric guitar player, but as a master guitarist overall.

The last side of Live (More Or Less) is the real meat of present day Richard Thompson. It consists of only two compositions, "The Night Comes In" and "Calvary Cross" (from Pour Down and Bright Lights respectively). Both are at the heart of Thompson the composer and innovator. He is joined by Linda, John Kirkpatrick (Concertina-accordian) and ex-Fairport members Dave Pegg (Bass) and Dave Mattacks (Drums). All perform with complete understanding of Thompson's aims. This is especially true of Kirkpatrick who's extremely talented on either accordian or concertina. (He's primarily featured on accordian for this lp).

Perhaps the ultimate tribute to Thompson's power is "Calvary Cross", where the audience not only responds to the familiarity of the opening rhythm lines, but to Richard's galvanizing guitar work. (And it's raw, sparse and chordal — not speed fingers noise) Thompson's response is to give an amazing, exhausting guitar solo.

Richard Thompson is indispensable for anybody who cares about good music. I'll be the first to admit that he's probably not for everybody, no matter how amazing he realy is. Because of his uncompromising nature, he may have doomed himself to obscurity. Whatever. Thompson's genius really goes beyond critic's favorites and cult devotee-ism. Artists like him, Ry Cooder and Randy Newman slave out of the public eye because their craft is one that requires time, patience and understanding. Maybe I'm not so philosophically efficient as I should be, but I think you know what I'm trying to get at. Don't let something as beautiful and lasting as a Richard Thompson pass by without your sincere investigation.

How to start worrying and keep living

TAO: THE WATERCOURSE WAY By Alan Watts
Pantheon Books New York
137 pps. $2.95

By Lisa Melilli

A fast society, a lost society — Western civilization is doomed for disaster. Alan Watts' Tao: The Watercourse Way offers us a last chance, according to Chinese Taoist philosophy, to halt the efforts of the twentieth century's attempt at self-destruction. The East has taken the initiative that the West had taken during the nineteenth century, namely a meeting of East and West. If we are to look to the East for a savior then we are in need of a better guide than Allan Watts.

Watts calls upon fifth century Chinese philosophers Lao-tzu, Chuang-tze, and Lieh-tzu to define Tao as the way of man's cooperation with the course or trend of the natural world the principles of which we discover in the process, drift, and flow of life; the "watercourse way.". We are told to cast aside our personal philosophies and political views and to become like an infant, ignorant in order to hear and understand the Eastern philosophy that he presents us with.

Tao should not be interpreted as the "God" or laws of a society, but as what ancient Greek philosophers called "logos", the ultimate reality and energy of the universe, "the way", the ground of being and nonbeing. Taoism instructs that humans should not consider themselves outside of nature and should not probe the order of nature with formulas and science as the West does, but ought to consider nature as something they are part of.

Watts says that in Western civilization we often see nature as a series of contradictions. In Taoism, however, nature is seen as a series of polarities with all cosmic energy divided into yin (negative) and yang (positive). The relationship between yin and yang is hsiang shing which means mutual arising or inseparability. This relationship is for instance, lovers quarelling rather than say enemies at war. One must experience the void to experience life, experience hate to experience love. The secret, according to Taoism, is to encounter both extremes equally in order to fully appreciate the experience of life.

The goal in Taoism is to trust nature and "human" nature. We must accept both as basically good. Since nature and self are one and if you can't trust either nature or other people, you can't trust yourself. Basic faith involves taking risks. If no risks are to be taken, there is no freedom to be had.

The perfection of Taoism, Watts tells us, is in allowing yourself to become part of this "order"; the "watercourse way." Taoism says go with the grain, curb your ambitions, slow-down the tempo of life. The perfect state of mind, in Tao, is between common sense and the total awareness of reality and wui-wee (dream-like consciousness where the awareness of reality is missing because the physical world looks cold and hard when viewed through the lens of common sense.)

Meditation should be used as a relaxing method and as an end to achieve te (virtue, the realization or expression of Tao in actual living, natural virtue as distinct from artificial virtue). It should not be a process of improving the self, but as a way to fully appreciate the natural flow of nature.

Government is seen as a waste in the eyes of the Taoist. Since man is seen as naturally good, the apparent conflict between man's need to be by himself and his need to be gregarian will be satisfied through the natural evolution of community. According to taoism, government cannot control as it sets out to and so ends acting for its own self-interest. Furthermore, it places energy where it cannot effect change when the energy could be directed to more positive ends.

It's fine to put aside your philosophies and political views while reading about Tao. But then what about after? How can one deal with the realities and philosophies of western civilization so ingrained in our minds which totally conflict with Taoism?

Tao: The Watercourse Way is an interesting and delightfully written book. If your only interest is in learning about Tao philosophy and hearing Eastern parables, I highly recommend it. However, Watts fails miserably in doing what he claims to set out for. He does not show the reader how to apply this pure philosophy to Western life styles. The author does not seriously probe the intensity of overcoming the rigidity, over-systematized, individualistic society of the competitive Western world.

"If deep down inside, you want most desperately to survive and control things you really can't control" — says Watts, in the tradition of Tao, — "allow yourself the freedom to worry. Trying to stop the worry is still effort to control."

So what can you do?

Well, Al Chung-liang Huang who wrote the preface says after you've finished reading "put the book aside and dance for awhile," And that may be the only thing you can do. Unless, of course, you can make West meet East on your own. I think not.

Towards A New Toilet Training

Forget your toilet training, Alexander Kira is changing the way people think about the last bastion of privacy: the bathroom. Re-released now in pocket-sized paperback, THE BATHROOM makes perfect on-the-john training and is just the right thing to fill that space between the tissue stock and the talc on your lavatory magazine rack.

THE BATHROOM has been out for sometime as a hard-back and oversized paperback. It's serious tone reads much like an engineer's manual for proper elimination procedures and is as entertaining as it is thought provoking. The author never attempts to hide the humor, but Kira is serious; the bathroom is the room of the future.

"In many instances," writes Kira on page 309 "the bathroom is emerging as a positive rather than a negative environment oriented toward health, exercise, relaxation, and the enjoyment of body rejuvenation...One can find examples today of bathrooms that are treated as family rooms, private sitting rooms, libraries, offices, formal drawing rooms, art galleries, garden rooms, beauty parlors, gymnasiums, and so on."

With the resurging interest in what we put into our bodies it seems only natural that we take some serious concern over our after-dinner menu as well. THE BATHROOM is not just a good-housekeeping book of the day pick, it is a personal hygiene manifesto that should not be overlooked; nor, do we suspect, that it will be the last word on the subject. It remains at present, however, the bathroom Bible. Thinkers of the world sit up and take note.

Poli(sigh)

The White House Gallery's most recent acquisition (pronounced "Kah-Tah") has set the critics on edge letting loose a flow of words heretofore unparalleled in political journalism. No matter what the final outcome of the Carter administration, it will certainly go down as the most well chronicled four years in this nation's history.

Not the first but certainly the fastest piece of literature to persue the subject is The Official 1977 Inaugural Book — "A New Spirit, A New Commitment, A New America". The book was put together minus the inaugural speech and photos from the day's events well in advance. It is a slick, professional package. If you are the type to cherish memories of Jimmy Carter's commitment speech then this is the definitive edition. A well documented history of past inaugurations and a profile of Carter and Mondale are included as well as six specially-commissioned written works, among them a piece by Alex Haley (Roots) and a poem by James Dickey (Deliverence).

Now to interpret the new king's English you'll most likely need the How To Speak Southern book by Steve Mitchell. Keep in mind that the How To Speak Boston book did come out first. Some of the terminology tackled in this slim volume are "Ah: The thing you see with, and the personal pronoun denoting individuality. 'Ah think Ah've got somethin' in mah ah.' ..."Crine: Weeping. 'Dern it. Billie Sue, why do you hafta end up crine when we argy?' ..."Nawthun: Anything that is not Southern. 'He is a classic product of the superior Nawthun educational system'."

Pieces sans Purpose

THE LIFE AND DESTINY OF ISAK DINESEN collected and edited by Frans Lasson, text by Clara Svendsen
University of Chicago Press
227 pp $8.95

By Patti Rosenberg

One hardly expects every biography to be methododologically brilliant to be capable of standing on its own merits along with but aside from the specific information it delivers on its subject. Erik Erikson's Young Man Luther notwithstanding, one doesn't demand that biography play any role beyond a supplementary one.

There are limitations inherent in a pictorial biography, such that it is perhaps unreasonable to expect a great deal of capital I insight into the subject's psychological and, in this case particularly, artistic development. Still it's hard not to feel resentment that the extremely brief introduction alludes to significant issues that aren't explored anywhere else with any more depth. The word "tragic" is used over and over again, in reference both to the events of her life and her sense of vision.

"The death of her father by his own hand, the unrequited love of her youth, her wrecked marriage, and the incurable disease which was the tragic result of this mistake" are all mentioned in the introduction. When they are mentioned in the body of the text itself it is not with much more detail presumably with the hope that an accompanying photograph will lend the illusion of substance. More space is devoted to description of her great-grandparents' military careers and ancestral castles than is given to discussion of her illness, for example or the breakup of her marriage.

"What exactly does one wish to tell by means of these pictures — what is the purpose of this book?" Frans Lasson asks in the introduction. I found myself still wondering at the end despite his later statement that "My wish is that this book, along with her own works, contributes to keeping the doors to the world of Karen Blixen open..." Which seems to imply the book was written with the primary objective(s) of publishing it and maintaining Blixen-Dinesen's memory. The former is not an appropriate goal in the absence of others and the latter is far better served by Dinesen's work itself.

Ultimately this is more of a scrapbook than a biography. Besides the obvious observation that there are more pictures than text, there is apparently little attempt to selectively order (except chronologically) the material and give the emerging themes appropriate weight in relation to each other. As with most family albums, interested but only casually involved acquaintances feel a bit imposed upon. A real appreciation requires a reader who is an avid fan and, at least psychically, already a close friend.

The world's first Laser musical premiered last month at the Hayden Planetarium in the Museum of Science, Boston. Brilliant Laser color images presented with an original soundtrack created a unique and dynamic production.

As the lights dimmed I sank back in the seats, well aware of what the Planetarium typically offered. Instead of the traditional Boston skyline and a murky announcer LOVELIGHT opened with 8 Bose 901s providing some energizing music. The "sky" was filled with compelling visuals, both geometric patterns and representational figures, in constant motion. All the images were created and stored using state-of-the-art technology.

A beam of white Laser light is bent in a normal prism, diffracting into red, blue, green, and yellow components. Each beam is deflected by extremely fast-moving mirrors onto the dome, the mirrors moving the beam so rapidly and consistently that a continuous line is perceived by the viewer. The motions required for each moment of any figure are stored on tape; which is then synched with the sound track for performance. This kind of visual synthesis is well adapted for complex, Spirograph-like designs. Always changing, in coordination with color and music, several of these patterns at once might make a total enough experience. Yet what makes Lovelight different from other Laser light shows was the very creative use of line drawings. Here we have the ability to show specific images, i.e. a woman touches water and the ripples spreading, primitive man spearing a beast, etc.

The tremendous collaboration of engineers and artists involved in the production of this event speaks of the amount of new ground that was broken. Two corporations, Intermedia Systems, Inc. and General Scanning, Inc., combined to form Interscan, who produced the show. General scanning had the necessary Laser graphic technology and Intermedia was experienced in the artistic production of multimedia shows. Getting access to the Planetarium for a modern, (occasionally rock-style) show certainly involved a non-traditional interpretation of a star show. This is concurrent with a trend in planetarium directors, who are trying to increase the variety and range of audience.

Given the amount of energy and expense in the production, it must be aimed at popular appeal. The music ranged everywhere from electronic spacey to toe-tapping Broadway tunes; each viewer will find portions transporting, and others amusing. I personally might have enjoyed a more unified statement; the many beautiful images left me unclear of a message, or perhaps it is enough to visit with our past, fly in our future, experience our lovelight.

ORAL TEST

March 10
All students should report at 8 p.m. in Bartlett 310.

A student may take either the written or the oral test for a three credit exemption. A student may take both tests for a six credit exemption. Only in a few exceptional cases will a student be awarded a six credit exemption based on the written scores. (If you have taken the test, passed it, and been awarded three credits, you may not take it again.)

THE WRITTEN TEST consists of two parts (both of which are to be taken on the same night). The first part of the test is a multiple-choice test of rhetorical skills. The second part is an essay. Students will be given three topics, asked to choose one and write a 500 word essay on the topic.

The oral test consists of two parts (both of which are to be taken on the same night). The first part is a short-answer test which asks speakers to reveal the rhetorical decisions made in preparing their speeches. The second part is a persuasive speech. The speech is to be PREPARED IN ADVANCE. A copy of the assignment may be obtained in the Rhetoric Office (Bartlett 308C).

Bring a student ID and two number two pencils along with a quarter to help defray the costs of supplies and printing.

BOB WILLS AND HIS TEXAS PLAYBOYS
24 Great Hits
(MGM)
THE CENTRAL PARK SHEIKS
Honeysuckle Rose
(Flying Fish)

I don't know what has prompted the renascent interest in the Western Swing music of Bob Wills and his Texas Playboys. Maybe people are just now realizing that the music of Wills and Spade Cooley and Milton Brown was one of the finest combinations of American musics ever. This was true fusion music, mixing the best elements of New Orleans and black swing bands, Norteno, bluegrass, cajun Zydeco, polka, Hawaiian, rhythm and blues and what came to be known as country and western. No artist has ever churned it up and turned it out as joyously as Bob Wills.

The caveat emptor rule applies to most of the Playboys' recordings — they recorded on many labels and much of the presently available is inferior. This double album, dredged up from the MGM vaults, was recorded in great haste just two weeks before the Petrillo recording ban, but exemplifies the band at their pre-war peak. When they were good, they were very, very good.

For those uninitiated ones, the Playboy sound was dance music that pioneered the use of fiddle and pedal steel and swung righteously with a buoyant Western lope. Many of the big Wills songs are included: "Bubbles in My Beer," "Spanish Fandango," "Faded Love," "Sittin On Top of the World." Johnny Gimbel and Tommy Duncan had evolved a fiddle style that was simultaneously down home and progressively swaggering (out of Joe Venuti and Stuff Smith). They are the band's main feature and when they cut out, the echoes of the Southwestern jazz bands can be clearly heard, especially Gimble's Slam Stewart — like violin scatting. Steel guitarist Supreme Leon McAuliffe had probably left the band by this time (personnel is not listed), but his replacement is as smoothly compelling. Occasionally a few horns appear (Wills unfortunately had to drop them later) and there's an anonymous tenor sax solo on "Bottle Baby Boogie" that fits in with the Wills' sound perfectly. At moments like this one, it seems as if Bob Wills had solved the musical equation that perplexes us: What is the music that everyone can like?

Some of the many vocals are laughable, some are incredibly Lawrence Welk-ish, others swell with cowpoke heartache or wild yodeling Texas jive. Please inspect the version of "I Ain't Got Nobody" (you may have heard the Taj Mahal treatment of it). And behind everything is the irascible, irrepressible Bob Wills, conducting, introducing and continously yee-hawing; a Fats Waller of the wide open spaces.

24 Great Hits is not the Bob Wills album to won. For the Last Time (United Artists), recorded just before his death is the final and greatest document of this musical giant, but 24 Hits is vintage Playboys and a good collection to boot.

Just as more people are listening to Western Swing, so more musicians are being inspired to continue the tradition. Lately, nearly every country-bluegrass performer from Chet Atkins to Mike Auldridge nods to the progressive direction which originated in great part from Western Swing. The Central Park Sheiks are the reigning country swingsters in Appleland and they personify the ebullient spirit of the original Playboys, which is saying a mouthful.

Leader-guitarist Richard Lieberson and the rest of the quintet have listened closely to their Bob Wills' records, yet their delivery of such standbys as "San Antonio Rose" and "Way Down Yonder in New Orleans are fresh and fun and undeniably energetic. The guitar and violin work, especially by Matt Glaser, is un-hackneyed, but Bob Hipkens' trumpet, an unexpected addition for this basically string band, adds the spice of life with several gleaming solos that fit the swing era tunes with great precision. The Sheiks are a bit swing, a bit ragtimey, slightly Tin Pan Alley and overall American. They may not be quite as serious as Asleep at the Wheel, but they got that San Antonio hoodoo whee-hah that Mr. Wills gave to the country way back in 1930.

Cherry On Horizon

DON CHERRY
Don Cherry
Horizon-A&M

After illuminating some of the most progressive groups in jazz in the last 15 years - those of Coltrane, Ornette Coleman, Albert Ayler and Sonny Rollins - Don Cherry has flung himself into the music of the world. Hitching throughout the Eurasian continent from Lapland to Africa to Tibet, he played with the best musicians of the cultures he encountered, and incorporated their non-western rhythms and tonalities into his music while retaining the qualities that make his playing unmistakable. By reirrigating the roots of jazz with fresh folk material, he has in a sense joined the mainstream, although African and South American traditions supply the material most frequently incorporated these days. It's expecially interesting to see the rainbow curve to roots in a trumpeter who has been such an exponent of the extremely mental and abstract sounds of the New York avant guarde. In this album of his current group he joins his old Ornette compatriot drummer Billy Higgins, so the sound of those days in still traceable here, though the formal structure of these songs in a virtual inversion of that music. Gone are the shifting, sometimes unanchored tonal centers and abrupt and jagged melodies. These pieces are long and flowing explorations of rhythm, texture and melody centered on a constant, sometimes droning tone center; as in a rage, there are no "changes."

Most impressive is Malkauns, which begins and ends with a deep, dark-toned meditation by bassist Charlie Haden over the drone of a tambourra. Haden uses few notes to make his statements which allows him to create a need of somber and elegant profundity. The core of the piece is an extended solo by Cherry, his most adventurous and fiery on the record. Here his playing is most characteristic of his past work, but reaches levels of emotional intensity rarely heard over Ornette's compositions of stucturally tortured bop topology. The runway is smoother, as it were. One also appreciates the absence here of Cherry's "vocalizations": tuneless, hoarsely whispered chantings, unobtrusive enough in casual listening, they become faintly ridiculous on closer inspection. Tenor Frank Lowe is effective on the other cuts with harsh, raw shouts on his horn that cut through the highly polished surface of the music - perhaps overproduced here.

In Degi-Degi, one hears a sound that reminds suspiciously of modern electronic and mūsique concret composers like Terry Riley, Glass and Steve Reich. It's a repetitive but unmonotonous pattern over which solos are constructed, and is thus similar to the other more ethnically derived compositions. The man obviously listens to everything, and successfully integrates whatever elements he finds of value into his work. Together with many others Don Cherry is serving to expand the horizons of modern american music, and to bring to attention the great value and diversity of the sounds of the whole world.

FRESH
Get Fresh
(MCA)

A new band to my ears, Fresh, have just come out of the recording studio with an album that shows that they have a place to start from. Influenced by the new musical rage, the band works best when playing up-tempo tracks. Driving beats and especially fine bass playing by Milo Martin make the dancing tunes move. Trouble comes when Fresh attempts rhythm and blues, happening five times to many on this album. All these songs suffer from bland vocals and a lack of energy and direction, on the album just to fill it up, hopefully.

Two particular cuts are played well however, both from the better first side. The title cut on the album is a danceable tune starting with a solid bass and drum beat moving into smooth jazz style rhythms. The song includes some Latin percussion and a quick bass solo. The cut Sweet Music is out of the same mold, containing the best vocals on the album as an extra incentive. Listening to the first side of the album shows that Fresh can do something on record that is listenable and I hope that they stick to the high energy numbers in the future.

HENRY GROSS
Show Me to the Stage
(Lifesong)

After several good records over the last few years, Henry Gross finally scored a hit last year with "Shannon," one of the best Beach Boys-style records ever. It was followed up by "Springtime Mama", neither as good nor as imitative as its predecessor, but nonetheless another fine Beach Boys-influenced tune. Both singles came from the album Release, whose interest unfortunately stopped pretty much with those two tracks. Now Gross has a new LP, and it is also inconsistent.

Show Me to the Stage follows the format of recent Rod Stewart albums: it has a fast side and a slow side. The fast side consists of bland country boogie a la Doobie Brothers, and culminates in a horrible butchering of "Help!". The slow side is much better, with four out of the five cuts being very pretty and showing that wonderful absorption of Beach Boys harmony techniques. In particular, "What a Sound" (which reminds me of "The Rain, the Park and Other Things") should be a monster hit, and either "I Can't Believe" or "Hideaway" would make magnificent follow-ups.

Henry Gross has yet to make an album that is listenable all the way through, but the number of good songs on them is slowly increasing and besides, he's one of the best singles artists we've got. And now that the Beach Boys have joined the Stones, the Who, and all the Beatles in senility, it's nice that there is someone to carry on for them.

ATLANTA RHYTHM SECTION
A Rock and Roll Alternative
(Polydor)

These studio musicians have assembled a nice listenable album of guitar-oriented Southern rock. A Rock and Roll Alternative, however, may be a misnomer. During most of this album, the band displays a typically Southern style which owes a lot to the Allman Brothers and all their descendants. Although no new ground is really explored, this album is still a solid collection of eight easy rockin' numbers.

"Sky High", a tune featuring a fine lead, opens the album at a fast pace. "Hitch-Hiker's Hero" and "Don't Miss the Message" are catchy enjoyable tunes but by the time "Georgia Rhythm" closes out the side, you won't be filled with a burning desire to hear side two due to the sameness which sets in. If you do flip it over, the album's best cut, "So in to You", (a sort of slowed down "This Ol' Cowboy"), brings your attention back. It is currently an A.M. hit and this band's claim to fame. "Outside Woman Blues", a song in the same vein as "Come and Go" or "Statesboro" blues holds interest. "Everybody Gotta Go" and "Neon Nites" close out the album with something less than a bang.

Vocals are pleasant and very inoffensive, guitar work efficient, and the song writing rates above average. The album, although not really "alternative", is a fine listenable disc just the same. (B)

VALERIE CARTER
Just a Stone's Throw Away
(Columbia)

Valerie Carter is a journey woman vocalist who has been appearing as a back-up singer on many people's records for the last three or four years. On this, her debut album, she seems to have asked most of those people to record with her, with the resulting smorgasbord of musical idioms that will please any palate.

Her rich and robust voice could pass for Bonnie Raitt's and her choices of material are similar to Bonnie's also. She opens with a silky "Ooh Child" that melts vinyl. Her R&B interest is enhanced by the production of Maurice White, of Earth, Wind and Fire, on two cuts, "City Lights" and "So, So Happy." Among the cast of 31 who are on the album you can find and hear two other White brothers. She also gets a good deal of help from most of the members of Little Feat, including some production from Lowell George and arranging by Bill Payne.

Look at the back of the album jacket and see how many seemingly incongruous musicians are on the album. What emerges is not the potential pastiche of mismatched styles, but a completely rewarding and interesting crazy quilt of music with Valerie Carter at the center, never drowned out by her luminous partners. She should immediately be welcomed as a new performer of talent and promise.

MARTIN MULL
"I'm Everyone I've Ever Loved"
(ABC)

Well, if this isn't some record. Mary brought this by during one of her early visits when I was still in jail. It was the only diversion I had from Cookie's gum snapping and that was driving me up the walls, let me tell you. I took this with me when we broke out of the big house and do listen to it a lot, tho this Mr. Mull often reminds me of a man I'd sooner forget.

There are a whole lot of people on the album that I've seen on TV and some names that are not familiar to me, but then I don't get much news other than watching Clete Meisenheimer's news show on Fernwood TV. Still an amazing group of varied people have gotten together behind Mull to make a thoroughly enjoyable comedy album, and goodness knows I've had little to laugh at lately.

What makes me really happy about this record is that the bits are funny and all, yet much of the music made is good enough to play long after the humor has worn off. Some of this I didn't get, that Martin Mull is one quick fella, to be sure. But I did like his duet with Melissa Manchester on "They Never Met," it's so cute. One song I didn't like was "The Humming Song" 'cause it generates too many painful memories, but I know there are people who will really like it.

I'm sorry this is so short, but I have to keep moving fast these days. Oh, one more thing, my new friends the gypsies tell me there are a number of songs that are just fine for dancing.

Patty Gimble

JONATHAN EDWARDS
Sailboat
(Warners)

Sailboat is a collection of slow and lightly instrumented C&W tunes. Jonathan Edwards' style has become more mundane and restricted since the days of "Shanty." He is assisted by twelve back-up musicians including Emmy-Lou Harris, whose contributions are acoustic guitar and vocals. Only three of the songs on the album are written by Edwards himself. They are "Sailboat", "Girl from the Canyon" and "Carolina Caroline." The latter two are reminiscent of the Eagles' mellower tunes. There are three songs by Jessie Winchester, "Let The Rough Side Drag," "Blow On Chilly Wind" and "How About You." Two of the songs, "Sailboat" and "Never Together (But Close Sometimes)" have a light reggae percussion background. The latter song was written by Rodney Crowell who is one of the backing musicians on the album. Other songs include "Evangelina", a country love ballad, "Weapon of Prayer," a 3/4 time song of religious pacifism, and "People Get Ready" by Curtis Mayfield which is similar in content to "Train of Glory".

All of these short tunes lack the lyrical qualities that make them memorable. The instrumental interludes are short and uninspired stock riffs. The addition of a mandolin to several of the songs does not help to bring them out of their rut. The lively quality of the first album is missing on Sailboat. For those that don't enjoy laid back C&W, this will prove to be a dull album.

Trustees won't talk with faculty

By MARY ELLEN LOWNEY
Collegian Staff

The refusal of the administration to deal with the recently elected faculty union will delay negotiations for three to five years, according to Larry S. Roberts, Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) president. Roberts told Faculty Senate members last night that "the course of action seems to be that they (the administration) will refuse to bargin."

Also, a proposal to extend the mandate of the Rhetoric Program for another five years was sent to committee to have a fiscal impact study made.

The University Board of Trustees voted to appeal the composition of the faculty union bargaining unit on Wednesday. Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said that this is "in the best interest of the faculty," and that it is necessary "to insure a judicial review of issues we regard as important to the University."

By law, the administration must deal with the union, but they will avoid so by a "technical refusal", said Bromery.

The administration wants to "redefine the unit," said Bromery, by making department chairmen not eligible to participate actively. If they did so, he said, "they would not be able to properly function in their duties as head of departments."

George Sulzner, faculty delegate to the Board of Trustees, called Wednesday's trustees' meeting "frustrating," saying that the important issues were (dealt with) "in closed session."

Roberts said that the legal delay will ultimately be defeated in court, and until then will only mean "a great deal of taxpayers money expended to defeat public policy."

However, in a telephone interview, Bromery stated that he is "convinced" that the administration will win their point in court, pointing out that it was "absolutely not" done to stall for time.

Faculty and staff salary increases are most immediately affected by this decision. Funds for the increases now lie in a $32 million maintenance appropriation for all state employes, which Bromery said "we can expect to get."

Governor Michael S. Dukakis, according to Bromery, advised the University to pay for salary increases until state funds are released. "No bank would honor that expectation," said Bromery, "and if we paid, we would run over $1 million short."

"In fact," he continued, "various legal authorities have said that the governor cannot allocate the $32 million until the state legislature approves it." The governor's lawyers, said Bromery, deny this.

Bromery emphasized that the administration is not trying to delay salary increases "in any way." He pointed out that "once the union is in effect, the only way for faculty to get raises will be through the union."

In a press release yesterday, Doctor Hebert, executive secretary of MTA, said "Wood and the administration have refused repeatedly to meet with representatives of MTA or any matters dealing with developments of contracts or even implementation of the election."

Jay A. Martus, co-president of the Student Government Association, said that he thinks the decision to put the future of the Rhetoric Program in committee was "swayed by the debates that were raised over the fiscal restraints of the University."

He told senate members that the University needs to focus more attention on the Rhetoric problem, saying that the faculty should "require in the future that it be a first year requirement."

The problem is, according to Martus, that many students graduate from UMass without the proper skills in reading, writing and understanding English.

"It's about time the Faculty Senate started to push colleges around and tell them what an institution is," said Martus.

Eric Einhorn, Chairman of the Rules Committee, commented on Governor Dukakis' visit to UMass, saying "we are pleased with the governor's interest and concern to get an on the spot look at the University."

"The Governor," he continued, "was not very well informed about the Amherst area in general, and UMass is particular." He added that Dukakis' position on the University budget "has loosened up considerably" since his visit here last week.

Professor Ludte, of the School of Business Administration, complained to Bromery about the Textbook Annex, saying that they reduced his order of 35 books to 20 books without consulting him or the department on the matter. Bromery replied that he would have a written reply at the next senate meeting.

Reps discuss bill to stop funds for lobbyists

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

State Representatives Andrew H. Card Jr., R-Holbrook, and Andrew S. Natsios, R-Holliston, last night discussed with MassPIRG and other student organizations' representatives, their bill which would prohibit the present funding mechanisms for lobbying efforts of groups like MassPIRG.

The bill, number 2337, reads "An act to prohibit the assessment of or expenditure of funds through the Massachusetts college system and universities for any legislative agent or organization attempting to influence legislation."

At the Boston and Amherst UMass campuses, students contribute money to MassPIRG through a "negative checkoff" system. (A $2 contribution is already listed as a separate fee, which students can substract if they do not support MassPIRG.)

In the Massachusetts state college system, a "mandatory fee", is employed. In this case, a student not wishing to support MassPIRG must still pay the fee and then disclaim it at a designated office to receive a fund.

Stephen J. Morgan, director of MassPIRG's Boston chapter, in a December 20, 1976 letter to Card, wrote that his bill " ... betrays your intention and discriminately challenges students' rights to collect money for their own purposes. Your bill will be perceived by legislators, the public and students alike as an attempt to destroy MassPIRG, because ... MassPIRG is only a viable organization with this particular funding mechanism ...

" ... The bill will be viewed as the bill to kill MassPIRG and the lion's share of support for your measure would come from legislators who don't like what we do, not how we organize or finance ourselves. As the lead agency for the Bottle Bill, the prime mover to secure freedom-of-information within government, the chief advocate for small claims court reform ..., MassPIRG surely has gained some enemies in the General Court."

SGA co-presidents Paul M. Cronin and Jay A. Martus, attended last night's session along with Morgan, Karen Meaney of the MassPIRG Amherst office, spokespersons from the Campus Center Board of Governors, Coalition for Environmental Quality, Student Center for Educational Research, and several interested students supportive of MassPIRG.

Card told the fifty students on hand that he first noticed this funding operation a year ago while his wife was paying her UMass Boston tuition bill.

Card explained that as a representative, he had a "constitutional mandate" to review anything in an appropriations budget.

When Natsios questioned how many UMass students knowingly pay the $2 contribution in the "negative checkoff" format, the group answered that a 1976 survey found that 75-98 per cent of the students interviewed were not only knowledgeable of MassPIRG, but also supportive of at least one PIRG endeavor.

Presenting the representatives with the fact that 80 per cent of the students continually support PIRG with the contributions, the group asked Card and Natsios why they are defending a minority opinion over an overwhelming majority vote.

The representatives jokingly replied that as minority members (Republicans) in the State House, they were very sensitive about minority rights.

The representatives then inquired why PIRG, with such student backing, could not collect its present financial aid through a "positive checkoff" setup, where the student would take the initiative by adding the $2 to the tuition bill.

Again defending the present collecting process, PIRG members said if this method was used, a great amount of their budget would have to pay for the contribution campaign, while now it finances public interest research.

Bluewall breathalyzer tests student sobriety

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

Just how drunk is drunk?

People filtering out of the Bluewall last night had a chance to find out at a breathalyzer set up by the Alcohol Education Project in the Campus Center Concourse. The machine measures blood alcohol concentration (BAC), giving an accurate reading of sobriety.

More complicated than the old Blow-Up-The-Balloon-Test, it takes about four minutes for a machine reading. The person blows into a plastic tube attached to the test unit, a foot-square box with two 'ready' lights. A meter in the center of the box indicates the concentration of alcohol in the blood. The breath flows through the tube into a chemical-filled vial inside the machine.

The chemicals in the vial — Sulfuric acid, Potassium Dichromate, distilled water and Silver Nitrate — then react with the alcohol in the breath sample.

This reaction triggers a beam of light which passes through the alcohol-chemical solution. The amount of light passing through the solution is then translated into a meter reading, indicating the BAC.

A person is considered legally drunk with a BAC reading of .10, the equivalent to three to four drinks in an hour for a 120 to a 180 lb. person.

A drink is defined as one ounce of liquor, three-and-half ozs. of wine or 12 oz. of beer.

Last night's high reading at 9:30 was .20, "falling down drunk". "But it get's better later in the night", said Nancy Kelly of ALE.

The machine's operator, John Schmitter of the UMass Dept. of Public Safety, said the machine would hopefully help people to equate their feelings while drinking with actual meter readings, thereby providing a comparison for the future.

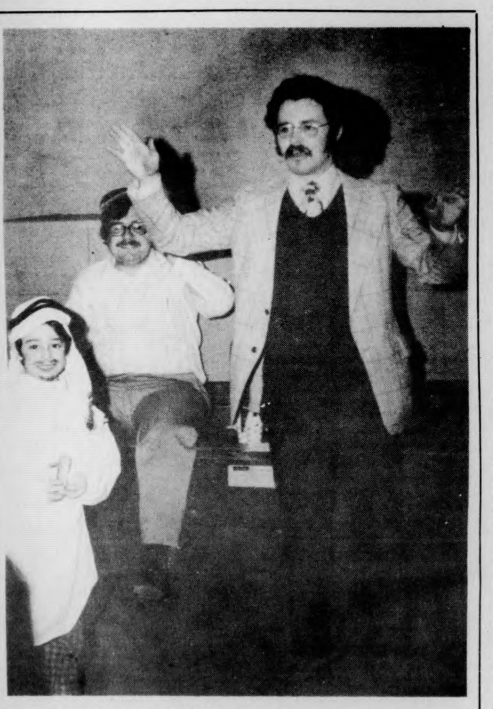
"We had one gentleman down here last semester who was so surprised at his reading he just about went on the wagon. It really straightened him out" Schmitter said.

Representatives from ALE, who were sponsored by Room to Move, Health Education, and the University Health Services, kept a carefully tally of blood levels.

A BAC of .05, described in an ALE handout as "Dashing and Debonair" drunk, is considered to be the highest allowable level for safe driving.

At the other end of the spectrum, a reading of .50 to .60 usually resulted in an "alcoholic stupor", with potentially fatal results.

While the effects of alcohol are determined by a number of factors like mental attitude, surroundings and drinking speed, a general rule for a 150 lb. person is no more than three drinks per day, the ALE handout said.



UMass Rabbi Saul Perlmutter joins this little Haman in celebrating the Jewish holiday of Purim. Purim glorifies the downfall of the original Haman, who was an ancient enemy of the Jews in Persia. Celebrants often dress up in the costumes of the participants of the first Purim. Other traditions include noisemakers (called gragars), one of which the boy is holding, and eating a pastry called hamantaschen. This scene occurred at a Hillel-sponsored Purim service and party last night in the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union Building. (Staff photo by Jono Sher)

BOG member Pill:

'SATF vote will hurt CC'

By JEAN CONLEY
Collegian Staff

Expressing concern that the Campus Center "will be the first place additional financial burdens will be dumped," should students vote down a proposed $7 Student Activities Tax Fee (SATF) increase on March 15, Board of Governors (BOG) member Michael Pill last night urged that the BOG support the fee increase.

The board voted down the motion to support.

Pill says he sees the battle between the Student Senate, which proposed the increases, and other factions on campus, as an issue being used to divide the students.

"This is a perfect tool of control for the administration to use in diverting our attention from the large tuition and fees increase," Pill said.

He said if the increase is turned down by students, the money will have to be absorbed elsewhere. "This could result in another indirect fee increase, an increase in the Campus Center fee.

Students now pay $64 for use of the Campus Center Student Union complex. That will increase to $79 next year.

In other action, the Board urged a meeting between themselves and Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery to discuss the future of check cashing on campus. The Board has sent a memo to the Chancellor stating its disfavor with the failure to provide an alternate location for check cashing once the Student Union facility closes this month.

Bromery, contacted last night, said Whitmore Administration Building is not a viable alternative. "Have you seen the length of the lines as they are now?", he said.

"We just can't afford to be in the check cashing business. It's too expensive. As far as administration goes, everyone wants the convenience, but no one wants it in their building," he said.

A commercial bank on campus, he said, would eliminate the problem of expense. "A bank would do its own construction, it would absorb its own bad checks. and the University wouldn't lose anything," he said. "But a certain group of students is against the bank for philosophical reasons."

A new food policy for the Campus Center is soon expected to be drafted by Board members. Present food policy in the complex states that no group can bring in its own food, and all food must be catered or sold by Saga Foods. The new policy will take into consideration groups which say they must bring in their own food. One such group is Hillel, a Jewish group which holds brunches bi-monthly in the Student Union.

Members from the group say they would not buy Saga food in any case, and they should be allowed to bring their own food into the complex.

March 15, 16 set for collective elections

By RON ALLEN
Collegian Staff

Commuter Collective members decided last night that the voting dates for the upcoming interim elections will be March 15 and 16.

Prospective candiates for the 10 vacant representative positions are urged to file nomination papers by March 11. Nomination papers are available in the Commuter Collective office in the Student Union. Voting will be held on the Campus Center Concourse.

The collective also announced the Progressive Films Series Program, which it sponsors, as continuing this semester with films every Thursday night. Next Thursday, March 10, "Blow By Blow" will be shown in Herter Hall 231 at 8 and 10 p.m. The complete schedule of films are available in the collective office.

Also at last night's meeting, the Commuter Collective endorsed a statement that the Undergraduate Student Senate demand recognition by the University and the Faculty Union of students' right to collectively bargain.

NEAG backs SATF increase

By RICHARD E. BARRELL
Collegian Staff

The North-East Area Government voted to endorse the $7 increase in the Student Activity Tax Fund following a motion by S.G.A. Treasurer Thomas J. Kerrins at last night's meeting. The increase, according to Kerrins, is needed to provide the $200,000 necessary to maintain funding for Student Transit Service, Area Governments, and other student activities at current levels.

Election of Area Government officers of academic year 77-78 was announced. The deadline for filing nomination papers, which are available at the Student Affairs Area Office, is March 21. The election will be held in the dormitories on March 31. Persons seeking more information should call 6-4623.

In other action the group voted to loan $500 to Hamlin Dormitory to meet expenses for a party to be held in Worcester Dining Commons on April 2 from 9 p.m.-1 a.m. According to Neag President Beth E. Tibbetts, the loan is to be repaid out of receipts collected from the sale of tickets, beer, wine, and soft-drinks.

Other decisions and announcements were:

A party at Thatcher House on March 12

A coffee house is planned at Hamlin on March 13 from 8 p.m.-12 p.m.

The opening of the "Weight Room" at Johnson House daily from 8 a.m.-11 p.m. beginning on March 7.

A planning meeting for "Quad day" on Sunday, March 6 at 7:30 p.m. in Thatcher House Seminar Room.

The Spring Semi-formal will be held April 27 in the Campus Center Auditorium. An "easy rock" band is being sought to play at the affair.

A deadline of 12 noon on Friday, March 4 for filing for one day liquor licenses to be filed at Amherst Town Hall.

A colloq course in Area Government will be offered by Beth E. Tibbets Area Government President.

Candidates enter thick of campaign

By STEVE TETRAULT
Collegian Staff

Pinky Batiste has been staying up until 4:00 a.m. every morning, and Jon Hite has been to 25 meetings in the past week. John Foley and Herb Tyson have held campaign strategy meetings that start at 11 a.m. Chuck Pooler and Joel Weissman have spent the past week designing posters and leaflets which will contain their entire platform.

With eleven days remaining, the candidates for Student Government Association (SGA) president have submerged into the thick of the campaign.

All of the eandidate teams have spent some portion of the $200 allotted them by the SGA. According to campaign rules, that sum is all they can spend.

Chuck Pooler yesterday said that he and partner Joel Weissman have spent approximately $160 so far. The major expense has been the printing of posters and leaflets "which give our entire background and our whole platform," said Pooler.

Pooler, Weissman, and campaign helpers have spent most of the past week designing the material, which Pooler said would be ready today. "We haven't been campaigning much. Once we have our material, we'll be going door to door," said Pooler.

The Pooler Weissman campaign has been helped by about fifteen people. "This isn't just an RSB (Revolutionary Student Brigade) campaign. A lot of my friends and Joel's friends from the dorm (Grayson) have helped," said Pooler. Both candidates are members of the Revolutionary Student Brigade.

Candidate John Foley said that he and fellow candidate Herb Tyson have spent about $70. The duo printed 3000 orange handbills which outline the team's commitment to student services. Foley said the handbills cost $12.

"We're saving some money for later in the campaign," said Tyson. "We're working on some real slick stuff. Catchy posters with high name-recognition."

Foley said that about 50 people are assisting the duo.

According to Jon Hite and Pinky Batiste, that team has also spent $70, mostly on thank-you letters sent to students who signed the couple's nomination papers.

"We sent 2300 letters, and included a questionnaire on the bottom" said Batiste. The mailing included questions about the SATF increase, check cashing, and whether students are satisfied with placement services, according to the team. Hite said there has been a 17 per cent response.

According to rules set down by the SGA Governmental Affairs Committee, which oversees the campaign, the candidates cannot spend anything over the $200 allotment. Salaries cannot be paid to campaign workers. Food cannot be purchased, and no money can be spent unless it's directly for the campaign. The teams must draw their money from a special RSO account set aside by the SGA for the campaign. All materials must be registered with the Governmental Affairs Committee. Violation of any regulation (there are 19 rules in all) will result in immediate expulsion from the campaign.

"Since everyone has the same amount of money, the campaign revolves around how innovative you are with what you have," said Tyson. "It's all gonna come down to P.R."

Phonothon '77 sets goal at $54,000

By ALAN SHEPARD
Collegian Staff

"Hello, tonight I'm working with a group of volunteers who are once again phoning to talk about UMass and to request your gift to this year's alumni Annual Fund."

This message will go out to more than 24,000 alumni by student and alumni volunteers in this year's Phonothon.

The student volunteers will be provided with dinner along with a supply of beer and munchies throughout the night's work. Prizes will be awarded to the most productive student and team in the area of receiving pledges, but the benefits for the students go far beyond that.

The impending overall budget cuts put more responsibility on these alumni funds to supplement various special student programs that are inevitably the first to get cut.

The goal of this year's Student Phonothon, according to Joseph Carter, a UMass senior and coordinator of the Phonothon, is to exceed last year's total of $54,000 in pledges.

The money is distributed to programs chosen by the University and the board of directors of the Associate Alumni. Some of these programs are heavily dependent on this aid.

The football marching band is one example. Dr. John Jenkins, director of the band, says that, as it stands right now, there is no visible funding elsewhere and without the alumni aid the past two years, the band wouldn't even have existed this long.

The debate team is in the same situation as their future depends solely on alumni funding.

Other money goes to the Alumni Scholarship Program, athletics, faculty and student related grants, special academic programs and other miscellaneous purposes.

Steven Sadler, the alumni relations director explains that "the money can only spread so far, but the priorities lie with the student projects."

So far, the groups that have signed up are Internships, University Without Walls, Global Survival, Kappa Alpha Theta, Thatcher, Butterfield, Kappa Kappa Gamma, Sigma Delta Tau, Debate, Veterans, SAE, School of Business Administration, Band, Zeta Psi, Dance Group, Hamlin, Knowlton, Area Studies, School of Education, Webster, Brown, IPO, JQA and the Student Senate.

Six hundred volunteers are needed to keep the phones occupied each night. The Phonothon will run Monday through Thursday, March 7-10, 14-17, 28-31 and April 4-7 and 11-14 from 6-10 p.m.

BDIC: Design your own major

By RONALD ALLEN
Collegian Staff

If you are a full time student and have at least four semesters remaining at the University, you should consider looking into BDIC. BDIC, Bachelors Degree with Individual Concentration, is a program designed for students who know what field they're interested in but who cannot find a major which suits their needs. This program provides an opportunity for such students to design their own, unique major from courses in different departments of the University and in the five colleges. Independent study is also available, but on a limited basis.

Within the BDIC program, much emphasis is placed upon personal, individual attention. Here, you are no longer an I.D. number and the "Whitmore Shuffle" is nonexistent. Each student, in designing his-her own major is assisted by a qualified staff which includes eight counselors and seven faculty supervisors all of whom know the workings of the University and its many resources. Along with the BDIC staff, each student is aided by a faculty sponsor whom he chooses depending on the area of concentration. These faculty members act as academic advisors to the student. According to Barbara Monroe of BDIC, much of the success of the program is due to the support of these faculty members who volunteer their time and efforts. Over four hundred faculty have sponsored students.

In the BDIC program, there are not set majors. Each major is as unique as the individual. Generally, the concentrations chosen by students fall into four main areas of study, including: Arts and Cultural Studies, Education and Human Development, Business and Law, and Natural and Health Sciences. A few of the many different concentrations chosen by students in the past include: Urban Studies, Natural Resource Development, Public Administration, and Marriage Counseling. Upon graduation from the program, the student receives a Bachelors Degree with Individual Concentration.

Some students may have reservations about the feasibility of a non-traditional major. However, BDIC allows great flexibility in preparing for para-professional training. Recent graduates have been accepted to some very traditional schools such as Harvard Law School and M.I.T.

Students interested in BDIC should act now. Applications must be completed by students in the second semester of their sophomore year in order for them to begin the two year program as a junior. The offices of BDIC are located in room 416 of the Goodell Building. Office hours are: 9-5 Monday-Thursday, and 9-5 on Fridays. The office is open year round.

For all people interested in the BDIC program, Mosaic, a program produced by BDIC students is presented each spring to let people everywhere know what BDIC is all about.

Included in this spring's Mosaic will be a series of informal presentations titled Friday Afternoon Live, and Journey, a mythical musical. Dates, times, and places will be announced.

Selectmen drop request for fire truck

By ARNOLD WARSHAW
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Board of Selectmen has decided to no longer request state purchase of a special truck for fighting fires in high-rise buildings, such as the dormitory towers on campus.

The board has supported and lobbied for an elevating-platform fire truck for the past four years, but has decided to stop backing the purchase for a number of reasons.

The cost involved with operating the truck appears to be the main reason for the board's loss of interest

According to Fire Chief John T. Doherty, the acquisition of the truck would mean the necessity of hiring eight additional fire fighters. This would bring the total of operating costs for the truck to over $100,000 a year.

Doherty originally supported the purchase of the truck, but has changed his mind.

While the truck would be capable of lowering five people at a time to safety, it is incapable of reaching any higher than the seventh floor of a building. The department already has the capability of reaching up seven floors with the hook and ladder truck that it is presently using.

Another reason for the board's decision to forget the truck was Chief Doherty's recommendation that the installation of sprinkler systems in the buildings would make for better protection.

According to law, all high rise buildings put up since 1975 must have sprinkler systems. Doherty said the cost of such a system would be under $200,000.

"It (the truck) isn't going to get us any higher up," said Selectman Diane Romer, "so it doesn't seem like that kind of money should have to be spent by us or the state when sprinkler systems would do a better job of saving life and limb."

The request for the special truck was denied last year by the legislature and this year the joint committee on local affairs has recommended against the purchase.

"We never would have gotten it anyway," said Romer, "We're just weakening our lobbying effort by pushing for it and it puts our Rep. (State Representative Jim Collins) in an embarrassing position."

Don Robinson, of the Office of Environmental Safety and Protection said that his office, along with the Resource Management section of the Office of Residential Life, is doing a study on the UMass dormitories.

The study, which began last fall, and should last for a year, will focus on the dormitories' capabilities of dealing with fire protection.

"We're evaluating the life-safety aspects of the residence hall system. We hope to determine what is the best approach," said Robinson.

Robinson said that they are looking for methods that will boost the fire protection devices in the dormitories, not replace them.

A new series of fire protection devices that were installed in Butterfield dormitory last summer, are being tested to see how well they work.

In response to Paul Yanowitch's commentary on Idi Amin Dada

By KATHE SANDLER

Hat's off to Paul Yanowitch whose "Idi's Time Has Come" on Tuesday exerted the same sublimal manipulation the American media has used in portraying Idi Amin Dada as the Western world's latest 'Coon' joke.

You, Yanowitch, can now join the ranks of the racist and deceptive mechanism for which the media in this country is noted.

At a time when Black Majority-rule in Southern Africa has become a world-wide issue, UPI, AP, The New York Times and other co-conspirators have succeeded in projecting Idi Amin Dada as a lunatic, power thirsty, Black African ruler and a symbol of what Black African rule in Africa can lead to.

After dismissing Andrew Young's reply to Moynihan as being absurd because Young declared the attack a "racist" the author of this article failed to recognize his own racism, which ran rampant throughout the commentary.

Idi Amin

"Slowly, but surely, it is becoming painfully obvious that Idi Amin Dada has got to go."

Who is it becoming painfully obvious to? The people of Uganda or White America? And if Amin has got to go are you proposing that the U.S. employ their Western interference tactics as in the case of Patrice Lumumba in the Congo, Allende in Chile and the latest attempts to remove Castro from power in Cuba?

Unless Paul Yanowitch, Collegian Commentator, is a Ugandian incognito, he must surely recognize his blatant assumption that he or the United States' C.I.A. has been deigned fit to decide who should govern in Black Africa and who should not.

It is these same kinds of slighted issues to which the "Great White Fathers" of the American press display incredible ambivilance.

In the case of the Entebee raid in Uganda, where Israeli forces reclaimed a hi-jacked plane from the Arabs, the press presented figures of slain Israeli troops, hostages and even Arab guerillas. What the media failed to mention was the fact that 20 Ugandians were killed. But then, when the lives of white men are at stake, what are a few African deaths?

Your invitation to Amin to come to the Student Senate so that "they" (you) can "nab" him is reminiscent of a KKK gathering, where at the end of the meeting, the guest gets cooked.

Idi Amin Dada may very well be a blood thirsty, power crazed dictator, yet the thousands that he has allegedly "tortured, maimed, imprisoned and killed" under his regime cannot compare with the countless lives America has taken in mere seconds of history (i.e. Hiroshima, My Lai and Harlem U.S.A.). As quiet as its kept, America may very well be the most ruthless, corrupt and violent country in the world.

I further commend the subtle(?) but everpresent bigotry in your oversight of titles. Surely even a "megalomaniac" ruler and an Ambassador who "goofed" should not be reduced to the status of houseboys. While observing that last names and-or title of M. Patrick Moynihan, Cardinal Cooke, Stalin, Hitler and many others (Tse-tung was simply "Mao"), you casually referred to Ambassador Young as "Andy" and Commander Amin Dada as "Idi". Could the reason for this be Paul, because both Young and Amin are Black men?

As author of this piece you show great promise in the field of American propaganda and remember that America pours it on before attempting to slay its goose.

This country may find itself in a jam if it attempts to militarily intervene in African affairs in either Uganda, South Africa, Zimbabwe or Namibia. Almost 30 per cent of the American Armed Services are African descendants. Picture that....

Look for Idi Amin's letter to President Carter and response to the American media in NUMMO NEWS on Monday.

Here we go again! Racial attack at Butterfield

Note: One of the students who witnessed the incident, I first became aware of the disturbance around 1 a.m., and then followed the series of events until students returned back to Butterfield from Fields.

By ANGELA THOMAS
Asst. Black Affairs Editor

During the early hours of Thursday morning at approximately 1 a.m., a yellow Vega license No. D 38650, with an occupancy of four to five white males drove around Butterfield dorm in Central Area blowing the carhorn and shouting racial obscenities such as "niggers suck, and niggers ain't shit."

In a manner of seconds about 20 students from the dorm rushed out to find what was going on. Once outside, students found the yellow Vega in front of the dorm with its occupants still continuing their shouts and racial slurs. The occupants of the car began shouting out to a black student from the dorm to come over to the car. The black student stood his ground while talking to the white males who then attempted to run him over by the car. Apparently knowing someone from the dorm, a couple of occupants from the car proceeded to call the name of a black student who lives in Butterfield. Shouts of the students' name were heard by those inside the dorm as well as those on the outside. As more students from the dorm continued to come outside, the driver of the car and its occupants drove away.

A student from Butterfield recognized the face of one of the occupants of the car as being a resident of Fields House in Orchard Hill. Within a few minutes a group of about 15 students from Butterfield went to Fields to try determine if the person recognized was actually involved. Before going into the dorm, the yellow Vega was spotted in the parking lot across from Fields. A check of the license revealed it to be the same one recorded by students when the car and its occupants first made its appearance at Butterfield.

Students then proceeded to a room in Fields occupied by five white males who broke off their discussion when the students entered. Accusations and denials were shouted back and forth as the white students remarked that they had been driving in the area, but had not been yelling or blowing their car horn.

Alerted to what was happening, UMass police arrived on the scene. Both parties were taken to a lounge on the floor and questioned by police. Statements were taken, and police informed everyone present that an investigation would be conducted. Students left the floor while police stayed behind still questioning the white students.

A student who missed being hit by the car is planning to file charges while other students said they will be contacting the Area Director of Central Area, and the Head of Resident at Fields about what had happened and to find out what administrative action can be taken.

CONGRATULATIONS

The staff of Black Affairs would like to extend their congratulations to sister Karen Zachery for having been appointed Editor-in-Chief of Nummo News.

Karen, a second semester freshman, assumed the responsibilities of brother Pad Moore who is graduating at the end of this semester.

On behalf of the Third World Community, we'd like to thank you Pad, for contributing your time and effort in expressing the voice of the Third World in Nummo News.

Congratulations once again sister Karen, and keep up the beautiful work you all are doing.

International Women's Week

As part of the upcoming activities of International Women's Week, jazz singer Betty Carter will be performing Sunday, March 6 at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center.

Carter has earned a unique place for herself on the music scene. At the age of 16 she took her first gig with Lionel Hampton, an association which lasted two and half years and led to stints with Charlie Parker, Dizzy Gillespie, Miles Davis and others of equal stature.

All along, her life has had one dominant theme, commitment to pure jazz. That commitment has kept Carter from stardom, but hardly from a position of influence. She understands modern music in a way few musicians do.

Carter is a singer who has been in the vanguard of jazz vocalists for a generation. Her comprehension of the gamble is as complete as her commitment to the art. 'Don't talk to me about new developments,' 'new ideas,' or 'new concepts.' The culture's at stake!"

Stardom, at least in the fan mag sense, seems to have eluded her. She is an uncompromising artist who refuses to pay the price that must be paid to attain platinum-seller success. She continues to say no to the moneymen who want her "to sing the melody the way it is written, to do the kinds of songs they want me to do, to go for the hit, to do it their way. But if I hadn't maintained my integrity, if I had confromed to what they wanted me to do, I would probably be an alcoholic today."

Betty Carter, a woman of experience, intelligence, wit, talent and courage.

(Information furnished by Players Magazine)

Jazz singer Betty Carter will be appearing at the Fine Arts Center this Sunday, March 6 at 8 p.m.

More information on International Women's Week

International Women's Week, March 6 to March 12, is full of programming on national and international issues for the Third World community. Speakers, workshop facilitators, artists, and musicians are coming together to celebrate Third World women around the world. This program, with the magnitude and variety of perspectives it offers, has never been done before and is a rare opportunity for sisters and brothers to share their experiences, ideas, and creativity with other sisters and brothers from across the country and even the globe.

We urge members of the Native American, Asian American, Latino, and Black communities to come together and participate in the week's events.

Women's Disco

It has been rare that sisters have had the space to talk, socialize, and just party with each other. On Monday, March 7 at 9:00 p.m. in Campus Center Room 1009, International Women's Week will sponsor a Women's Disco.

Many sisters and brothers have asked why we are having a dance for women alone. Creating a space for women means many things. Sisters have historically been divided from each other because of pressures to please and compete for men. Men have always had spaces in which they can affirm their brotherhood. International Women's Week is planning a Women's Disco so that we can begin to explore new ways of relating to and affirming each other as Third World sisters.

This is an affirmation of ourselves as sisters, not a rejection of our brothers. That the major part of the week is open to men, that we struggled for a Third World men's workshop, that we are having an open pot luck dinner on International Women's Day, and that we are planning a party for all our brothers and sisters on Saturday after Lucecita should be ample proof of this.

However, this week is celebrating our womanhood, and it is only logical that sisters have a space to enjoy each other's company and get an opportunity to make issues concerning womanhood, whether political, emotional, or recreational, a major priority.

International Women's Week would like to provide the space, if you can provide the time, to help us unite and begin to develop a place for Third World Women in our own personal lives as well as in society. We urge your attendance and participation.

Engineer favors nuke plant

MANCHESTER, N.H. [AP] — Ask Bruce Beckley whether he ever worries about nuclear power and he will not flinch an eye. He will give you a quick answer.

"I've got confidence in the ability to handle problems," he says. "...I think we've got a way to handle them."

Beckley for the past five years has been the project engineer for the Public Service Company's embattled Seabrook nuclear power plant. And he says he doesn't quite understand why people won't let him build the 2,300-megawatt station on the New Hampshire coast.

"The fellow that put this building together," he said the other day sitting in an office at the utility's headquarters, "when the wind blows, you hear it creak. But I figure it's going to stay here...

"Does a guy who doesn't want the technologists designing a water disposal system — does he also want to put a bridge up by public ballot?" Beckley hesitates to put it quite so bluntly, but he believes opponents of the Seabrook plant don't know what they are talking about.

Before the 45-year-old electrical engineer came to Public Service in 1972, he was project manager of the Connecticut Yankee and the Maine Yankee nuclear plants. With neither project has be had as much frustration as with Seabrook.

And the frustration runs from the 18th floor executive office of Public Service president William Tallman to the last engineer on the project team. It can be found in the governor's office in Concord as well as the selectmen's office in Seabrook, and in trade union halls on both sides of the New Hampshire-Massachusetts border.

Carter's economic program has difficulty in House

WASHINGTON [AP] — President Carter's economic stimulation program passed one test in the Senate vesterdav but faced another hurdle in the House of Republicans tried to junk his proposed $50 tax rebate.

The Senate, by voice vote, agreed to amend the budget for the current year to allow $17.5 billion worth of emergency spending and tax cuts. The vote was not on any specific plan to allocate the money, however.

Republicans made clear that their vote for the amendment did not commit them to support Carter's tax-cut plan, but showed only that they see the need for some economic stimulus. Many Republicans favor a permanent tax cut rather than a one-shot, $50-per-person rebate.

The House, meanwhile, headed for a straight yes-or-no vote on Carter's modified $13.8 billion plan of tax cuts, including rebates for 200 million Americans and a small permanent tax reduction for 45 million couples and individuals. Plans for increasing federal spending by up to $3.7 billion over the next seven months are covered in separate legislation.

The first hurdle facing the House was a Republican effort to shelve the Carter rebate plan and substitute an $11 billion across-the-board permanent tax cut. That reduction would help all taxpayers, but a share of benefits greater than Democrats preter would go to families above the $20,000-income level.

Republicans contend the rebate is a wasteful and ineffective way of creating jobs. But Democrats favor the rebate because it is a one-shot provision that would not continue to drain the Treasury of money needed to finance such social programs as national health insurance.

Democrats say their stimulus plan would create one million jobs and cut unemployment this year from the latest measurement of 7.3 per cent to about 7 per cent. That would mean a growth in the economy of about 6 per cent, with no unusual increases in inflation, economists say.

GOP strategists concede their program would require longer to take effect but say the jobs it would create would be more lasting than those that arise from the Democratic plan.

The consideration of economic stimulation is taking longer than in the past because of new congressional procedures aimed at giving the lawmakers greater control over federal spending.

The new law requires that Congress amend the budget adopted last September before it can approve any decreases in taxes or increases in federal spending. That was the amendment approved by the Senate on yesterday. It still faces final House action.

On the other hand, the House action was on the actual tax-cut legislation. Whatever emerges from the House has to go through the Senate before becoming law.

Seven men still missing

Workers continue digging, hope to rescue miners

TOWER CITY, Pa. [AP] — Workers using hand tools chipped gingerly at a 50-foot-thick coal seam yesterday to rescue a miner trapped alone in a tiny chamber deep underground for more than two days.

There was no word on seven men still missing in the mine. Two bodies had been recovered.

While the men worked, Ronald Adley, who attracted rescuers by rapping on the walls of his small prison nearly a mile back from the mine's entrance, waited with a supply of chewing tobacco and food pushed to him through a tiny shaft bored through the coal and rock.

"Give me a chew," Adley had asked when rescuers finally made contact late Wednesday through the six-inch communications hole. He also asked for a shot of whisky, but was sent orange juice instead.

Adley's tapping was heard by rescue workers at 4:50 p.m. Wednesday, nearly 32 hours after a mass of water crashed through the roof of a shaft where the men were working in the Kocher Coal Co. mine.

Several men escaped ahead of the surging water, and three were injured. But 10 men were not accounted for. Later Tuesday, one body was found, and a second was recovered on Wednesday.

Asked about rumors that other noises had been heard inside the mine, federal mining official John Shutack replied: "We've heard some reports but we haven't confirmed them.

Outside of Adley moving and outside of our own people, we haven't been able to pick up any other sounds."

Adley told his rescuers that he was alone, Walter Vincinelly, the state's top mining official, said, adding that, at most, the seven missing miners could not be more than 250 feet away in a tunel adjacent to Adley's rocky cubicle.

Voice contact with Adley was made at 7:45 p.m. Officials said there was plenty of air in the mine pocket where Adley was trapped. They said the temperature was between 45 and 50 degrees.

"Adley is talking to us," Vicinelly said yesterday at a news briefing. "He's asking how far we're in. He's sitting there waiting for us to get to him."

Shutack, an official with the federal Mining Enforcement and Safety Administration, said Adley was perched on splintered timber resting on a 45-degree slope in an area four-by-six-by-eight feet.

"The man is in excellent spirits," Shutack told a news briefing.

TOWER CITY, Pa.: Rescue workers bring coal out from the mine where Ronald Adley has been trapped since Tuesday. Miners have been digging through to him at the rate of two feet per hour. It is expected that Adley will be reached by this afternoon.

Assassination investigation

Three witnesses needed to testify

WASHINGTON [AP] — Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill said yesterday that the fate of the embattled House Committee on assassinations may hinge on whether three witnesses can provide new information on the murder of Martin Luther King Jr.

O'Neill said the committee members believe they can get three witnesses who will shed new light on the King assassination. The identity of the three was not disclosed. One committee member said he believes James Earl Ray, convicted of murdering King, is not one of the three, though Ray has expressed a willingness to testify.

The speaker said after meeting with committee Democrats that they hope to salvage at least that much of the investigation from the ruins left by a dispute between Chairman Henry Gonzalez, D-Tex., and Richard Sprague, the panel's chief counsel.

The committee's mandate is to investigate the assassinations of both King and President John F. Kennedy. But committee members were talking Thursday of either dropping the Kennedy investigation or delaying it while proceeding with the King investigation.

When O'Neill was asked if he believes the House should keep the committee alive, he paused and said, "Well, let's just see what we're talking about with these three witnesses. I'm just led to believe that its evidence the American people would be keenly interested in."

The speaker said he understands the three witnesses have not previously been called to testify because of the committee's internal problems caused by the Gonzalez-Sprague conflict. That dispute led Gonzelez to send O'Neill his resignation as chairman Wednesday.

O'Neill said he has not decided whether to forward Gonzalez' resignation letter to the House, which would have to vote on whether to accept it.

Federal grant to preserve records

BOSTON (AP) — The records of the colonial era forerunner of the state's Superior Court, which included among its participants John Adams and John Hancock, will be preserved under a $37,000 federal grant.

Secretary of State Paul Guzzi yesterday announced the grants totaling $51,000 from the National Historial Publications and Records Commission in Washington.

The New England Document Conservation Center in North Andover was awarded $18,000 and $6,000 went to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The Social Law Library will use its money to file records of the colonial Inferior Court of Common Pleas of Suffolk County.

Illegal sports betting probed

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Federal indictments were returned yesterday against nine western Massachusetts residents allegedly involved in running an illegal region-wide sports betting operation.

A grand jury here brought two-count indictments against each of the suspects charging federal gambling law violations, according to the office of U.S. Atty. James N. Gabriel in Boston.

The investigation was conducted by the New England Organized Crime Strik Force of the U.S. Justice Department, the FBI and Massachusetts State Police, said strike force chief Gerald McDowell.

No arraignment date was scheduled.

Those indicted were identified by McDowell as: Louis Pugliano, 50, of Longmeadow; Kenneth Moccio, 28, Thomas Gamelli, 35, and John J. Bryden Jr., 44, all of Agawam; Roger Sala, 34, and Anthony Satrape, 33, both of Pittsfield; Mary L. Field, 30, of Lenox; and Charles Coppola, 33, and Timothy McGovern, 29, of Dalton.

IRS computer system proposed

WASHINGTON (AP) — A massive computer system proposed by the Internal Revenue Service could offer "irresistible" opportunities for illegal government intrusions on Americans' privacy, a congressional study says.

The computer system, which the report says could cost $1 billion, would make Americans' income tax returns immediately available on thousands of terminals in IRS offices.

The draft report by Congress' Office of Technology Assessment suggests that hearings need to be held to answer questions about the security and privacy implications of the proposed computer, known as the Tax Administration System — TAS.

The unpublished draft report has been circulated to House Ways and Means subcommittee members.

Currently, only about 10 per cent of each year's 132 million tax returns are instantly available on IRS computers in a limited number of IRS offices.

Rich stay rich

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Treasury Department said yesterday 182 wealthy persons with adjusted gross incomes of at least $200,000 paid no income tax in 1975.

The department said 41,361 persons had incomes of $200,000 or more, not including interest from savings accounts and other investments. About 6,000 of them, it said, had an effective tax rate no higher than the 20 per cent paid by many fathers of three who make $11,000 a year.

The number paying no tax at all was fewer than the 244 who escaped taxation in the previous year, the Treasury Department said, and it's likely to decline more by the time individual returns for 1976 are filed.

'Saga of pain' to end with removal of thorns

HOVEN, Denmark [AP] — A 63-year-old pensioner known as the "human hedgehog" may be nearing the end of a six-year saga of pain during which doctors say they have removed 32,131 barberry thorns from his body.

His wife says that doesn't include countless inch-long barbs they have pulled out themselves, and there are many more still to be pulled out.

It began April 20, 1971, when Tjens Kjaer Jensen fell into a heap of thorny branches from a barberry hedge, common in Europe and the United States, that he had been trimming around his home in this west Jutland village.

He tried to get up but kept falling back onto the needle-sharp thorns thorns which have continued to emerge from his body in a quantity that has ensured him a niche in Danish medical history.

until he fainted from the pain.

Later this month Jensen will make his 248th visit to the county hospital at Tarm for removal of

THE LOG CABIN IS READILY ACCESSIBLE FROM THE AMHERST AREA BY ROUTE 91 SOUTH TO EXIT 17, BEAR RIGHT AT THE EXIT AND PROCEED ALONG ROUTE 141 FOR THREE MILES. THE LOG CABIN IS ON THE RIGHT ACROSS FROM THE MT. TOM STATE RESERVATION. 536-7700

THE LOG CABIN, RTE 141 Easthampton, 536-7700, reservations a must

By STEVEN J. POLANSKY

"We use no artificial additives" is absolutely proven by the quality of the food served at the LOG CABIN.

in Easthampton.

A quiet, conservative atmosphere pervades the dining area, flanked on either side by a pair of roaring fireplaces, making dining not only a distinct pleasure, but adding a touch of Log Cabin warmth as well.

Upon entering, a cozy bar greets those who desire an apertif, a glass of fine wine or a mixed drink. Soft comfortable couches abound, adding to the pleasant atmosphere, warmed by the ever going fireplace, and always a dash of philosophical counterpoint interjected by the friendly bartender.

On the menu as appetizers, pickled herring, chicken liver pate and various selections of shrimp and fish meet the Cabin's exacting standards and each are as scrumptious as the next. A well stocked relish tray is added with the best in warm rolls and if you hit it right, you can cash in on the warm corn bread which is also served. A cold glass of Chablis filled to the brim will surely whet your whistle and enhance the meal to come.

For those meat lovers, go no further! The prime Ribs au Jus or Prime filet of Beef will satiate even the most discriminant connoisseur.

Baked Stuffed Shrimp, served piping hot will titilate your desire and can equally compare with the best Boston wharf restaurants. Filet of Sole au Chablis is tender and delicious.

The Cabin is well noted for its fresh vegetables, always tender crisp and in season. Fresh cauliflower and carrots will compliment and add colour to your meal, and when mother nature allows, fresh green beans and squash are added to the list.

Don't dare let the hot baked potato, smothered with thick creamery fresh sour cream pass you by, for this is surely the ultimate in potato experiences (and I've had a lot of potatoes in my day!).

The atmosphere is quaint and conservative, with sports jackets for men appropriate at dinner.

Prices are not inexpensive, but are comparable to the finer restaurants in the Amherst area. Most dinners for two will fall into the $25.00 range including tax and tip.

food & drink

The half hour drive from Amherst to the Log Cabin, situated high atop Mt. Tom provides more than just a drive. The scenery, even at night is conducive to the type of meal anticipated, and on a clear night, the stars abound in sheer spectacle from the heights of Mt. Tom.

Be sure to say Hello to Mrs. Edna Williams, the lovely owner, but it is certainly difficult to pin her down to talk to, as she is constantly scurrying about, making sure that each dish is prepared to perfection, each time, every time. Frank MacAvin, the Cabin's manager adds to the overall cordial and friendly atmosphere.

I cannot say enough about the Log Cabin, but seeing as how this is my column, I'll say two more things.

If by now, you are too full, you will have succeeded in missing the Piece de Resistance.

One of the best reasons for going to the Log Cabin is to indulge in their famous Southern Pecan Pie. Rich, thick and delicious, this is understandably the most popular of all desserts served there. Only freshly whipped cream is allowed to touch the delicate crust, delightfully complimenting the fine dinner.

Mrs. Tucker, eat your heart out!!

Call ahead for reservations, for unlike some dining establishments in Amherst and the surrounding area, the Log Cabin will honor those reservations, yet allow time to sip some wine and enjoy the comfortable couches in the bar and warm yourself to the roaring fireplace.

Oh, the second and last point. If you ask nicely, Phil the bartender will fill your glass of Chablis to the brim as well as tell you of his quest for the illustrious PhD and his acute philosophy of life.

A real "down to earth" place, no fancy frills in the kitchen — only the very best, and to that I can attest!

Hummin'
Nat Adderley
(Little David)

So long as there are jazz artists who know how to court the public favor with taste, there will be a chance for legitimate crossover music. Nat Adderley, Cannonball's long overshadowed brother, made this album obviously to attract a larger audience, yet did so with music, not dollars, in mind. The end result is no flabbergastment and certainly far from a failure; it treads instead on the pleasant middle ground, never burning wildly, but always simmering.

Nat is a far better cornetist-trumpeter than anyone imagines whether in the usual quintet format or as a featured soloist (dig his very fine A&M album Calling Out Loud]. In the well chosen company of pianist Onaje Allen Gumbs, saxophonist John Stubblefield and Drummer Buddy Williams, Nat is quietly eloquent ("Listen to the Rain") or stingingly bright, but always himself. Gumbs and Stubblefield, two of New York's finest, are somewhat toned down in this circumstance which doesn't work well for the band's overall output. Gumbs is featured on electric piano for the most part and sounds too filtered to really shine. Hummin' bears the mark of a carefully produced session, too carefully produced. There is substance, but a lack of directness. Instead of driving, it floats and shimmers (albeit nicely).

Despite my misgivings, I find this music very palatable and wonderfully suited for airplay (did he really say that?). It's intelligent, rhythmic, varied music and that's more than what you're getting now.

Equal Rights in the Air Force?

To the Editor:

In the March 2nd Collegian (page 18) there is an advertisement for Air Force ROTC that suggests that men and women share the same opportunities in the Air Force. They mention, quite pointedly, money and insignia as the goals and benefits to be gained by joining AFROTC. However, it is not mentioned, or even hinted at that men and women do not have equal opportunities once commissioned in the Air Force. It has been long discussed and revealed that a great majority of women in the Air Force are in Health Services or secretarial fields. More importantly, in the Air Force women cannot fly the fighters. (How many female generals are there?)

Therefore, isn't it reasonable to conclude that the Air Force leadership assumes that women are too unstable and incompetent to handle a potent weapon? So, we believe that the Collegian should compile some factual information concerning the "equal" opportunities present in the various branches of the Armed Forces.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

Amin: A creation of the West?

To the Editor:

Articles such as, "Idi's time has come," which appeared in the Collegian on March 1, 1977 should not go unchallenged. It was non-historical and non factual in nature and most of all, racist in overtone. The writer demonstrated ignorance and distorted views of the Amin situation and also of world political affairs. Before commenting on subjects of this nature, some research is always in order. This type of article is certainly not constructive, nor does it promote a better understanding of the complexity of the situation.

The fact of the matter is that Idi Amin is a creation of the West. He is an uneducated soldier, helped into power by the British, so as to continue their manipulation of Ugandan affairs. The root of the problem is that once in power, he refuses to be the 'puppet' of the Western world. Clearly, I do not support senseless killings of innocent people, but the only information we have received has come from the western press.

Mao, Stalin and Hitler are not the only three formidable opponents Amin faces in trying for the "Most People Killed per year... Award". America has also done its share of senseless killing in Hiroshima, Vietnam, and Cambodia. How quickly we forget!

In treating a subject like this in such a satirical manner, the writer seems to be making a joke of a serious political situation. The fact is, that Paul Yanowitch was simply trying to conceal his ignorance behind the facade of psuedo-comic.

'Wanna get small?'

For those of you who are "Saturday Night Live!" affeciandos you might have caught Steve Martin's routine on "getting small" (as opposed to getting high). This routine struck home with myself and others watching the program. How wonderful that a little pill could dissolve all those bulges and ripples of fat!

Dieting has become the American way of life. Granted, Americans on the whole tend to overconsume. What is television without running to the kitchen for a snack? What is a ballgame without a beer and hotdog? And after every weekend, you hear the same refrain: "Well, tomorrow, I'm starting my new diet ... "

I am as guilty of this diet craze as anyone else; indeed, I can't remember a time when I wasn't on some sort of diet. I always felt threatened by the sleek, hipless, bustless, willowy models in magazines and on television. Not only do manufacturers dictate what we will wear, but now they want to dictate the size body we put the clothing on.

Americans, spurred on by the advertisers and our fast-paced lifestyle, look for immediate solutions to their weight problems. Look at the wealth of diet foods, pills, exercisers, clubs and spas, books, ad nauseum. On Monday we decide to lose 10 pounds by Wednesday, and then give up on Tuesday because the diet hasn't worked.

It's a vicious circle, solved only by a sensible, varied diet, with smaller portions; we all know that, but we still ignore it, and go on those ever-popular fad diets. After talking to some people, I'd like to share with you some of my favorite irrational ways to lose weight fast, or "how to ruin your health in a hurry."

1. Eat two desserts for dinner, and then announce that you will go do 30 sit-ups to work it off.
2. Eat a grapefruit for breakfast, meat and cottage cheese for dinner, and then order a large pizza with everything on it and extra cheese at 10 p.m. when you can no longer ignore the stomach pangs.
3. Make a bet with three friends that the first one to lose 10 lbs. gets an ounce of "gold." Gain it all back again when you get the munchies after smoking the ounce.
4. Work at a fast-food restaurant, and watch $600 worth of greasy hamburgers and fries fly past you in one hour. You won't be able to eat for at least two days.
5. Become a Tabaholic.
6. Go to a pie-shop restaurant and order the salad and coffee. For dessert, order the swiss chocolate almond whipped cream pie, and ask the waitress for sugar substitute for your coffee.
7. Skip meals and replace with one of the following:
   a) cigarettes and black coffee
   b) aspirin to kill the stomach pangs
   c) nothing, but eat twice as much as normal for dinner to make up for all the dieting you did at lunch.
8) Catch the stomach flu virus.

I'm sure you all have your favorites too. Perhaps with a little patience and reasonable eating habits (for one, stop using food as an emotional crutch) we could escape the endless rounds on the diet merry-go-round. My boss this summer had perhaps the most honest attitude towards his weight control. He constantly went on and off diets, usually off more than on because of his fondness for lime coolers. Finally, when he was tired of hearing myself and the other waitresses tease him about his losing battle with the bulge, he put up a sign in his office.

"Thin may be in, but fat is where it's at."

Your votes needed in Amherst town elections

To the Editor:

We would like to bring to the attention of the residents of:

Central Area Dormitories
Crestview Apartments
Northeast Area Dormitories
Orchard Hill Area Dormitories
Sylvan Area Dormitories
University Apartments

the fact that the Annual Town Election will be held April 5. In Amherst, Town Meeting members make major policy decisions concerning our general welfare, voting on such issues as the raising of money for the town conservation fund; the Northeast Bypass; rent control; protection of security deposits; installation of smoke detectors in apartments; proper extension of the mass transit system; providing bicycle paths; diversion of the Connecticut River; and building of the Montague nukes.

Amherst has been redistricted into eight "new" precincts. All UMass dormitories except Butterfield and those in the Southwest Area have been gerrymandered into one precinct — new precinct No. 3 — which includes the area bounded by Hobart Lane-Rolling Ridge Road on the north, East Pleasant Street on the east, Butterfield Terrace-Clark Hill Road on the south, and North Pleasant Street on the west.

What is the record of those people who have represented this area in the past? While the vast majority of the residents of this area are students and-or tenants, only five of the recent Town Meeting members have been UMass students (see Table I below). As the record indicates, this area has not been represented by consistently progressive people! For example, most of the non-students voted against the rent control warrant article and against the marijuana and cohabitation warrant article. Also, it should be remembered that Town Meeting defeated the Northeast Bypass by only 14 votes. Without the effective representation provided by the 15-20 students who voted against the Bypass it would be under construction today.

We urge you to run for Town Meeting or to encourage others to run who have an interest in university-town concerns. Rent control and alternatives to the Northeast Bypass will be considered this spring. Twenty-nine Town Meeting seats are open in Precinct No. 3. Nomination papers are available in the Town Clerk's Office. The signatures of only ten voters registered in your precinct is all that is needed to place your name on the ballot.

Town Meeting nomination papers must be returned by Tuesday, March 8, at 4:30 p.m. The time commitment, outside of becoming informed on town issues, is not great. Town Meeting meets for four-five evenings in early May and two-three evenings in late October. If you are interested contact Gary Shuster at 546-7111 for further information. Over 80 per cent of the voters in Precinct No. 3 are students and-or tenants. All 29 Precinct No. 3 Town Meeting seats should be, and can be with work, occupied with progressive people responsive to the needs of both Precinct No. 3 and the Town.

Southwest Follies

Last spring, as I was a car own-ing Southwest resident, I parked my car in Lot 22. Early one morning, as I walked to the car with the intention of driving to Boston for a summer job interview, I observed from a distance that something seemed to be the matter with the windshields of several cars in succession. When I arrived at the scene, my worst fears were realized: someone had smashed the windshields of four cars, including my own.

I summoned the police to take a report and began a conversation with the officer dispatched to the scene. He told me that vandalism is a $1 million a year problem at UMass ($40 per UMie) and added that it occurs chiefly on weekends, during warm weather. In any event, vandalism has increased 10-fold since the lowering of the drinking age and the legalization of on-campus drinking. I asked him if he would favor banning liquor and he answered affirmatively. And why not, if it would decrease vandalism and other crimes?

There are two possible arguments against a ban. The most fundamental reason is a philosophical libertarian reason which would say that a ban is an infringement upon personal freedom, an unjust restriction against the right of the individual to do as he or she pleases. But the fatal flaw of libertiarianism is that most actions have social effects, and that it is the duty of society to restrict personal freedoms when aggregate experience shows that a given situation produces a net harmful effect. That is why we have civil rights laws.

The second reason against a ban is practical; how could such a law be enforced? And would not lack of enforcement lead to a lack of effectiveness?

The argument has a little merit. When you think about it, the police are really an ineffective force, and through no fault of their own. The nature of law-breaking and the sheer numbers of broken laws mean that police enforce virtually 0 per cent of all laws broken. So why burden the force with more work than they can already handle? But if enforceability is the criterion by which we decide which laws to maintain, we may as well repeal all laws, for they will all be massively broken within a very short period of time.

Though no one denies that drinking did and would go on when banned on campus, still the total amount of alcohol consumed would drastically decline. There would be no more Blue Wall which sells more beer than any other bar in New England. In addition, a campus ban would put an end to dormitory keg parties.

This article has said nothing about the alcoholism legalized drinking causes among those unprepared for it. It is enough that the UMass student community has manifestly and collectively shown itself unfit to drink. Alcohol should be banned from campus.

Another time last spring, I and two others boarded an elevator in a high-rise. I was returning to my room, having just purchased a box of detergent from a local convenience store.

One of my co-riders asked me what I thought the manufacturer's profit was — could he have known whom he was addressing? When I replied, "oh, a penny, maybe," the idiot retorted with a laugh and declared the profit was actually 50 cents (on a 71 cents purchase). Since a rule of thumb states that a small business generally doubles in price of whatever it buys, his stated profit margin was way out of line.

Then, I asked him what he believed the profit margin of the average corporation is. When he answered, "100 per cent," I told him that according to the IRS, the average is four per cent. After he replied that either the government or the corporations were lying, I then said he was the perfect example of a closed-minded person, a person who rejects any fact clashing with preconeived bigotry as a lie. It's really a simple process! Then I left the elevator which, by virtue of its torporous rate of climb, had given us enough time for our debate.

I blamed this individual for his ignorance, yet perhaps it really isn't his fault. After all, he's been a student all his life, so maybe his ignorance is the fault of his teachers and his schools. What the hell are the schools teaching, anyway?

Magazine monopoly

When Henry Luce created Time Magazine, he created the Great American monster of the Twentieth Century. What was originally set up to fill the empty spot for a comprehensive national news magazine has grown like Godzilla to monopolize the collective news awareness of this country by means of its presence instead of its quality. And where can one go if dissatisfied with the Time prespective? To Newsweek, Time's bastard son, of course.

You see the situation. You've been seeing it for a long time. Time is too pervasive an influence in our lives. For reasons of time and convenience, most people depend on weekly news magazines rather than daily newspapers for most of their news opinions. If you think about it we are told what our opinions of issues are by what is included in these news magazines and what is left out. That fact is characteristic of all mass media, but in the Time — Newsweek seesaw situation, there are very few alternatives from which to choose.

Count them: U.S. News and World Report, Nation, New Times, my list begins to peter out right there and for a country as populous and literate as ours, that is downright ridiculous. Didn't you begin to suspect that things were not right when Time and Newsweek somehow both chose to feature Bruce Springsteen on their covers the same week? The problem is a lot deeper and more subtle than cover stories and society rumor features. It involves team written stories edited by bureau chiefs more concerned with the typical Time style than with content. It involves giving big advertisers seats on the Republican and Democratic Convention floors in place of reporters. In a larger sense, the problem is ourselves, that we are conditioned to accept the easily digestable Time-Newsweek and not ask for any kind of alternative. Through the recent efforts of the New York based Institute for New Communication, a new and hopeful alternative news magazine has appeared.

Seven Days, a bi-weekly magazine, is currently in the second issue of its first volume after a ten issue preview edition and already seems to have some sense of itself. If is a periodical like Time with color covers and glossy pages, but without corporate advertisement. If that doesn't seem significant to you, count the number of ad pages to copy pages in this week's Time. Seven Days is from a clearly leftist viewpoint and makes no bones about that fact. The latest issue features articles on Jamaican politics (by WBCN's own Danny Schecter), sexual politics in Australia, the rise and fall of the TVA energy authority, urban tenants' rights, and an extended expose of steelworkers' conditions.

There is much space devoted to editorials and much editorializing in the news articles as well. This may and may not be to your liking, depending on your personal political stance, but at least the slant is obvious and can be attributed to the particular writer. The danger with Time and Newsweek is that the slant is not acknowledged, it is masked by the magazine's impossible claim of objectivity and further fostered by the anonymity of the reporting staff who merely defer to the "WE", the corporate identity of Time. My father refuses to read Seven Days because he "doesn't want to read slanted news." His misconception is what gives Time-Newsweek its audience and its power.

Beyond politics, perhaps what I've come to like about Seven Days is the quality of its graphic design, its emphasis on culture as a news priority and, most of all, the variety of writing styles. This could very well be what the New Journalism is all about: a staff of primarily free lancers who are interested in expressing themselves in a news story rather than surrendering to the inverted pyramid. This approach is certainly more risky than the normal one, but in Seven Days' current issue, it proves to be worth the risk: Eric Breibart's piece on "The Police Tapes" and a probing article on the Rhodesia-Zimbabwe transition are exceptional. Meanwhile, Time and Newsweek are playing Tweeduldum and Tweedledee by both featuring Idi Amin on this weeks' cover.

Seven Days

I am not wholeheartedly endorsing magazines like Seven Days and The Progressive for the fact that they are different. There are as many questionable points about them as there are good qualities. Seven Days exists, however, as an alternative to the long term news magazine monopoly and is valuable if only for that. Dependence on one news source, be it conservative or radical puts blinders on our perspective and it's time we realized that. Giving equal time to the University Store magazine rack and the People's Newstand is more than just a good idea, it is necessary.

The New South?

By STEVEN DUBIN

Conforming to the scenery, my old rust-bucket Chevy rattles down Route 17, on to Dixieland. The newly painted white, over 100,000 miles broken speedometer, '63 Impala jerks past "Cold Beer" billboards that flow as freely as gas into the old 8 banger, grease and dirt-caked engine.

Rows of paint-chipped, sagging Baptist churches glide by as Saint Christopher bows forward on the cracked, vinyl dashboard. Broken down school buses, grimey with red clay, lay in the side yard. The Chevy hits a rut in the road and a dented hubcap flies off. Hogs snort, picking up old soup cans on the front lawn. "Save the last Twinkee for me Buck," I remind my companion. We pick up a hitch-hiker. He grunts from behind his "U-HAUL" baseball cap about "lazy nigga's," as I drown him out with the crackling AM radio.

"You can't buy groceries with professionalism."

The radiator overheats in an intergrated neighborhood where forbidding chicken wire fences divide property lines. Spitting tobacco just ahead of his work boots, a tired, wrinkled white man offers a gallon of murky water. I fill the radiator as his pur-bred, "son of a Vietnam attack dog," German Shepherd playfully chews my clothes to shreds. "If I kint help ya, mah neighba's weel," he assures me.

Steaming down the highway again, I try to get comfortable on the straw seat cover that hides a gaping tear in the worn upholstery. Toothless blacks swat flies away, sitting on crumbling porches, white kids carve each other with beer can tabs.

Sprialing, strong trees, wrapped in Spanish moss contrast splintered shacks. A gravel truck looses part of its load, leaving "a complimentary sample," on my windshield, giving me the finger for tailgating.

The "New South!" What ever happened to the "New Nixon?"

Maintaining the flow of communication

To the Editor:

In setting the groundwork for the ultimate institution of a union of students with collective bargaining rights, the Student Organizing Project, through the guidance of the Student Government Association, has begun work on the formation of a campus-wide communications network. The Campus Communications Network (CCN) is a mechanism by which student groups can disseminate information on issues which affect the living-learning conditions of students quickly and efficiently.

Broadly, the network is composed of three groups, 1) dorm based network organizations, 2) student government organizations such as, dorm, area and senate groups, and 3) the Student Organizing Project. These groups are to act in a coordinated manner, thus multiplying the small impact each of the groups has had in the past — in terms of the spreading of information to residents of dormitory areas — while acting autonomously. The network organizations interact with the student government by referring house councils to various advocacy resources whenever a situation arises which appears to require the services of such groups, and also to the SOP staff by regular communication with the members of their respective Area Resource Groups (an SOP group) about recent developments, problems and needs.

The end result of this interaction (while unduly simplified here) is the compilation of articles to be featured in the current week's newssheet, discussion of items for the following week, a criticism of the effectiveness of each issue, and a decision as to whether or not an extra edition should be published. Organizations coordinated by the SOP's-ARG's meet regularly to service and facilitate the functioning of the network in their area, and to encourage communication between the network, SOP, and SGA organizations. Publications to be put out by the CCN include 1) a pamphlet describing the network to those interested, 2) a weekly, poster-like, newsheet, and 3) pertinent literature developed by any person after consultation with the dorm based group.

The above is merely an outline of this campus-wide network. The general objective of this structure is to speedily inform students as to recent developments which are pertinent to any estimation of the quality of education at UMass. A continuous flow of communication will aid in the development of a student body which is conscious of its immediate conditions of life in the University and is subsequently prepared to act in order to bring about a positive alteration in those conditions. For too long we have been the passive recipients of a steadily declining educational environment. Positive developments can only come about through a sense of awareness and unity. The CCN is a mechanism which will hopefully ignite us in this direction.

Input in this network is essential. We cannot unionize unless the positive results of such an action are well known, and unless the negative results of our not unionizing are also known.

All of those interested should contact the SOP at 545-2415, or come to our office in the Student Union rm. 426.

Objects to opera review

To the Editor:

Rarely have I read such an inept review as the one in Tuesday's Collegian by Dail Middleton and Jim Sawyer. If anything it was their review of the opera The Mother of Us All that "leaves the audience with several questions". Do they know anything about opera and opera techniques? Do they know anything about Gertrude Stein's style? Having attended the opera, I fail to see how these two critics could have "extricated the concept of a comparison of theologies" when ideologies might be closer to the mark.

In addition, the "unrelated speech excerpts" and "unrelated characters" were Stein's own intent and not the result of editing or interpretation by director Vincent Brann. Opera does require a bit of work for an audience, it won't lead them by the hand; but for myself, four friends and the people sitting close by, The Mother of Us All was funny, entertaining and INTELLIGIBLE!

through the lens

By JONATHAN SHER

Editors Note: This is the first installment of a new weekly series called "Through the lens". Future installments will appear in Thursday's Collegian, and will feature photographs of students who respond to the weekly question. Due to technical difficulties, this week's photos didn't come through.

Question: The UMass faculty recently voted to unionize. Do you think faculty unionization will be good for students, or bad? Why?

Linda Ullmann
Elementary Education

"I feel that the teachers will band together because of the tightness of the Union. More concentration will be given to the professors rather than the students. I think that the professors will have more power; in the long run it will hurt the students."

Wendy Stearns, Casiac

"I feel that a Teachers Union will add to the bureaucracy of UMass. The Union gives the students less chance to fight back. It will definitely promote Student Unionization; I am in favor of a Student Union in order to balance the power."

Jeff Laverdiere
Parks Administration

"I feel that a Faculty Union will hurt the students. Unions in general produce less incentive. I think that the professors will push for smaller classes and shorter hours which will cause cutbacks in the number of students accepted here, because there will not be enough funds to hire the additional staff to compensate for this. A lot of Universities that have tried Unions have found that they just don't work and they are getting rid of them. I feel that there will be too much bargaining power given to the faculty and this will be a disservice to the students."

Victor Gonzalez, Business

"I feel that it is more important for the students to have a union because we're here to learn and we should have the final say in our education. With the faculty unionized we too should unionize.."

Larry Gresock
Political Science

"I feel that the faculty union will have a positive effect. The trouble that unions have is lack of confidence. Society in general feels that the idea of professional people unionizing is inappropriate. This is misleading; I feel that it will be a positive impetus towards student unionization. I hope that it will be seen a more feasible project in the future. I also hope that the faculty union will lend moral and tangible support to the student union and other unions like the S.E.U."

Peter Graham, Economics

"The faculty had good reason for unionizing, because they weren't receiving their yearly cost of living increases for three years now. Now that the faculty has unionized, we need a union in order to have any real say in the University, because our faculty has collective bargaining and we don't. A union isn't easy to form, it is something that we must work towards. It may take years but it's the only way to get any control over our education."

What's Happening

Alternative future exhibition planned

All University departments and groups on campus are encouraged and welcomed to participate in this year's Toward Tomorrow Fair.

The fair is a three-day exhibition of alternatives for the future and will be held on campus June 24-26. Solar, wind and wood energy exhibits, including windmills, solar collectors, wood-burning stoves and electric cars will be displayed at the fair.

Numerous social action groups will address the problems we must face now and in the future, and present new directions to take to improve our lifestyles.

Buckminster Fuller, Barry Commoner, William E. Heronemus, Helen and Scott Nearing, Hazel Henderson, Irwin Silber, Murray Bookchin and Jay Sheldon are among the confirmed speakers that are being lined up now for this year's fair.

Last year, 17,000 persons from all parts of the country attended the fair, where over 200 exhibitors, presentors and speakers addressed alternative energy sources and social and environmental options for America's future.

For further information contact Linda Fuller at 545-0474.

Opportunity to attend Broadway production

"A totally extraordinary and wonderful evening:" says the N.Y. Times, referring to the Broadway play, "For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide When the Rainbow Was Enuf". The Central Area Women's Center is sponsoring a bus trip to New York City to see this production, on Saturday, April 9. Cost is $5, the price of the ticket. Departure is at 7 a.m. from the front of Hills House.

In order to reserve a place, the center must receive the $5 no later than Wednesday, March 9. Time has been scheduled so that people can tour New York. For further information, please call the Women's Center, 545-0496, or the co-coordinators, Linda Fuller 545-1947, and Paula Russo 546-6046.

Berlioz performance tonight at Smith

Members of the UMass Chorale and the Brass Choir will join with chorus and orchestra members from four other colleges in a performance of Hector Berlioz "Grande Messe des Morts," tonight at 8:00 in the John M. Greene Recital Hall at Smith College.

Directed by Bruce G. McInnes of Amherst College, the chorus will consist of about 425 voices from choral groups at Amherst College, Mt. Holyoke College, Smith College and Union College in New York, as well as UMass-Amherst.

The chorus will be accompanied by a full orchestra made up of musicians from Amherst and Smith Colleges, in addition to the UMass brass choir.

Another local performance will be Sunday at 8 p.m. in the New Gymnasium at Amherst College.

Tickets for all performances are available at any of the music departments of the schools involved.

Smith law society plans rummage sale

The Smith College Pre-Law Society is sponsoring a Rummage Sale, Saturday from 10 a.m. - 4 p.m., in Davis Student Center. Find great buys on clothes, plants, furniture, and assorted other items. Proceeds will benefit the club's Law Symposium in April.

Annual China Night to be held Monday

The Chinese Student Club's annual China Night will be held on Monday. It is an educational and entertaining program aimed at creating better understanding of Chinese culture. This evening of music, dance and martial arts will be held at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall at UMass, beginning at 8 p.m.

The Boston Chinese Dance Company will perform various Chinese folk dances and Chinese folk and popular songs. Solos will be sung by Christine Chen, Lily Yuo and Andrea Chiu accompanied by pianist Ivy Wong. The UMass Asian American Kung Fu Club will give demonstrations of different forms and weapons of Kung Fu, do actual fighting and perform a Lion Dance. Tickets for China Night are $2 for students, $3 for non-students and are on sale now at the Fine Arts Center box office and on the Campus Center Concourse.
